People say Joan created her own career. In that, she was like "Mildred Pierce," who brought herself up out of poverty and despair. But she's unlike her screen character in her relations with her family. Away from the studio, wifehood and motherhood absorb her. During one period that seemed to stretch on for years but was actually weeks, the Terrys had no servants. Cook, nurse and maids departed, leaving Joan to cope with house and children.

"I was lucky my picture hadn't started," she laughed. "I had my hands full, cooking, cleaning, making beds, bathing babies and feeding them—and once the Diaper Service had a fire! But I got along, and actually enjoyed it. I've always known how to cook. I certainly didn't try to do the things Grace Moore does in a kitchen—no fancy salad dressings, no special soups or desserts—just simple, nourishing, plain food."

The day I called, the servant problem had been adjusted. Joan, in well-cut black velvet, red-brown hair curling softly about a face innocent of make-up except for a light-toned lipstick, busily knitted a slipover sweater of coral wool. Come to think of it, I've never seen Joan sit down without some sort of handwork.

"I'm so excited!" she cried, bouncing a little in her low chair. "Christina is playing in a recital Friday! It's her first recital and I've got stage fright. Phil says I'll be a 'nervous wretch' before it's over—but I wouldn't miss it for the world!"

Christina, with her smooth fair curls, heavy-lidded blue eyes, and poise unusual in so young a child, came in to play "Butterflies" for me. Joan, listening on tenterhooks, declared she had never played it so badly, but to me it was an impressive performance for five years old. Mother and daughter discussed "Middle C", "Tumbledown D" and something called "playing on the cracks", before Christina excused herself prettily to follow beaming brother Phillip, silver-blond two-year-old, from the room.

Joan, it appears, is experiencing childhood joys for the first time, as she joins the children's nursery.

"I never heard of things that are routine to other youngsters," she confided. "I began to work at nine, you know, and before that I had no bed-time stories, no nursery games. I'm getting a thrill out of discovering Hans Christian Andersen, Grimm's Fairy Books, Mother Goose—even the Mary Poppin stories have their charm. We read them together every night."

As soon as she can arrange it, Joan intends to share Christina's piano lessons. Albert Dekker shares those of his children. The piano teacher whose pupils compose most of Brentwood's youngest set has a unique method of instruction well worth any parent's while.

You can't stop Joan, once she's on that dear subject: her family. Christina is attending public school since gas rationing, and at five is in kindergarten though mentally much farther advanced.

"But that's right," contends Joan. "Ellin Berlin told me that she spent an unhappy childhood because she was always four years ahead of her age group. She was too young to find companions in her classes, and too far advanced to become acquainted with children of her own age. No matter how brilliant my children may be, they'll stick with their contemporaries."

Phil Terry is taking his little family to Carmel for a brief holiday and both young parents have plans for every hour of every day while there. For the first time, their children will walk in the woods, gather wild flowers, play with tame deer and chipmunk, and these delights will be shared by a joyfully-anticipating Joan.

Christina is learning to sew and knit. She makes things for her dolls, to whom she presents finished articles carefully wrapped. Joan has always loved handwork and wants her daughter to share her pleasure in knitting needles, crochet hooks, embroidery hoops and weaving looms.

The children returned from their early dinner to say goodnight to "Motherdearest" (all one word), ask eagerly about "the new tan book", greet their father, just in from his studio, and "make their manners" to me.

The Terrys are not ashamed to show affection, to sign off telephone calls with "I love you!"

"But love alone isn't enough to bring up children," commented Joan. "You must use discipline. That's where Mildred Pierce failed. She wanted to give her child everything, so she spoiled her, something I shall never do with my children. If Mildred had taken her daughter across her knee five or six times and given her a sound walloping, she might have turned out differently."

It was the difference between herself and her screen character that intrigued Joan. Mildred had no clothes problem when she was so poor she had to save up $2.98 before she dared invest it in a cotton dress. But when she prospered and owned a chain of restaurants, how about her wardrobe?

In not dissimilar circumstances, the young actress had taught herself how to dress effectively and in excellent taste before she could afford mink, chiffon velvet, gold lamé, and Adrian. But Mildred Pierce would never have had time nor inclination to learn about clothes. She'd be the kind of woman who buys what the salesgirl tells her "they" are wearing, and never looks twice at her mirrored reflection to see if it happens to become her.

Oh yes, it was absorbing to work out the character, down to her last mannerism and shadow of expression! But it all had to be worked out Joan's way.

"Helen Hayes was my first idol," she confessed. "I thought her gifted beyond compare; I still do. Melvyn Douglas used to say that Helen can walk on a stage, do something to make you laugh, as she enters, and before she has crossed to the other side, have you in tears. Helen and I are friends now; she always comes out here to spend at least a day with me when she's in town, and I think I know her every mood. Yet when I go to see her in the theater, playing something I know so well I could recite it backward, I walk in swearing to myself that this time I won't cry, and come out with three sopping handkerchiefs.

"I love and admire Helen, but I wouldn't want to copy her if I could. I was always a lone wolf when it came to doing things in my own fashion."

From upstairs came muffled voices of children wondering when "Mother-dearest" was coming to read to them. From the den telephone drifted Phil's baritone explaining that "Mrs. Terry takes care of that!" Pupchen, eleven-year-old dachshund, waddled to her chair demanding notice.

Joan may be a lone wolf. But is she lonely? Not now—not this Joan Crawford!

employee and father of Miss Garson, Marsha Hunt, Dan Duryea, and Marshall Thompson as Peck's brothers and sister, Gladys Cooper as his mother, Preston Foster as Miss Garson's silent admirer, and Jessica Tandy as the girl across the street.

CONFLICT (Warner Bros.) with Humphrey Bogart, Alexis Smith, Sydney Greenstreet and Rose Hobart in the principal roles for what's a psychological murder mystery.

Briefly, the situation is this: husband and wife quarrel on the eve of celebrating their fifth wedding anniversary. Accused of being in love with wife's sister (Alexis Smith), husband Bogey refuses to deny the charge.

There's an auto accident, husband suffers a leg injury. And it's for a psychologist to explain the strange twist o' mind which makes him pretend that he can't walk, long after the injury is healed and he's completely, good-as-ever recovered. The pretense fits neatly into his plot for killing his wife, however, and there's no having to guess who dunnit. The suspense accumulates from wondering if the crime will be discovered and how the murderer will be forced into confessing—which in the end, of course, he is.

GEORGE WHITE'S SCANDALS of 1945 (RKO)—For lots of laffs, gags, song and dance routines, the Scandals are in town again. And just like the circus, it has all the ingredients for a musical evening.

Among those on stage are Joan Davis, an old-time "Scandal" queen, who is still shooting from the side of her mouth all those quips and twangy homilies. Jack Haley is her "fella", and they plan to get married after Jack's spinster sister, Clarabelle (Margaret Hamilton) gets married first. The romantic leads are played by Martha Holliday, a beautiful gal who sings, acts—and can she dance!—opposite Phillip Terry (Joan Crawford's spouse), here a dance director. "Himself" is Gene Krupa who beats it out on his drum, and famed swing organist Ethel Smith helps with the chords. George Smith gets double credit as producer and actor, and Fritz Feld plays Montescu, a professional Romeo who, for a price, removes the spinster from the scene of action.

INCENDIARY BLONDE (Paramount) with Betty Hutton, Arturo de Cordova and Barry Fitzgerald offering three mighty good reasons why this musical biography rates so much more than expectedly must-seeworthy.

Fact is, it's on the whole delightful. Now noisy and full of laughs, now sentimental and moving—but that's the trick. You can't tell for a minute where the darned thing is going—even if you know a thing or three (and who doesn't know at least a little bit?) about the fabulous career of the late "Texas" Guinan, musical comedy star who, having always had a premonition that her life would be a short one, hurried to make it full and exciting.

One gets a feeling that the similarity between Betty Hutton and the role she plays is not strictly coincidental—and that she made the picture loving every minute of being the girl who won $50 for staying atop a bucking bronco for the required eight seconds, and running away to be the trick riding star in a traveling Wild West show, and cavorting nonetheless boisterously through the series of Broadway productions which made hers a "big name" in show business. The dramatic-romantic situations tend to slow up the pace every now and then, but always just before this comment develops into a criticism, the speed is regained and the whole thing goes racing merrily, madly along to being one of the best musical dramas you'll be seeing for a long time to come.

SON OF LASSIE (M-G-M) is worth seeing, if just for the magnificence of its backgrounds (filmed in Wyoming) and the beauty of its Grieg music. However, "Son of Lassie" has more to offer than that. There's Lassie, of course, and her son, Laddie. They're both trained by the Army as war dogs, but Laddie is incorrigible—flunks his tests. Comes the inevitable emergency, though, and Laddie shows his blue blood breeding.

Up to their usual acting standards are Peter Lawford, Nigel Bruce, June Lockhart, Donald Crisp, and Elsa Lanchester.

THAT'S THE SPIRIT (Universal) and Jack Oakie's it—the spirit, I mean. Before passing into the beyond, however, he marries June Vincent, who subsequently gives birth to a baby girl. The night Jack's child is born, Death beckons him in the form of a beautiful woman. Upon reaching his destination, he immediately lodges an objection with the complaint department, headed by Buster Keaton, and requests a permit to return to earth to clear himself with his wife. Eighteen years of red tape go by before Jack is granted permission. His daughter, played by Peggy Ryan, is a grown young lady now, whose stage career is about to be thwarted by her Victorian grandfather, Gene Lockhart. But Jack, whose presence can only be heard (he has squeaky shoes), has learned a few tricks in the other world which he employs to advantage in his daughter's behalf.

A MEDAL FOR BENNY (Paramount)—Once in a great while a small gem of a picture comes, unheralded, simple—but with a moral that unobtrusively makes it point. There is no set formula here, no Hollywood fanfare—just an unadorned story of paisanos in the small sleepy village of Pantera, on the coast of California.

Adapted from a story by John Steinbeck, and as directed by Irving Pichel, there is a fine coordination of realistic characterization and deft handling of mood. We never see Benny Martin—but his presence is felt by every member of the cast. He is the bad boy of the village who is run out of town, leaving his old father, Charley Martin (J. Carrol Naish) to get along as best he can. What little money the old man has is taken from him on various pretexts by one Joe Morales (Arturo de Cordova), an ingenious but lazy fellow. Joe loves Benny's girl, Lolita (Dorothy Lamour), who tries hard to be faithful to the absent Benny, but just as Joe extracts money from the unsuspecting father, he manages to win the heart of Benny's girl too.

You'll have to see the picture to find out what happens—and you should—because it has all the elements of an important and heart-warming film. Newcomer de Cordova will win you with his rascality, and Lamour, minus sarong and song, gives an honest and effective performance. However, the picture belongs to J. Carrol Naish for the humility and great dignity he gives to his role. Frank McHugh plays the bombastic city boy, Grant Mitchell is Mayor of Pantera, and Mikhail Rasumny is very fine indeed as Charley Martin's friend.

THE SILVER FLEET (PRC release)—The Scarlet Pimpernel rides again . . . only this time it is Jaap van Leyden (Ralph Richardson) who, working undercover as "Piet Hien," historical Dutch hero, helps loyal submarine workers in Nazi Holland outsmart Germans so that submarines can be taken to England. Googie Withers and Willem Akkerman take parts of wife and son of this new Dutch hero.

SCOTLAND YARD INVESTIGATES (Republic) All the shooting takes place in the National Art Gallery in London—for no less a painting than the famed Mona Lisa. Erich Von Stroheim (of the cropped head, but minus monocle) is once more stricken from a movie on accounta he's a bad one. The other "baddies" are Forrester Harvey, Victor Varconi and George Metaxa. Sir Aubrey Smith is his usual stately self as the director of the museum, and Stephanie Bachelor and Richard Fraser team up to solve the mysterious goings-on, and in the line of duty—romance comes a'poppin!

BLOOD ON THE SUN (William Cagney Production, released through UA)—A topical drama starring James Cagney and Sylvia Sidney. Based on a story by Garrett Fort; the time is 1928. General Tanaka is premier of Japan, and in league with the war lords and industrialists, he's plotting world conquest.

So states the article published by Nick Condon (James Cagney) in the Tokyo Chronicle, largest English-language paper in the Japanese capital. The article quotes the Tanaka Memorial, the paper addressed by the premier to the Emperor.

The plot which develops therefrom is full of intrigue, Imperial Secret Police and judo fights . . . with a message that's informative, in a past tense sort of way that sounds meaningful warnings, applied to the present and future "situation."

STORY OF G. I. JOE (Lester Cowan Production, released through UA)—Ernie Pyle, America's best known and best loved war correspondent, has joined other heroes in America's Valhalla, but his war stories of America's fighting men live on in this Lester Cowan Production—the story of America's foot soldiers, told in the Ernie Pyle way that became so dear to millions of American newspaper readers.

Returning from the European Theatre of Operations last year, Pyle was on hand as production advisor for this picture. Not seeking any sort of fanfare for himself, he insisted that the movie be a story of the men he loved so well—the G.I. Joes—and it is.

Selected by Pyle to play the part, Burgess Meredith turns in a laudable performance as "the little man who was there." Other members of the cast—you see, it's strictly G.I. from beginning to end—were given time off from Army duties. They are Jack Reilly, Billy Murphy, Tito Renaldo, Freddie Steele and William Self.

LADY ON A TRAIN (Universal) Produced by Felix Jackson (rumored to be Deanna Durbin's next husband), this is a murder mystery, giving La Durbin another straight role. Here she plays an amateur sleuth intent on proving that a man she saw murdered was murdered. An interesting newcomer by name of David Bruce, a mystery story writer, tries to elude the machinations of the wealthy Nicki Collins (Deanna Durbin) to get him involved in solving the whereabouts of the dead man's missing slippers. Among those chasing the slippers are George Coulouris, Allen Jenkins, Ralph Bellamy and Dan Duryea.

ESCAPE IN THE DESERT (Warner Bros.) is another in the series of war films tailored to suit the increasing demand for Helmut Dantine, who has become a symbol of the enemy to movie audiences. The scene is Death Valley and the action takes place when four escaped Nazi war prisoners—Helmut Dantine, Kurt Kreuger, Hans Schumm and Rudolph Anders — are apprehended and brought to justice by Philip Dorn, a Hollander who has felt the iron fist of Nazism. Jean Sullivan is the lovely "innocent" who plights her troth with Philip Dorn, and Alan Hale and Irene Manning inject a small touch of humor in the grimness of the desert and the action.

THE MAGNIFICENT ROGUE (Republic) is Joseph Schildkraut in the role of a dissolute ex-matinee idol. Mr. and Mrs. Pidgeon (Eugene Pallette and Billie Burke) are a couple of would-be rich selfish people who are waiting impatiently for their Uncle Henry to die so that they can inherit his five million dollars. He passes on to the beyond but his money is left to an unknown little girl (Ona Munson), who is sought out by the unscrupulous pair and kept in ignorance of her inheritance. Mr. M (Joseph Schildkraut) appears on the scene and delivers a tidy little lecture on the "virtues," so that what were once selfish little people get religion and confess their sin of omission to the gal. In a spirit of sisterly love the dough is divided among all the interested parties and happiness reigns soopreme! Among the hangers-on to the Pidgeon family are Raymond Walburn, Anne Gillis and Ruth Terry.

A THOUSAND AND ONE NIGHTS (Columbia) latest in the series of four and twenty fantasies baked in a try: 1) to get away from war themes, of which there have already been more than too many, and 2) to write "splendiferous" in big tall letters on the screen script where it says "scenery required."

With Cornel Wilde as Aladdin, Evelyn Keyes as his genie, Phil Silvers as the light-fingered Abdullah, Adele Jergens as the lovely princess, attended by her maid Novira (Dusty Anderson)—It's Old Bagdad with modern overtones; the romantic fair tale of a thousand years ago, with a shot of jive.

BACK TO BATAAN (RKO-Radio) with John Wayne, Anthony Quinn, Fely Franquelli, Beluah Bondi, Richard Loo, Philip Ann, Ducky Louie and J. Alex Havier.

As the title would suggest, it's the story of the Philippines. With the daring raid by the American Rangers on Cabanatuan serving as a prologue, the picture then depicts the plight of American officers and men left on Corregidor, in those tragic days of 1942, their uniting with Filipino guerrillas after the fall of Bataan and their combined struggle of resistance until the liberation of the Islands.

Many of the characters are based on actual persons, and the events portrayed are fact.

BLONDE FROM BROOKLYN (Columbia) introduces Bob Haymes with a new monicker. From now on it's to be Robert Stanton, to avoid trading on brother Dick's reputation. Song-and-Dance man Dixon Harper (Robert Stanton) meets up with Susan Parker (Lynn Merrick), a gal from juke box headquarters. They get together in an impromptu song routine at a night club, which leads them to believe they'd make a good team. To give the team tone Colonel Hubert Fransworth (Thurston Hall) suggests that Susan Parker adopt the name of Susanna Bellwithers, which belonged to an old Southern spinster, now believed dead. The holocaust comes in the form of an inheritance for Susanna Bellwithers. The plot is un-mangled when the rightful owner is found.

DIVORCE (Monogram) brings Kay Francis back to the screen in the dual role of star and co-producer. Not content with the rapid acquisition and disposition of four husbands, sophisticated Dianne Carter (Kay Francis) tries to snag and buy the love of a fifth—Bruce Cabot (his first picture since his release from the Army). Helen Mack, his wife, and mother of his two children, finds out too late that her husband has become the prey of the "other woman." An interlocutary decree is granted by Judge Driscoll (Jerome Cowan). The "divorce" is averted when the husband comes to his senses, and Kay Francis departs from the town—alone at last!

DON JUAN QUILLIGAN (20th Century-Fox)—Bill Bendix is in trouble—but plenty! He's the barge captain from Brooklyn, Patrick Michael Quilligan, and the moral of the story is that marriage is a fine institution—BUT. But being big-hearted is no excuse for proposing to TWO girls (Joan Blondell and Mary Treen), and marrying both of them isn't exactly a logical solution to the problem.

Advised by his pal Mac (Phil Silvers), Quilligan manages to get more and more hopelessly involved, in what's the darnedest mess you've ever seen. He invents a twin brother, writes a suicide note, signs up for the Navy only to discover that the Army wants him, too—none of which works out as expected, of course. Fact is, the picture ends with Quilligan right back where he started.

To People whowanttowrite but can't get started

Do you have that constant urge to write but the fear that a beginner hasn't a chance? Then listen to what the editor of Liberty, said on this subject:

> "There is more room for newcomers in the writing field today than ever before. Some of the greatest of writing men and women have passed from the scene in recent years. Who will take their places? Who will be the new Robert W. Chambers, Edgar Wallace, Rudyard Kipling? Fame, riches and the happiness of achievement await the new men and women of power."

Young Mother Delighted With Writing Success

"After taking the N.I.A. course, the first article submitted to a top-flight woman's magazine, resulted in its prompt acceptance. Despite my domestic duties, including the rearing of a small daughter, I have found time to write a dozen stories, all of which have been accepted. All potential writers should sign up with N.I.A."—Marcia Audrey Garden, 2302 West Main St., Richmond 20, Va.

Writing Aptitude Test—FREE!

THE Newspaper Institute of America offers a FREE Writing Aptitude Test. Its object is to discover new recruits for the army of men and women who add to their income by fiction and article writing. The Writing Aptitude Test is a simple but expert analysis of your latent ability, your powers of imagination, logic, etc. Not all applicants pass this test. Those who do are qualified to take the famous N. I. A. course based on the practical training given by big metropolitan dailies.

This is the New York City Copy Desk Method which teaches you to write by writing! You develop your individual style instead of trying to copy that of others.

You "cover" actual assignments such as metropolitan reporters get. Although you work at home, on your own time, you are constantly guided by experienced writers.

It is really fascinating work. Each week you see new progress. In a matter of months you can acquire the coveted "professional" touch. Then you're ready for market with greatly improved chances of making sales.

MY FAITH IS MY FORTUNE

say the least. But stick around and see what kind of a guy he is, before you make up your mind, and you won't be sorry.

In the first place, there are two things more important to Alda than this sudden good fortune: his family and his faith.

With a heritage of Latin geniality and charm, Bob also inherited from his Italian father a deep religious devotion and a love for family that is a delight to behold, particularly in this day and age. His family is continually appearing in his conversation—his mother says this, or his father advised that, his brother in the service did this, and his sister who recently married said that, and on and on, without end.

"From my mother I believe I got a sense of level-headedness and the desire to weigh things carefully before making decisions, and from my father a gregariousness and a yearning to travel, which probably accounts for my many show tours all over the country."

However, it speaks well for his parents as well as for Bob that he asks their advice and listens to it as attentively at thirty as he did at thirteen.

Of his own wife and son, Bob would speak all day. She was his high school sweetheart, and he lost his conservative job in an architect's office the day after they were married. It has been twelve years since then, and, according to Bob, twelve years of having the most courageously wonderful wife in the world.

"Imagine foisting a burlesque career upon an unsuspecting bride! Well, whatever I did seemed all right with Joan. As a matter of fact, she is the 'one-in-a-million' you read about."

At this point, Alda was good for another five hours on the subject of Joan, and only the mention of his nine-year-old son, Allie (short for Alphonse, Bob's real name) would change the subject.

"Allie goes everywhere with me, and has to pass judgment on all my important decisions," says Bob proudly. And he is very proud of the fact, too, that Allie has now realized two of his pet dreams—to have a pony and a ranch.

For years Allie had spoken of the pony he wanted. And about a year ago, while the boy was negotiating the purchase of a bicycle from a playmate, Bob stalled off the barter by asking Allie to wait until the next day before deciding.

"I'll show you why this afternoon," he explained.

As soon as Bob finished work at the studio, off they went to look at a ranch Joan and Bob were considering buying. Allie took one look at the place, heard his father mention something about 'good grazing land for a pony,' and next day flatly announced to the boy with the bike: "The deal's off!"

After the preview of the Gershwin picture, Bob was anxious to get Allie's reactions.

"What did you think of it, Allie?" he asked.

"All right, I guess."

"Is that all you have to say?"

At this point, Allie, who is very, very proud of his father-the-actor, and most impressed with his father-on-the-screen, stuck his hands in his pockets, tossed his head to one side and replied: "Whad d'you 'xpect me to do, fer goshsakes—cry cuz it's a sad picture?"

There is a special tenderness in the way Bob and Joan look at Allie these days; for the greatest trial in their lives, and the greatest test of their faith, occurred with Allie's recent grave illness.

It was a year ago last Fall, during the shooting of "Rhapsody in Blue," and the tension about the picture was off and everyone in the cast was feeling good. Bob was really warming up to his part, and they were preparing to shoot one of the Parisian sequences, full of life and gayety—when Bob was called to the 'phone. It was Joan, a very worried Joan.

"Allie is ill!"

Everything went black for them, for this was the one thing they always feared. Their Allie had always been filled with vitality and health, yet the fear that something might happen to him—it's a fear most parents can understand.

As the days went on, they learned the bitter truth. Their son had been stricken by the dreaded infantile paralysis.

Truly their faith, which had always been a guiding beacon for them, was put to the acid test, in the months that followed—seven long, uncertain months when it seemed so terribly wrong that a child so happy and so beloved should be stricken by such a terrible disease.

To both Bob and Joan it seemed like the workings of a miracle that little Allie was cured—so completely cured that by April there was hardly a trace of the illness left. (Actually, the "miracle" was "assisted" by Sister Kenny's famous treatment.) Today, he races about their new ranch at Sunland (about 35 miles from the Warner studio). Yes, and Allie has his pony—thanks to Abbott and Costello, who promised it to him as a reward for "getting better."

The Alda ranch is very near Dennis Morgan's place, except that there's a mountain separating the two properties. Add note on that item: it's the current Hollywood joke that each family is waiting for the other to dig a tunnel for purposes of neighborly communicating!

But the ranch has kept Bob busy while anxiously awaiting release of his first picture. (His next, "Cinderella Jones," is being held up to follow "Rhapsody".) Too, he has organized a troupe of stock players and lesser lights in the film world to play Hollywood Canteen and camp shows for the forces.

So "all's well with Alda", these days—and that's how it is that he came to Hollywood, given the chance of a lifetime, and was so thoroughly able to take everything in stride. Robert Alda learned the hard way—and as he sees things, his faith, not his success, is his fortune.

CASS DALEY

laughing only when her hand was firmly placed across the lower part of her face, a trick that only added to her ungainliness.

When she was twelve she went sledding one evening, turned over the sled and gashed her leg open just above the knee. When a frantic Mrs. Daley got Cass to the hospital, the young interne, alone on duty, blanched and said the leg would have to be removed. Cass' mother, however, refused to sign the legal releases essential to allow a physician to perform such an operation. Young Dr. Chanley, who, incidentally, is still practicing at the Frankfort hospital, went to work when gangrene set in, scrubbed the wound with alcohol, then excised the putrefied flesh. He fought for days to save that leg.

Cass, lying gloomily in bed and scowling upon the dreary winter landscape, promised herself that if she lost that leg and was excluded from the play of her friends, she would commit suicide. She became so interested in the violent and dramatic means by which she would end her life that she fell asleep. This caused her fever to recede. Gradually the leg began to heal. And there came a day when she stepped forth on her two good legs, without even limping. She carried a scar that to this day is frightening to see. For a long time she wouldn't go swimming for fear people would stare. She was cured of that by a man who will appear in this story admirably and prominently a little later. He told her to wear a bathing suit and to return the stares of the rude. Make them ashamed of themselves. So she did.

When she was 15, Cass decided that it was high time for her to help the family financially. The family was small—only her mother, step-father (the Daley parents had been divorced and each partner had remarried), and her older brother, but those were depression years and the family income was sparse.

Cass made arrangements to work for a candy company. Her job consisted of wrapping pieces of hard candy in cellophane, and her pay was gauged not by a count of the pieces actually wrapped, but by a system of weighing the cellophane wrappers issued. A stack of cellophane about two inches high was credited to each girl for the princely sum of 1c. (When that stack was gone, they had earned a penny!) The girls, in the immemorial manner of the exploited finding a way to lessen the exploitation, made frequent trips to the dressing room. Sometimes they stuffed the papers into their blouses, but this was an unreliable system because of their forgetfulness when they untied their tight aprons.

The girls reported at seven in the morning and worked until five, yet Cass was thrilled by the fact that she earned $6.00 each and every week. She took the check home to her mother with a small smile of pride.

As she was under 16, state law required Cass to continue her schooling one day each week. Usually she chose to attend on Friday because she was so tired by that time that any respite was heavenly. Most of the kids she had known in school were doing the same thing Cass was, so they were too exhausted to learn much during their single day of training—they merely fraternized.

Two months of the candy factory proved to be all Cass could stand. For one thing, she would get so hungry in mid-morning and mid-afternoon that she would gorge candy, then she would be ill most of the night. Clearly it was a mug's game.

Besides, she had heard about a girl friend who had a much better deal. The friend was working in a hosiery mill, so Cass abandoned sweetmeats to become a stocking trimmer and tier. The nomenclature of the mill fascinated her: there were leggers, footers, toppers, loopers, seamers, fitters, and dyers. The loopers were her heroines. They had extremely long fingernails and with a few deft movements they could fan the stitches of an entire stocking onto a new set of needles.

Pay at the hosiery mill was munificent in comparison to candy wages. Cass earned 1½c for each dozen pairs of hose she trimmed. So intense were her efforts that, during a usual day, she trimmed between 75 and 100 dozen pairs. When she had an accident and snipped a stocking or two, she saved them, took them home and soaked them in tea until they had reached a wearable hue. (Raw, undyed silk stockings range in color between nauseous apricot to lavender.)

Twelve dollars a week from stocking-trimming seemed such swank earnings that Cass remained there for eight months. Moreover, she was having fun. Her fellow employees had learned that Cass could mimic almost anyone she had ever heard or seen, with devastating accuracy. At luncheon time, the girls would munch sandwiches and beg Cass to put on a floorshow for them. One noon she was giving an hilarious imitation of their foreman, when that gentleman walked in.

So, the next week, Cass got a job in a knitting mill. She and another girl were stationed in the center of a room about fifty feet long. Empty spools of thread were carried on one moving belt, and filled spools were strung on the other. It was Cass' job to remove the empty spool with one hand, and to replace it with a fresh spool, using the other hand. The operation could only be accomplished if one adopted a primitive, jerking rhythm . . . jerk, spool . . . one two . . . jerk, spool . . . wait, wait . . . jerk, spool . . . one, two.

Within a week Cass was eating her meals according to this syncopation. When she couldn't stir a saucepan on the stove without wanting to replace it with the clock hanging near-by, she decided that she had better quit. Such things unstring one.

The following Saturday night, Cass, her date, and a group of their friends dropped into one of their hangouts, The Red Mill. It was an informal spot where members of the audience were invited to provide the floor show. Someone in Cass' party let it be known that they had a pretty smooth singer and impersonator in their group. Cass had coon-shouted at neighborhood parties since school days, but when she was asked to appear in public for the first time she almost went back to the candy factory.

She sang, of course, because there was no way to get out of it, but it was a gruesome ordeal. She tried to hold her head and her lips in such a fashion that her teeth would be invisible; she squirmed; she burned with embarrassment—but she sang. First, "Please Don't Talk About Me When I'm Gone," and then, "Roll On, Mississippi, Roll On."

In the audience that night was a New York insurance man who had always, like most New Yorkers, taken an interest in show business. After Cass sat down, this man strolled over to her table, introduced himself as Frank Kinsella, and gave Cass a fight talk. "A good performer is one who puts his audience at ease," he said. "You only make people uncomfortable when you try to hide your teeth. Walk out, show your teeth in a big grin, and get that part of your introduction over. Say to them, in effect, 'Folks, my teeth aren't so hot, but I don't care, so don't let it make a bit of difference to you.' Then give them your song routine, and you'll have them in the palm of your hand." He closed the talk by giving her his card and saying that if she ever came to New York, or if she ever needed a night club job, to get in touch with him. He said he'd see what he could do.

To this day Cass isn't sure why she saved Frank Kinsella's card that night. She intended to get another hosiery job on Monday, or go to work for another knitting mill. But she saved that card anyhow.

As she was leaving, the proprietor of the Red Mill asked Cass if she'd like to work for him. Not much of a job, he explained. All she would have to do would be as follows: operate the spotlights during the paid floor show; run the hat check stand; sell cigarettes; sing a comedy number each night. No salary, of course, but she could have the earnings from the checking and tobacco concessions, and she would be gaining "theatrical" experience.

Cass said that it sounded like a restful job, and took it.

During her employment at the Red Mill, Cass began to lay the basis for her comedy singing routines. Notice how the will-to-win comes into the story at this point. She perfected a song called "Lament Of A Laundry Girl"—very clean, of course, but sudsy as a barrel of beer. She still sings it. She also began to lay the foundation for her collection of Daley's Dozen, a series of medleys to which she is still adding. You've heard her sing many of these over the air. When Cass and the Red Mill manager clashed over the question: should a girl have to work 17 hours a day, Cass debated the negative side of the case, and quit.

But she knew then that show business was her metier. She got a job at a nearby Walkathon. (The walkathoners danced or walked for 45 minutes, then rested for 15 minutes; during the rest period various entertainers amused the foregathered audience.) Cass was originally hired for 3 days, but she proved to be so popular that she was invited to remain an additional 3 days. She knew then that she had "arrived," because she had been awarded her first holdover. Working on the same bill with Cass was a character of whom you may have heard. Chap named Red Skelton.

Her booking closed successfully at the Walkathon, Cass remembered the card of that nice Mr. Kinsella. For a week, Cass and her mother cooked up as exotic a group of dresses as ever flashed across the stage at the Bijou, then Cass packed her grip and went to New York.

MAX CHINKES, Photographer (Dept. H)

Just to make this story different, may we tell you that Mr. Kinsella had meant what he had said that night in Philly, and he was actually GLAD to see Cass! He booked her almost immediately into a small night-club in Tuckahoe. Before opening night he said, "Let's see what sort of clothing you brought with you? Your opening night outfit is pretty important, you know."

Cass gave him a style show. When she appeared in a black dress, resplendent with curled black ostrich feathers around the neck, sleeves and hem, Mr. Kinsella casually cut off the plumes. Cass managed to hide her horror. Then Frank provided a single, handsome clip to be worn on her shoulder.

"That's the stuff," he said. "You're the entertainer in this act, not your dress."

Cass was an instant success in Tuckahoe. She was booked for two years and Frank Kinsella became her manager. From that moment, the upward climb was easy. She worked at the Hollywood Restaurant and International Casino in New York, and toured with Ozzie Nelson's band. She worked in The Follies with Fanny Brice and Gypsy Rose Lee. She toured the British Isles in 1938, and then returned to New York to co-star with Joe Penner in "Yokel Boy."

She married Frank Kinsella in the midst of their joint success, and came to Hollywood—that Valhalla where good entertainers always go.

At present Cass and Frank live in a charming seven-room bungalow in North Hollywood. In their spare time, both work on Frank's coin and stamp collection. When that becomes wearing, they work side by side in the garden.

They are antique enthusiasts, and on one occasion they bought THREE old-fashioned pump organs. One they decided to keep, and the other two have been disposed of to covetous, admiring friends.

Cass is miserly about old curtains and old pictures. Even when curtains have reached the lattice stage, she has them cleaned, then puts them away, saying, "We might need them someday." Old pictures she saves in neat stacks in the closet. Contrariwise, she has her extravagances. She goes wild in the perfume department of any lush shop and buys like mad. She is also unreasonable about the purchase of handbags (currently owns about 30) and is continually troubled by advertisements describing others that appeal to her.

The nicest thing that ever happened to her? Well, last Christmas, for the first time in her adult life, Cass was living in a home of her own. She sent for her mother to join the Kinsella couple, and they had a roaring holiday. They actually had two huge trees, royally decorated. And they bought presents for everyone they knew, out of sheer delight to be able to spend without skinning the pennies.

To Cass, her success and her fame seem like parts of an iridescent waking dream. It doesn't seem quite real. Yet, hers is a story that proves that you, and you, and you can win your heart's desire.

Who Needs VITAMINS? Do You?

DO YOU SUFFER FROM THESE SYMPTOMS	YES	NO	WHEN DUE TO VITAMIN DEFICIENCY
Do you have frequent colds and other similar infections?			VITAMIN A aids growth and prevents certain infections.
Is your appetite poor? Do you tire easily?			VITAMIN B1 aids in building better appetite and good muscle tone.
Are your gums firm and healthy?			VITAMIN C shown to be of help in keeping gums and teeth healthy.
Are your bones healthy, sturdy and good?			VITAMIN D is necessary for good bones and teeth.
Are you depressed, weary, underweight, generally run-down?			VITAMIN G(B2) a distinct aid in general well being.

The "check-chart" will enable you to see for yourself just how you can use Vitamins for your own benefit. See how you rate—then try Pano-Plex All 8's every day for year 'round results. Pano-Plex is unlike ordinary single vitamins since it includes full or more than full minimum daily requirements of all 8 Basic Vitamins: A—B_1—B^2 (G)—B_6—C—D as well as Niacin Amide and 10 milligrams of CALCIUM PANTOTHENATE—important factors of the B complex family. To all these is added a daily capsule of Vitamin "E".

YEAR 'ROUND BUOYANT HEALTH

Often in Spring and Summer increased body activity burns up more energy and is apt to reduce resistance to colds and other infections. For vibrant health and buoyant energy you should have your daily minimum of vitamins as provided by Pano-Plex All 8's.

Is Something Missing from YOUR Vitamins?

Pano-Plex All 8's provide more than the daily minimum vitamin requirements as well as Vitamin "E" which has caused so much discussion among obstetricians, gynecologists and other medical men.

PICTURES IN PRODUCTION

writer and newspaper woman, is the Unit Woman on FOR BETTER, FOR WORSE, and received the assignment the day she returned to the studio after being married. The cast is having a lot of fun with their publicist.

ABBOTT AND COSTELLO IN HOLLYWOOD is an epidemic of madness with the usual two men, plus Frances Rafferty, Bob Stanton, Jean Porter, and Warner Anderson.

AT 20TH CENTURY-FOX:

THE DOLLY SISTERS, dancing in Technicolor, is distinguished by the work of Betty Grable, John Payne, June Haver, S. Z. Sakall, Reginald Gardiner, Frank Latimore, Trudy Marshall, Sig Ruman and Colette Lyons. Don't miss this one—as if you would!

DRAGONWYCK is the picturization of the novel about the fragile and innocent girl who finds herself married to a Simon Legree-Heathcliff. Gene Tierney, Glenn Langan, Vincent Price (wait until you see him as the French Ambassador in A ROYAL SCANDAL before you select a pin-up boy for 1945), Ann Revere, Walter Huston, Spring Byington, Jane Nigh and Ruth Ford.

KITTEN ON THE KEYS is a musical in Technical. Maureen O'Hara, Dick Haymes, Harry James, Reginald Gardiner, Stanley Prager and B. S. Pully guarantee a good picture. Did you know that Zev Confrey, who wrote "Kitten On The Keys," died recently?

AT UNITED ARTISTS:

YOUNG WIDOW is the picture that everyone said Ida Lupino wouldn't make, but it is now in its third week of production with Louis Hayward, Marie McDonald (The Body), Penny Singleton (too pretty to be tied to the Blondie pictures forever), Spring Byington, and Connie Gilchrist.

AT UNIVERSAL:

SECRET AGENT X-9 is a continuation of the serial in which Jan Wiley, Lloyd Bridges, Keye Luke, Samuel S. Hinds, and Edmund Cobb appear over the edge of a cliff, dangling from the window of a burning building, or being spurned by a ration board.

HEAR THAT TRUMPET TALK accentuates the reat beat with Noah Beery, Jr., Danny Morton, Lois Collier, John Litel, Steven Geray, and Coleman Hawkins. Yowsah.

UNCLE HARRY is a thriller with George Sanders (a full length story about him will soon appear in this magazine), Geraldine Fitzgerald, Ella Raines, Moyna McGill and Sarah Allgood.

AT WARNERS:

A STOLEN LIFE is now in its third month of production, with Bette Davis, Glenn Ford, Walter Brennan, Charlie Ruggles, and Dane Clark. Because Bette plays twins, the picture has to be photographed through the offices of a technical device known as a split-screen. A scene will be shot, showing Bette talking to her twin sister, seated in a chair. That portion of the picture recorded, Bette then takes the place of the double who has been in the chair, and the scene is shot a second time. This makes it necessary for six Bette Davis's to be on the set at all times. One real Bette Davis, and her usual standin; two doubles, one for each sister, and the standins for the doubles—total, six.

THE TIME, THE PLACE AND THE GIRL is a Technicolor musical with Dennis Morgan, Jack Carson (showing off pictures of his new daughter), Janis Paige, S. Z. Sakall, Carmen Cavallaro and Martha Vickers. Keep your eye on this Vickers—she's set for a Fabulous Future.

DANGER SIGNAL is Faye Emerson's first starring vehicle; photographed by James Wong How, and supplied with a cast consisting of Zachary Scott, Rosemary DeCamp Angela Greene and John Ridgely, this should be an excellent picture. It has progressed under the dark wing of tragedy—first Ann Blyth was gravely injured in a skiing accident, then Miss Emerson was called East by bereavement.

JANIE GETS MARRIED is the second in the Janie series, with Joan Leslie taking over the role created by Joyce Reynolds, but with Robert Hutton, Edward Arnold, Ann Harding, Robert Benchley, Hattie McDaniel, Ann Gillis, and Dick Erdman still carrying on. If the public interest in Janie continues, we may anticipate JANIE HAS A BABY, and eventually GRANDMOTHER JANIE. Remember the 4 Daughters series!

AT RKO:

THE BELLS OF ST. MARY'S, with that blue ribbon cast, Bing Crosby, Ingrid Bergman, Ruth Donnelly, Henry Travers, Joan Carroll and Dickie Tyler, is being directed by that Oscar-snagger, Leo McCarey. Although Ingrid Bergman appears as a nun in the picture and Bing as a priest, do not think that romance has been foiled: Miss Bergman brought her daughter, Pia, to visit the set one day, and Pia promptly fell in love with Dickie Tyler.

TOMORROW IS FOREVER is Claudette Colbert's current picture with Orson Welles, George Brent, Lucille Watson, and Joyce MacKenzie. Despite his work in this picture, Mr. Welles finds time to record 15 minutes of Bible reading each day. He has already recorded the Songs of Solomon, thinks waxing the entire work, with certain deletions, will require a full year.

RADIO STARS ON PARADE is a variety show with Wally Brown, Alan Carney (gruesome beyond description in a comedy sequence in which they appear as female impersonators), Frances Langford, Robert Clarke, and Don Wilson.

AT REPUBLIC:

THE WEB has just started with Nancy Kelly, John Loder (who will be a new father by the time you read this), Otto Kruger, Ruth Ford (remember her brilliant work as the first Mrs. Wilson?), J. Farrell MacDonald, and Marjorie Manners. We'll give you further details on this picture next month.

CALIFORNIA GOLD RUSH is a bang-banger with Wild Bill Elliott, Bobby Blake, and Alice Fleming wading knee deep through gun smoke.

Tired Kidneys Often Bring Sleepless Nights

Doctors say your kidneys contain 15 miles of tiny tubes or filters which help to purify the blood and keep you healthy. When they get tired and don't work right in the daytime, many people have to get up nights. Frequent or scanty passages with smarting and burning sometimes shows there is something wrong with your kidneys or bladder. Don't neglect this condition and lose valuable, restful sleep.

When disorder of kidney function permits poisonous matter to remain in your blood, it may also cause nagging backache, rheumatic pains, leg pains, loss of pep and energy, swelling, puffiness under the eyes, headaches and dizziness.

Don't wait! Ask your druggist for Doan's Pills, used successfully by millions for over 40 years. They give happy relief and will help the 15 miles of kidney tubes flush out poisonous waste from your blood. Get Doan's Pills.

Don't Be Flat!

INSIDE HOLLYWOOD

ing to shoot to KILL!"

The nurse came through the house turning on lights. "What on earth's wrong?" she panted. Gene told her.

So the nurse, entirely self-reliant, went outside to check up. A tree branch had been partly severed by the night's high wind and was dragging across the window with every gust.

But Gene employed an armed night watchman the following day so that she could sleep without disturbance by any branch of wrongdoers.

OUT OF CAST IN CAST:

The last snow of the season lay thick on the heights above San Bernardino, so Ann Blyth, her houseguest Joan McCarthy of Long Island, and a group of friends decided to drive to Snow Valley for some end-of-winter tobogganing. As they shot down a steep, rounding incline their toboggan struck a boulder (rolled onto the course during a period of melting) and tossed its riders. The other two passengers weren't injured, but Ann was rushed to San Bernardino where Dr. Roger Vargas diagnosed a compressed fracture of the back. She won't be able to work until sometime in August, possibly September.

PRESERVED IN OIL

One of the nicest recent parties was that given by Captain Bob Longenecker and his lovely wife, Ruth Hussey, in honor of Tino Costa, celebrated portrait painter. In discussing his subject, Senor Costa observed, "Mrs. Longenecker is that rarest of creatures—a quiet woman." He painted Ruth wearing a burgundy blouse with peplum over a full white evening skirt, and her pose excited a controversy as soon as the picture was unveiled; everyone wanted to know whether she was just leaving the room, or just entering. Senor Costa said he meant her to appear to have entered the room, having softly closed the door, and to be poised before moving forward to greet guests.

Among the guests was Laraine Day, wearing a smart turquoise wool coat over a turquoise crepe dress, and a pair of red leather earrings, acquired in New York.

Gail Patrick wore a simple black frock and a huge black picture hat with a sheer veil hanging down a few inches all the way around, like an awning on a hot day.

Loretta Young and her husband, Colonel Tom Lewis, arrived late, but looking wonderful—both of them. Loretta's eyes remain the most dramatic in town, and her personality is one of the friendliest.

Charles Coburn was holding court in the cozy den; we would have liked to listen for hours to his reminiscences, but a reporter's life demands circulating above all else.

THE LITTLE WOMAN:

Although Allan Jones hasn't made a picture for some time, his fans remain unchangingly loyal; while on personal appearance tour with his pretty wife, Irene Hervey, Allan has become a swoonsation. As they moved from city to city, it became evident that Sinatra will have to be a busy boy in order to keep up with the Jones.

At a matinee one afternoon, Mr. Jones noticed one particularly eager fan in the front row. She applauded louder than anyone, she shrieked with impressive fervor. Allan glanced at this charming chick from time to time as he sang, finding something faintly reminiscent in her loveliness—those soft eyes, those dimples. Then he recognized her. It was Mrs. Jones, done up in sloppy Joe, bobby sox, sneakers, pleated skirt, and a brunette wig.

DARK ANGEL:

When John Garfield's son, David, was born, John told friends jubilantly, "Now I have just about everything a man could desire: a wonderful wife, a beautiful and intelligent daughter, and now a son." This statement indicated that John considered his family to be of cardinal importance in his life, but he could have added that he had thousands of friends and a career that will undoubtedly continue successfully as long as he wishes.

Death is never easy to understand, but it is a horrifying mystery when it reaches out to touch a little girl; it is like lightning striking a kitten—the crash of a horrible force upon a pretty and innocent object. Katharine Garfield was six, pretty, full of laughter, the darling of her father's heart.

> Ere sin could blight or sorrow fade,
> Death came with friendly care:
> The opening bud to Heaven convey'd,
> And bade it blossom there.

FUTURES:

Lynn Bari and Sid Luft have announced the debut of a starlet for late August or Sept.

People are saying that Cesar Romero and Virginia Bruce will marry. It has never been a secret from Cesar's friends that he was totally taken by her charm.

NUN SUCH:

As you undoubtedly know, the hit show currently running in New York is "Harvey", the fable of a white rabbit somewhat over six feet tall of amiable disposition.

As you also know, Ingrid Bergman, Bing Crosby and Leo McCarey are currently ingrossed in the manufacture of a story called "Bells Of St. Mary's," which will also be a hit. Ingrid plays the part of a nun.

So, for Easter, she gave Leo McCarey a huge white rabbit, dressed in nun's robes and bearing a card that read, "Greetings of the season from Sister Harvey."

IN DUPLICATE:

While being fitted for some of the gowns she wears in "The Dolly Sisters", June Haver was telling the tragic-comic story of her first formal. It was a dream frock, full of swish and suavity; the material was blue-dotted Swiss, the skirt was yards and yards wide, and the sleeves were puffed. June, dressed to the eyebrows, was to sing with the school band. Just before her moment of triumph, she spotted another girl at the party, dressed in an exact duplicate of the Haver finery. Desolated, she rushed to the nearest telephone and conferred, tearfully, with mama.

"Don't be so upset," said Mrs. Haver calmly. "Simply sing so well that people will notice your voice and your showmanship instead of your dress."

June sang as she had never sung before, and it must have had some result because not one person commented upon her involuntary twinship.

LATIN FROM MANHATTAN

he has "done best"—and not being able to do his best annoys him.

Actually, he doesn't want to be known as a "great lover," rules or no rules.

"I want to be the good actor, and the popular actor," he said. "You know, any foreign actor going to Hollywood starts out with two strikes against him. American men do not like foreign actors. Maybe it goes back to the Valentino tradition, when the great Rudy swept his leading ladies into his arms, and the women in the audience swooned while the men gnashed their teeth. I will bet you that Charles Boyer won for himself many American men fans when he played a murderer in 'Gaslight.' I would like to play a murderer myself."

Arturo doesn't look any more like a murderer than does Boyer—or Fred MacMurray — although both actors have played such parts. He has a neat little white bungalow in the Valley, completely surrounded by dogs, cats and chickens. Every few minutes he excuses himself from his guests to run outside to see how his animals are getting along.

He lives with his close friend and coach, John Mari, but he associates with Americans whenever possible.

"It is the accent I must lose," he explains. "Then the American men will accept me. As long as I talk like a Latin lover I will not be acceptable. I must learn American. To do that I must be with American people."

Despite the fact that he does hail from Manhattan, Arturo didn't spend much time there. Born in Yucatan, Mexico, he was brought to this country when he was five, and attended public school in New York for some seven years.

Later his father, who was a chicle exporter, moved to the Argentine and became interested in the dairy business.

"He sent me to Switzerland to learn about dairies," says Arturo, "but I took up soccer and played all over Europe for several years. When I returned to Buenos Aires I became a swimmer and a boxer.

"It is funny about that swimming. I was quite good. I was on a team which won many championships. But when I came to Hollywood I lived in the Peyton Hall, which has a pool, and which is owned by Miss Claudette Colbert—and I never used the pool. So when the studio wanted some swimming pictures of me, and I had moved out, I had to go to my agent to borrow his apartment. Now that I have no pool, I want to swim."

De Cordova became an actor for 750 pesos, a suit of clothes and some publicity.

"What a silly deal," he explains, "In South America I write sports for the United Press. They want to send me to Chile as a bureau head, but I am in love with a beautiful dancer, so I refuse to go. So they want to send me to Uruguay, but I still refuse. Finally they say I might be good on the South American desk in New York City. By this time the beautiful dancer is going to marry a millionaire, which I am not, so I accept.

"On my way, I stop off at Merida, Yucatan, my birthplace. They have a new radio station and ask me to handle the sports broadcasts. So I do. Then Mexico City wants me to broadcast. So I do. Then a friend of mine asks me to work in a picture for him. It is called 'Jealousy.'

"I think this is very funny. In Mexico, then, the radio broadcasters are the important people. Not the movie actors. But I figure that maybe some people will see the picture and then will listen to my broadcasts. So I accept—for the 750 pesos, plus the suit I get to wear in the picture.

"I am doing pretty good, so I do not need the 750 pesos, and I have five suits in my closet and the one I get in the picture is not too good, but who cares. It is the publicity I want.

"Well," says Arturo, "it is a very bad picture. I am even worse. But six months later they talk me into doing another one, so from then on I am an actor. I spend the 750 pesos, but I never wear the suit."

Arturo doesn't mention it, but he started his screen career in 1935. By 1940 three of his films had won Mexico's counterpart of our Academy Award. R.K.O. brought him to Hollywood for some Spanish language films; Paramount bought up his contract to use him in "For Whom the Bell Tolls," and has kept him hard at work since in such films as "Frenchman's Creek" (which cost almost $4,000,000 to produce), "Incendiary Blonde" and "A Medal for Benny."

Volatile and voluble, de Cordova finds himself slightly amazed at his own love for the quiet life.

"All the time up to now I have traveled much," he explains. "I like to go from place to place, but I find my little ranchita the finest thing I have ever had. I have it, the Victory Garden—which is great fun—and my chicken, cats and dogs. I have my friend Mari, who coaches me.

"There only is one fly in all this milk and honey. I do not like the 'great lover' business. Either they let me do it—as we do in Mexico—or they cut it out.

"I do not understand," says Arturo, "why there is the difference in the rules."

P.S.—His ham and eggs are wonderful!

THE END.

AMAZING INTRODUCTORY OFFER...

Do You Want LONGER HAIR?

Then... TRY THIS PROVEN EASY SYSTEM ON YOUR HAIR

Helps Prevent Brittle Ends from Breaking Off

HERE IS THRILLING NEW HOPE if you want your dry, lusterless, unruly, brittle and breaking off hair more lovely . . . longer. Yes, hair may get longer—the scalp and hair condition being otherwise normal—if the breaking-off process of dry, brittle ends can be retarded. That's why The Juelene SYSTEM is such a natural way to help your hair gain its normal beauty. You see, this wonderful SYSTEM helps relieve hair dryness that is caused by lack of natural oils. It helps soften harsh, brittle ends, thus giving your hair a chance to get longer once the breaking-off and the splitting ends have been curbed. So if your hair is dry, rough and hard to keep neat, try the easy Juelene SYSTEM for just 7 days. No other Shampoo...

only Drene with Hair Conditioning action leaves your hair so lustrous yet so easy to manage!

Make a Date with Glamour! Right away . . . don't put it off . . . shampoo your hair the new glamour way! Get the combination of beauty benefits found only in Drene Shampoo with Hair Conditioning action. ✓ Extra lustre . . . up to 33% more sheen than with any kind of soap or soap shampoo! Because all soaps leave a film on hair. This soap film dulls lustre, robs hair of glamour! Drene is different! It leaves no dulling film, brings out all the lovely gleam. ✓ Such manageable hair . . . easy to comb into smooth, shining neatness, right after shampooing . . . because the new improved Drene has a wonderful hair conditioning action. ✓ Complete removal of unsightly dandruff, the very first time you use it. So insist on Drene Shampoo with Hair Conditioning action, or ask your beauty shop to use it!

ANOTHER STUNNING TOPKNOT hair-do . . . with that sleek, smooth look which marks all smart Parisian hair-dos. The hair is brought up to the true crown of head and the ends rolled into one big, fanned-out puff. For shining smoothness, use Drene with Hair Conditioning action. No other shampoo can make your hair look so lovely!

Here's BETTINA BOLEGARD . . . glamorous New York fashion model, Cover Girl and "Drene Girl" . . . interpreting for you

Hair-do news from Paris

To make sure you always get the last wor hair-do news—from Paris as well as New York- Drene now has its own Paris correspond Whenever there's big hair-do news from anywhere, Drene will see that you get it!

THE SMARTEST Parisian hair-dos feature a topknot arrangement of some sort. Here all hair is brushed sleekly up and over to one side, held firmly with rubber band, then ends arranged in three big shining puffs, tilted to one side. (The way you'd tilt a hat!) The shining smoothness is due to Drene with Hair Conditioning action. No other shampoo leaves hair so lustrous, yet so easy to manage!

THE YOUNGER GENERATION of smart Parisians wear back hair down, with a long, long look! But the front hair is pulled up sleekly off the face. Here ends of front hair form topknot puffs. Remember that no shampoo except Drene with Hair Conditioning action leaves hair so lustrous yet so easy to manage!

You Too Can Have a BABY!

by Abner I. Weisman

Only those who actually suffer from a barren marriage, can really understand the frustration and heartaches. (In certain extreme cases, the marriage itself may be wrecked by this cause.) In "YOU, TOO CAN HAVE A BABY" Dr. Abner I. Weisman gives a detailed explanation of the factors that may prevent normal reproductive functioning; he offers simple and sound advice which oftentimes is all that is needed; also describes the methods medical science uses today to remove many of the obstacles to successful conception and childbirth. Other than in cases of actual physical incapability, this book should prove helpful. Also explains the anatomy and physiology of reproduction, how to test pregnancy, what constitutes sterility, how to test sterility of male and female, plan for parenthood, etc. Often barrenness is due to minor conditions which can easily be cleared away. Having a baby is truly life's greatest thrill.

IT'S FUN TO BE FIT

An Illustrated Book of Common Sense and Exercises by Olga

Just reading this book will appear to make you younger looking, stronger feeling and better proportioned. Her method is to make exercise a part of one's daily living, to be performed while working, resting, playing or talking.

Olga promises you that you can—do away with double chins, a flaring fanny, rolls of fat around the top of your girdle, a bulging mid-section and other padded parts . . .

If you are thin, you can put on muscle and weight and build up stamina. The advice and exercises are honestly beneficial and can be done by the laziest, stiffest, most unwilling people. And besides, Olga's witty drawings (over 100) show clearly how to follow her methods. INVENTORY CLEARANCE.

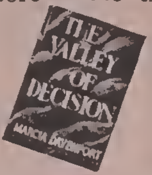
The greatest star of the screen!



When Marcia Davenport wrote her famous best-seller, "The Valley of Decision", she created a young Irish beauty named Mary Rafferty.

★ ★ ★ ★

Mary had quite a character. When she loved, she loved all the way.

★ ★ ★ ★

She wouldn't let the world deny her the right to romance with the son of a steel king—just because she came from the wrong side of the tracks!

★ ★ ★ ★

M-G-M, like four million people who read the book, was intrigued with that red-haired beauty.

★ ★ ★ ★

Greer Garson was intrigued when M-G-M offered her the part.

★ ★ ★ ★

And you'll be more than intrigued when you see Greer Garson as Mary Rafferty, and Gregory Peck, in M-G-M's tumultuous love story, "The Valley of Decision".

★ ★ ★ ★

You'll like it even better than "Mrs. Miniver" and "Mrs. Parkington".

Greer and Gregory are the most exciting lovers on the screen.

★ ★ ★ ★

He's a lot of man, and one fine actor.

★ ★ ★ ★

You'll go for Donald Crisp and Lionel Barrymore—stalwart men.

★ ★ ★ ★

You'll go for Preston Foster, Marsha Hunt, Gladys Cooper, Reginald Owen, Dan Duryea, Jessica Tandy, Barbara Everest, Marshall Thompson, and the host of other supporting players.

★ ★ ★ ★

You'll remember lines from the screen play by John Meehan and Sonya Levien.

★ ★ ★ ★

You'll want to shake hands with Tay Garnett, the director, and Edwin H. Knopf, the producer.

★ ★ ★ ★

You'll want to write us and thank us for telling you about it.

★ ★ ★ ★

You'll want to see "The Valley of Decision" several times.

★ ★ ★ ★

Why don't you? We'll meet you there.

INSIDE HOLLYWOOD

By FREDDA DUDLEY

BIG MAN:

If you know your Hollywood, you are aware of the local malady sometimes described as "star psychosis." It is a state in which the principal is inclined to prefer a royal distance between himself and others; in which much waiting on is expected, and in which fraternalism is an unknown state.

A few days ago a big man was seated alone at the Director's Table in the Metro Commissary. He waited for some time for one of the meggers to appear, but when it became apparent that most sets were delayed from their usual luncheon break, he yelled over to the publicity table, "Say, any objection if I join you guys?"

The guys said, gosh, to come on over. Instead of sending for a bus boy to help him move, the big boy collected napkin, silverware, water glass, luncheon plate balanced on coffee cup, and managed to get himself installed at the more congenial table without mishap.

This was a trifling incident but it explains why, when men say, "He's really a big man," they have reference not only to Clark Gable's great frame, but to his splendid spirit as well. He's a star, but he'll never have staritis.

THRILL:

At the corner of La Cienega Avenue and Beverly Boulevard in Los Angeles there is a small carnival consisting of a miniature train, some baseball booths, a merry-go-round and a ferris wheel.

One afternoon not long ago a car drew up to the curb; two boys, one 12 and one 11, rampaged out of the back seat and darted to the merry-go-round ticket window while their grandparents smiled indulgently from the automobile. Twenty minutes later the grandmother said to her husband, "I've been watching the merry-go-round, and I don't see the boys. Where could they have gone?"

The grandfather climbed out and was instantly greeted by triumphant shouts. Looking upward, he descried a pair of slender occupants rocking violently in the topmost seat of the ferris wheel.

"You sit still!" he shouted. "Don't rock like that. Oh—if your dad knew where you were!"

The two boys got off eventually, after heeding intense persuasion, were herded into the car, and taken on a sedate trip to visit relatives—but Gary and Denny Crosby had enjoyed to the fullest their unauthorized thrill.

SUCCOTASH:

Alight with patriotism and sun-burned muscles, Dana Andrews busied himself in the wide, level garden spot behind his house. In careful rows he planted beans, corn, beets, lettuce, radishes and onions. For two weeks, from dawn to dusk, he bent an eager back over his farming, taking infinite pains with seedlings, seeds, glass jars, and neat markers on sticks. He paused only long enough to straighten and gaze across the canyon that descends from his back yard. Ah, the joys of being close to the land.

One morning Mrs. Andrews said, "Dana, it seems to me that every time I awakened during the night, I could hear water running. Do you suppose . . ."

Dana sprinted to the garden, or more properly, to the ex-garden. For about 30 hours a flood had been pouring over the vegetables, washing them and tons of top soil into the gulley far below. Seems that Kathy, Dana's 2½-year-old daughter, had sought to assist her dad's patriotic effort by attending to the irrigating.

P.S. After this she will leave the hose alone.

The Ladd (with agent-wife Sue Carol) hits a coke bottle at H'lyw'd Ice Capades opening.

FUN AF-FORD-ED

It is a custom for star birthdays to be celebrated with a cake and ice cream party on the set, so when Glenn Ford's birth anniversary was imminent, Bette Davis made arrangements for the entire cast and crew of "A Stolen Life" to help Glenn accentuate the positive.

However, when the day arrived, Bette was at home with a case of laryngitis induced by the fog scenes in the picture. The second day she still wasn't well enough to attend. By that time the cake was still in delicious condition, but a few more days would have invited mummification, so Glenn and Eleanor bundled up their pastry and drove to the Hollywood Canteen where they cut the cake and asked the several hundred service men present to help celebrate. You could have heard the rendition of "Happy Birthday" as far north as Santa Barbara.

By the time you read this, the chances are excellent that Bette Davis will either be in Europe, or will be on her way there. She has signed with the U. S. O. Hollywood Victory Committee to enact, in an overseas company, the Ann Harding-Katherine Hepburn role in that timeless play "Holiday." News of this type is certainly going to be welcome to the men stuck in the Army of Occupation—they're going to get a Holiday, one way or another.

THE FUTURE:

The real estate agent showed his clients, a man and a girl, through one of the few available houses in Southern California. He extolled the view, he recommended the floor plan, he stressed the excellence of the hardwood floors, steel sash, and multiplicity of closets.

At length the girl said thoughtfully, "It's a lovely house, really—but there's a catch. There isn't one room that could be converted into a nursery in the future, should a nursery become an essential in our home."

So they decided not to buy the house. Which is to say that Humphrey Bogart and Lauren Bacall were still seeking home property as this flash went to press.

BEHIND THE BUSH:

A huge man descended from a taxi in a tearing hurry. His secretary-valet, amid a load of luggage, also cataracted out of the conveyance and looked around for help. Nearby there were two able seamen lounging. "Hey," yelled the big man, "how about some help? I'm about to miss a train!"

The seamen collected themselves, and two suitcases each, and trotted after the valet, also laden with bags. Altogether they made a most impressive cavalcade as they poured down the aisles of the union station: first strode the big man, impressive with his flowing hair, his heavy beard, his magnificent shoulders, his coat streaming out behind his speeding bulk. After him, like a comet's trail, followed the valet and the impressed members of Uncle Sam's Navy.

They got through the barrier, they scorched down the long, resounding tunnel. As the big man leaped on the rear steps of his car, he thrust a five-dollar bill into the hand of each amateur assistant and shouted his intense gratitude.

As the train gathered speed, one sailor said to the other, "Quite a guy. Who d'ya s'pose was hiding behind that chin spinach?"

"Orson Welles, of course," beamed the second, pocketing his five spot. "Gosh—what a town this is."

TERPSICHORUS:

Seldom is more than one rehearsal room in Metro's dancing row occupied at any given time, but recently all three were sending back echoes from thumping feet. In No. 1, June Allyson was learning a jitterbug routine for her role in "For Better For Worse." She was using a playback (i.e., recorded music to be used in the picture.)

In No. 2, Kathryn Grayson and Jimmie Durante were perfecting a sample of whatever was being danced in The Bowery in 1903. Their music was furnished by a piano player who arrived one morning sporting a huge handlebar mustache as an atmospheric prop.

In No. 3, Van Johnson was laboriously learning a pitchman's soft shoe routine for "Early To Wed."

Mr. Gable, hearing of all this fast footwork, shuddered, "Let no one mention 'Idiot's Delight' at this point," he cautioned.

OF COURSE YOU CAN...

GO IN SWIMMING...

WITH TAMPAX!

WHY ENVY OTHERS at that certain time of the month? You can wear Tampax in the water on sanitary-protection days and no one will be the wiser! This summer at any popular beach, you are almost sure to find many women who go in swimming on "those days"—wearing Tampax without any hesitation whatever.... There is nothing about Tampax in the slightest degree embarrassing (or offending) under bathing suits wet or dry.

WORN INTERNALLY, Tampax discards belts, pins, outside pads—everything that can possibly "show." Perfected by a doctor, Tampax is made of highly absorbent cotton compressed in modern applicators for dainty insertion. The hands need never touch the Tampax. No odor forms. There is no chafing with Tampax. Changing is quick and disposal easy.

COMES IN 3 SIZES (Regular, Super, Junior). Sold at drug stores and notion counters in every part of the country—because millions of women are now using this newer type of monthly sanitary protection. A whole month's supply will go into your purse. The Economy Box holds four months' supply (average). Tampax Incorporated, Palmer, Mass.

Movieland's New Picture Guide

A BELL FOR ADANO (20th Century-Fox) comes to the screen with much advance notice. First, written as a novel by John Hersey, 'twas universally acclaimed as one of the finest stories to come out of World War II. Adapted for the stage, it became "a Broadway hit."

So it was logical—yes, inevitable—that the dramatic story of life in a war-torn country (namely, Italy; and more specifically, an occupied town in Sicily) should be told via still another medium—the movies.

And it's a good movie—for the homely philosophy so liberally sprinkled through; for the fine characterizations drawn by John Hodiak (as Major Joppolo), by Gene Tierney (as Tina, the young Sicilian girl who befriended the American officer), and by William Bendix, the officer's sympathetic aide; for the ever-appealing thought that spiritual needs transcend the physical.

The spiritual need of Adano happens to be a bell, confiscated by the Fascists. To the people of Adano, the bell had symbolized their unity—for they arose by it, they ate by it, they went to church by it. Assigned to administer to the physical needs of these people, it was Major Joppolo's contention that to return their bell was as important as providing them with food and water. His was a determined, protocol-defying fight to establish the democratic principal that people are more important than rules.

If there are faults to be found with the picture, they should not be termed comparative faults, having little or nothing to do with the success or failure of filming the story. They are the criticisms inherited from the story itself—that it insults the intelligence of the Italian people, that it's too often a patronizing portrayal. And soundly based or not—and some will dismiss the criticisms as being irrelevant—these objections have been made, and the picture was screened with no noticeable attempt to overcome them.

UNCLE HARRY (Universal) from the stage play made famous by the team of Joseph Schildkraut and Eva LeGallienne comes a screen version to chill and thrill you by the superlative performances of George Sanders and Geraldine Fitzgerald in the same roles.

The plot remains the same. "Uncle" Harry Quincy (George Sanders) is a devoted brother to his two old maid sisters, Lettie (Geraldine Fitzgerald) and Hester (Moyna McGill). He indulges their every whim and is ruled by their iron hands. He loves and is loved by Deborah (Ella Raines), but is thwarted in his efforts to marry her by the selfish hold his sisters have on him. Deborah marries someone else and "Uncle" Harry plots the demise of the responsible sister. There is a wonderful surprise ending, and you will wait with bated breath as the noose is tightened around the throat of an innocent person.

MY REPUTATION (Warner Bros.)—gives Barbara Stanwyck a change of pace from "Double Indemnity." A sympathetic role with beautiful clothes to wear are things any star would want—if she could get 'em. If you were a young widow with two sons (Scotty Beckett and Bobby Cooper) and you had a mother (Lucile Watson), who insisted on meddling in your life, and you had ceased to be an individual—wouldn't you rebel? Jessica Drummond (Barbara Stanwyck) does, and falls in love with army engineer George Brent (giving here his usual polished performance). It's a super for the sophisticates who like romance in evening clothes. With Eve Arden, Warner Anderson, John Ridgely and Jerome Cowan.

OUT OF THIS WORLD (Paramount)—It's Eddie Bracken's picture, but the guiding hand of Preston Sturges ("Miracle of Morgan's Creek" and "Hail the Conquering Hero") is sorely missed. Compensating features, however, are Diana Lynn, Veronica Lake, Cass Daley, Parkyakarkus and the voice of Bing Crosby out of the mouth of Bracken.

It's a wacky plot, being a take-off on the Frank Sinatra-bobby sox craze. Eddie is a messenger boy who suddenly finds himself the swoon king of the hep chicks, and consequently in the big dough. But there's a catch . . . a little bit of double-dealing and a slight mathematical error result in the sale of 125% of his contract to the town-folk. No matter how much Eddie makes, he's still

AT PARAMOUNT:

THE BLUE DAHLIA, murder mystery chiller, is now in its second month. With Alan Ladd, Veronica Lake, William Bendix, Howard da Silva, and Doris Dowling.

THE STORK CLUB should be a rendezvous for all of yous. The picture deals with the experiences of a hat-check girl (Betty Hutton) who rescues a weary old millionaire (Barry Fitzgerald) from drowning. However, Betty doesn't know that Barry is a millionaire; she thinks he is a destitute old man, so befriends him and gets him a job as bus boy in The Stork Club. Meanwhile, Barry arranges to make life easier for Betty; so through intermediaries, arranges for her to take a very lavish apartment. Promptly, she insists that Barry share her good fortune and move in with her. At which point, her boy friend comes back from overseas . . . and I won't spoil it for you by telling you more.

AT WARNERS':

A STOLEN LIFE is in its third month, with Bette Davis in the dual role of twin sisters, both in love with Glenn Ford. Walter Brennan, Charlie Ruggles and Dane Clark assist with the dramaturgy.

THE TIME, THE PLACE AND THE GIRL is a Technicolor musical with Dennis Morgan, Jack Carson, Janis Paige, S. Z. Sakall, Carmen Cavallaro and orchestra, Donald Woods, and one of the brightest of rising meteors, Martha Vickers.

DANGER SIGNAL is in its second month, with Faye Emerson, Zachary Scott, Rosemary DeCamp, Bruce Bennett, Mona Freeman (borrowed from Paramount, who previously loaned her to Columbia for her sensitive bit in "Together Again"), and John Ridgely.

JANIE GETS MARRIED—'nuff said—Joan Leslie, Robert Hutton, Edward Arnold, beautiful Ann Harding, Robert Benchley, Hattie McDaniel, Ann Gillis and Dick Erdman.

THE TWO MRS. CARROLLS is the picture about one man's woman trouble that will be interrupted long enough for H. Bogart to marry Lauren Bacall. With Mr. Bogart in this timely picture are Barbara Stanwyck, Alexis Smith, Nigel Bruce, and Ann Carter.

AT UNITED ARTISTS:

YOUNG WIDOW, with Jane Russell (her new pin-up pictures are out of this world), Louis Hayward, Faith Dorn, Penny Singleton, Connie Gilchrist, Cora Witherspoon, Louise Beaver and Peter Garey.

DUEL IN THE SUN is the Technicolor film version of Niven Busch's splendid novel, with Jennifer Jones, Joseph Cotten, Gregory Peck, Lionel Barrymore, Lillian Gish, Scott McKay, Butterfly McQueen (remember her as Prissy in Gone With The Wind?) Steve Dunhill, Victor Wong and Charles Dingle.

AT REPUBLIC:

LOVE, HONOR, AND GOODBYE—with Virginia Bruce, Victor McLaglen, Edward Ashley, Helen Broderick, Nils Asther, Veda Ann Borg, Victoria Horne, Jacqueline and Judith Moore.

AT COLUMBIA:

THE BANDIT OF SHERWOOD FOREST in Technicolor (Lincoln Green) is now in its second month, with Cornel Wilde, Anita Louise, Edgar Buchanan as Friar Tuck, George Macready, Jill Esmond, Eva Moore, and John Abbott. Scene is laid in England in 1216, so the court shots are magnificent. You musn't miss it!

Robin Hood rides again—as Carnel Wilde, Olympic fencing champion and logical inheritor of Doug Fairbanks role. He's 30 and married wife Pat when they were in same play in N. Y.

THE GAY SENORITA is a light, merry little comedy with Jinx Falkenburg, Jim Bannon, Steve Cochran and Corinna Mura.

PARDON MY PAST has Fred MacMurray, Marguerite Chapman, William Demarest, Akim Tamiroff, Harry Davenport, Douglass Dumbrille, Charles Arnt, and Dewey Robinson busy in a comedy in which Fred enacts his first dual role. A pair of discharged merchant mariners, Fred and Bill, arrive in New York, collect their back pay—three thousand beautiful dollars—and plan to go to Beaver Dam, Wisconsin (joke: that's really Fred's home town) to start a mink farm. Before they can board a train, they are forcibly removed to the home of a gangster, Akim Tamiroff, because of the merchant mariners' resemblance to a local man about town currently down on his luck. In order to get his three grand back, Fred goes to the home of the man he so strongly resembles, and from here on you have to pay admission.

I LOVE A BANDLEADER is all about a shy man named Phil Harris who gets involved in a case of amnesia. With Rochester, Leslie Brooks, Walter Catlett, and Carole Mathews.

SOME CALL IT LOVE deals with the problem of Rosalind Russell, Lee Bowman, Adele Jergens, and Lewis Russell. Roz is a psychoanalyst and Lee Bowman is a light-hearted cartoonist; they find—on the train they have boarded—that they have been sold the same berth. They decide to take turns sitting up in it all night, whereupon Roz is able to save a girl, Adele, from committing suicide. Now, watch this because it gets tricky: Adele was frightened by a comic valentine or something as a child, so she has a complex about love. If you can't see from here that vast complications between Roz, Lee, and Adele are going to arise instantly, you just haven't been reading your psychology lately.

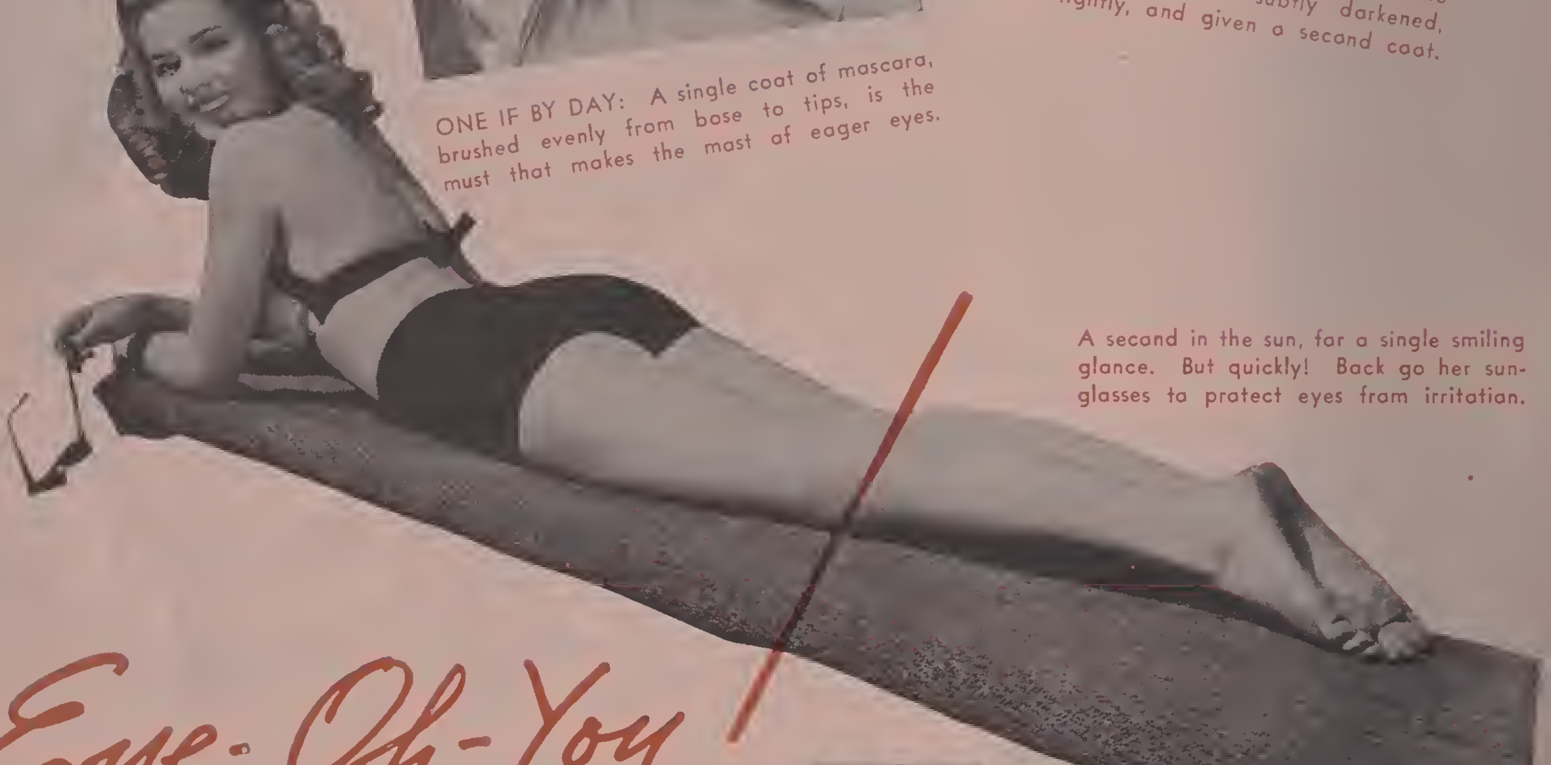
ONE IF BY DAY: A single coat of mascara, brushed evenly from base to tips, is the must that makes the most of eager eyes.

TWO IF BY NIGHT: There's glamour in the glance when lashes are subtly darkened, powdered lightly, and given a second coat.



A second in the sun, for a single smiling glance. But quickly! Back go her sunglasses to protect eyes from irritation.

Eye-Oh-You!

By

SHIRLEY COOK,

Beauty Editor

THERE'S one Eye-Oh-You (I.O.U.) in every eyeful's life. It's the debt she owes her eyes—and at no season are eye care and eye make-up more important than in summer. On the one hand you have more grit and glare. On the other you have a fashionable facade that sports darker skin tones, paler pastel lip lure and a wide-eyed wondrous look.

You will, if you're wise safeguard your eyes. And the system is simple. Get lots of sleep for lots of sparkle. Then save that sparkle by sparing eyes from strain. Wear glasses if you need them; always wear sunglasses for your outdoor life—you do need them. Learn about eye lotion and use a drop or two whenever your orbs feel tired or look bloodshot.

For the super-glow that arouses a "gleam," cosmetics come to the fore—eyeshadow, eyebrow pencil and mascara—in that order and in this manner.

Tinted shadow is blended up and out from the center of the lid, just above the lash line. Generally speaking, the color should be darkest where natural shadows are deepest—at the corners. Strictly speaking, it should never be obvious but should always "fade" out slightly below the brows with no line of demarcation.

Pencil, to define the brows properly, should be clean and sharply pointed. It must be stroked on lightly in short, hair-like marks right on the brow hairs, right along the natural arch. Two pencils, a brown one first, then a black (once over lightly) make for a more real effect.

Mascara, the magic-maker of lash luxuriance is applied with a damp brush, from base to tips. Work slowly and cover each lash completely. After the eyelashes have been evenly coated, a dry brush should be used to separate them and remove any excess mascara before a second and thin coating makes them seem doubly thick.

"WHO'S THAT?" The whisper runs across the theater when Joan Lorring, as Bessie Watty in "The Corn Is Green, flounces into view. Before her final close-up, the murmur changes to: "She's remarkable!"

You and I are not the first to say so. The great Chinese actor, Dr. Mei Lang Fang, the late Douglas Fairbanks, senior; Ronald Colman, Norman Corwin, Bette Davis and Orson Welles have all cried: "Remarkable!" before ever she appeared on the screen.

The real name of this bundle of talent is Dellie Ellis, but "Joan Lorring" looks better in lights. Besides, it works out to "3" according to numerology, and "3" is Joan's lucky number.

She was born in Hong Kong, Victoria, and spent most of her childhood there and in Shanghai, cosmopolitan cities then where people with every accent, dialect and tongue were to be met. Her father is English, her mother, Russian, their various amahs, Chinese. The butterball babe that was to (Continued on page 72)

So they got married! You thought the Bogart-Bacall romance was a publicity agent's press-dream?

There is no ceiling on the career of this Hollywood rising-star. The sky's the limit for Vincent Price

WHERE Vincent Price will be tomorrow, or what he will be doing, is as unpredictable as the weather. The only time anyone can be sure of locating him is when he is working before the camera at 20th Century-Fox, where he is under contract.

His interests are as varied as they are extensive. His energy is boundless and his zest for life so keen, that it is impossible to keep up with him.

Artistic to his fingertips, collecting objects of art is a passion. A Modigliani and a Goya are two outstanding canvasses among his collection of paintings. His collection of Olmecan Pre-Columbia figures dates back to B.C. He goes into ecstasy over wood carving. Bronze, rare books—all beautiful, skillful craftmanship intrigue and fascinate him.

Himself an artist of note, Vincent works equally well in oils and water colors. His sketches and caricatures are prized possessions of friends fortunate enough to own one. The Bible illustrations he is working on for his five year old son Barrett, are delicately beautiful. The gold settings for the matched topazes in the earrings, necklace, ring and bracelet he designed for his wife Edith Barrett, are exquisite.

Those long, slender fingers of his can wield a hammer and handle a saw and shovel as effectually as they manipulate a pencil or paint brush. Proof lies in the three-room beach cottage Vincent just finished building. With an occasional few hours' help from his stand-in, Vincent hauled the material—in the second-hand truck which he often drives to work—mixed the cement and sawed the lumber that went into the building.

"It is my dream cottage come to life," says Vincent. "A diminutive model of the main house that will be built farther back on the property after the war. This cottage then will be used for a guest house.

"I have had my eyes on these three acres for over five years. Stretching out on the (Continued on page 59)

THE dropping of a five ton blockbuster could not have had a more paralyzing effect. Everyone on the set stood frozen in his tracks. The silence was the terrible silence of the tomb. No one seemed to breathe.

Judy Garland had been rehearsing a solo scene for "Meet Me In St. Louis," and justifiably was well pleased with the way things were going. Suddenly a voice had rung out, scathing with sarcasm, from behind the camera where Vincente Minnelli was holding the directorial reins on the picture. Minnelli, whom Judy is engaged to marry.

One Mary in a Million!

So dear to our hearts is—Mary Pickford—America's sweetheart!

IF YOU were to ask Mary Pickford what she considered the prime factor in screen success, she would answer instantly and with conviction, "Magnetism." And she would add, "Of far greater importance than physical perfection, is a certain dynamic quality of personality, a projectable human warmth. The Orientals, upon completing a precise and superb work of art, always marred it in some way so as to escape the jealousy of the gods. Practically every human being has some obvious flaw, but this flaw is put to use or obliterated by the quality of magnetism."

Miss Pickford has a perfect right to make this statement because there is probably no more magnetic woman living and working in Hollywood today, than she. Furthermore, she has maintained her prominence over a period of years with no appreciable wear and tear upon her physical attractiveness or upon her dynamic spirit.

She has worked, over the past three decades, through curly-topped girlhood to maturity, with some of the most exciting personalities of this era. Valentino? Yes—she knew him. But their (Continued on page 50)

HER name is Mrs. Will Price. When movie fans ask for her autograph it usually comes out "With every kind wish, Maureen O'Hara." Every time she makes a picture her box office reports shoot sky high. In the eyes of the armed services she can do no wrong. In the eyes of her American public, with every family touched one way or another by war, she is a welcome relief, as she sweeps across the screen in high disdain and full Technicolor.

Look at a photo of Maureen O'Hara and you're looking at one of the most popular stars in Hollywood. You think you're looking at one picture; actually, you're looking at the picture of a professional who's about four persons in one. The last is the film star, the third is Maureen FitzSimons, the second is young mother, and first and foremost is Mrs. Will Price, wife of Marine Lieutenant Will Price who's stationed overseas.

She knows what she wants. What's more, she always gets it. Pretty strong words, those—but no stronger than Maureen's own, "You have to fight to get what you want, and nothing is worthwhile having unless you have to make some effort for it."

Bob's Back

Off the screen for two years, Lt. Bob Cummings is with us again for a little while . . . before going back to his job with Uncle Sam's Army

By MICKELL NOVAK

DON'T LOOK now, but that guy who's grinning at you from across the page has the world by the tail—and he doesn't care who knows it!

If Bob Cummings had three good hands today, instead of the usual number, he could count his blessings off in one-two order!

Bob and Success had a touch-and-go time of it for fifteen years, before Lady Luck finally capitulated completely to the guy's ability to hang on, and decided—to everyone's amazement—to give a sucker an even break.

That break came this year, when the long road that has no turning (and we do mean Mr. C's career) finally executed a neat hairpin curve, and sent his star rocketing up into the celestial sector, where it promises to anchor itself and become a permanent feature attraction.

The send-off for this mercurial flight, was the legal document that producer Hal Wallis waved before the Cummings orbs, in the way of a four-year contract involving two pictures a year and the privilege of doing outside films. "You Came Along" is Bob's first starring role for Paramount release, and it threatens to be sock entertainment.

On location at Riverside, California's famous Mission Inn, Bob got one look at its Flyers' Chapel, and an idea was born. Two weeks later he grabbed actress Mary Elliott's hand, trotted her back to the spot, and married the girl!

The events leading up to the great day were well-paced, to understate the case. (Continued on page 84)

Shortly after this picture was taken, Bob returned to Army as flight instructor. Is proud of his boys now flying in combat.

U. S. Air Forces gave him leave of absence to star in "You Came Along" (Para). With the very pretty and blonde Lizabeth Scott.

Conceived in drama, dedicated to flattery—
Lucille Ball models hats that follow traditions of elegance established by the Old Masters

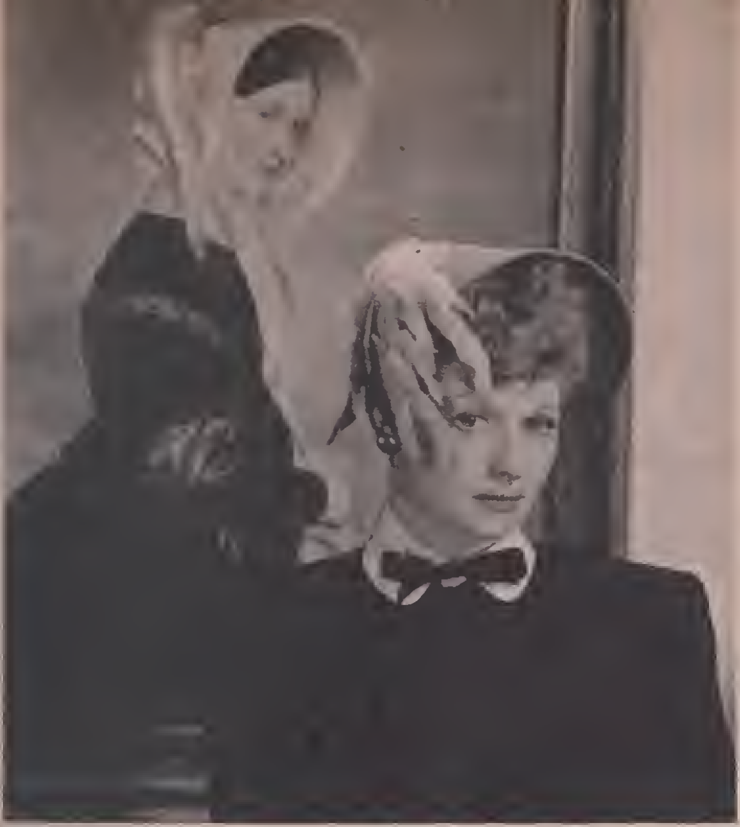
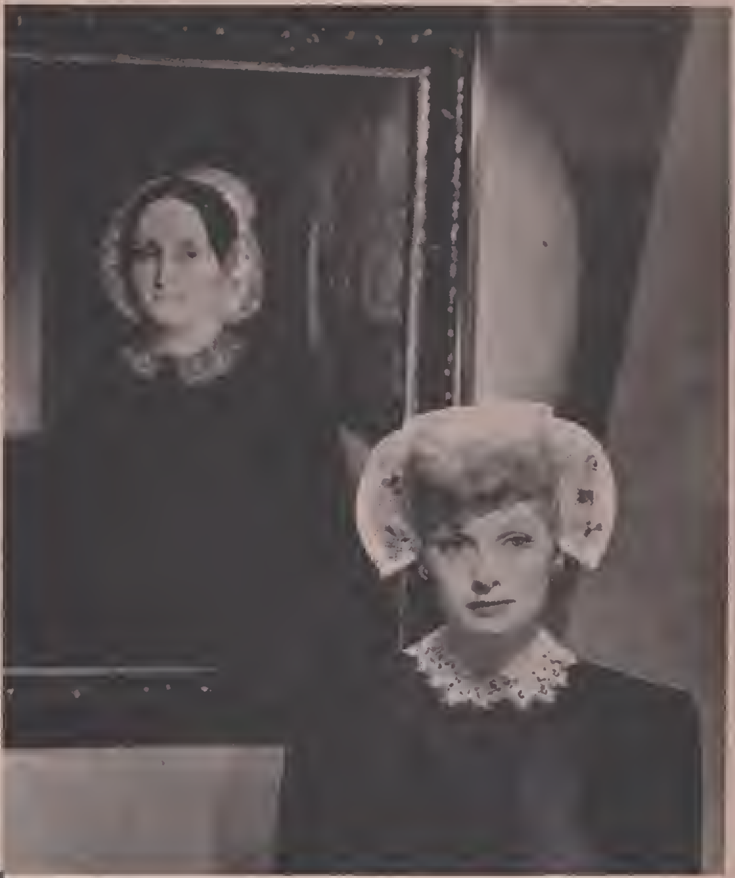
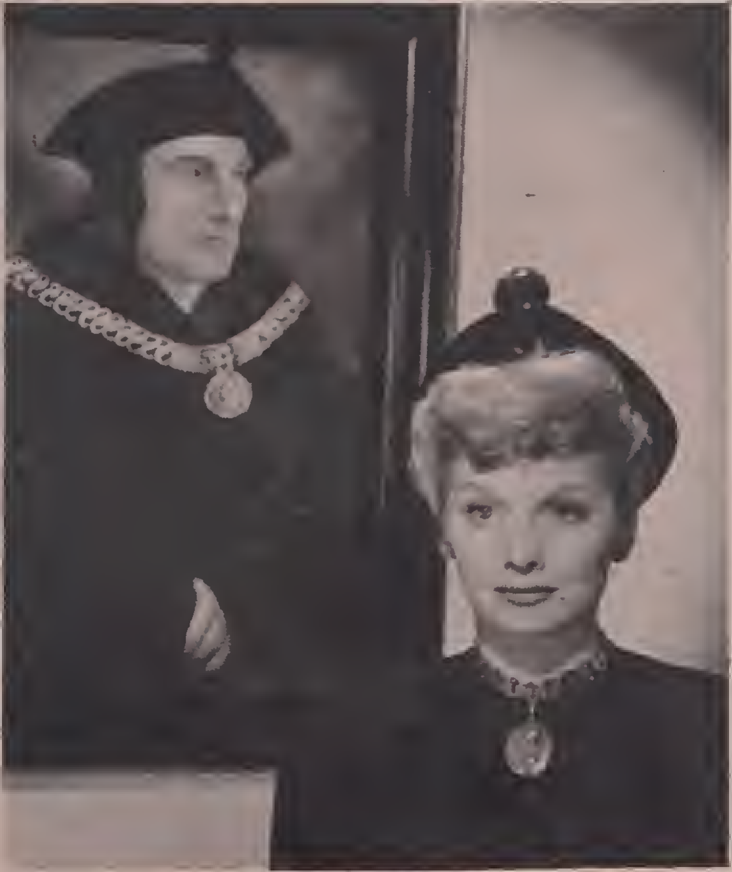
STREAMLINED. Lucille Ball's outsized, pointed black velvet beret edged with bright green braid is a 1945 version of the one pretty Lady Jane Seymour wore. Note the resemblance of the heavy jewelry. Not necessary . . . but how it adds!



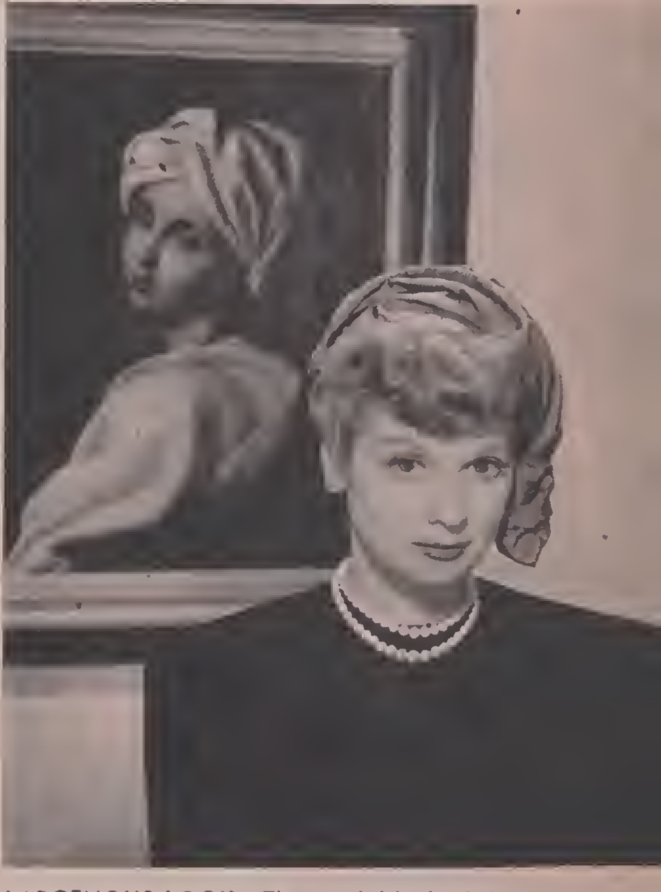
EYECATCHER. Women of fashion in the nineteenth century went in for the "flirty jobs", too. Here the star of "Ziegfeld Follies" is shown wearing a strawberry felt poke bonnet with a cascade of pink feathers, much along the lines of the lady in this popular painting. The Eton collar on her sophisticatedly simple dress is slightly smaller—but so much smarter for the ladies of today.



NEAT AND SWEET. Puritan lady in this painting probably made her own lace bonnet and collar. This very charming bonnet of white straw has a squared crown in the modern mode and is trimmed with sweet sprays of forget-me-not. Bright companion for those smart "little black sheers".



PRETTY PARADOX. All the flattery of a real hat with the casual shining hair charm of no hat at all! Lucille's little beret of black felt studded with multi-colored sequins and worn off the face to show her beautiful red hair, is a take-off on the one worn by a famous English philosopher of the 16th century. (You don't have to be a philosopher to look well in this little hat.)



LARCENOUS LOOK. The candid look of this off-the-face hat with a swooping side drop was "lifted" from the painting of the Italian noblewoman who was inspiration for one of Shelley's most noted poems. Lucille Ball, now appearing in "Without Love", likes it in a soft, luscious green shade.

Hats designed by Beverly Devon of Hollywood.

COTTEN TALE

This man looks at life and finds it great fun! Lucky Guy . . . for life seems to feel the same about Joseph Cotten.

By DOROTHY DEERE

"Duel In The Sun" (U.A.) is a change from character parts.

Once her leading man on radio, Helen Hayes stops to see Joe on set.

"WHAT would you rather be if you were not an actor?", an interviewer asked Joe Cotten.

"There's no such thing as not being an actor," the interviewee replied pleasantly. "Scratch any human being deep enough and you'll find a layer of actor-dermis somewhere. An 'actor', as the term is used professionally, is merely someone who is allowed to indulge in his acting."

The interviewer was impressed. You would be, too. Mr. Cotten has a trick voice, as you know, and he gives off trick thoughts with it. His conversation crackles in the same individual way his hair crinkles, although the one has nothing to do with the other. The voice is from an early case of whooping cough, the hair is from handsomeness. He is twice as good looking in natural color as on black and white, with very live blue eyes and a California complexion. And he dresses in a way to make some of those males in the Esquire fashion-fotos look as if they had just tossed themselves together.

Also, he has been enabled to write an entire series of checkbooks merely by his knowledge of histrionics, which proves him an authority on the subject:

"Talk to anyone long enough," he continued, "and whether he's an Elks Club president or a street-car conductor, he'll eventually get around to telling you about the time he took part (Continued on page 65)

Man from Mars (Penna.)—Bill Eythe voices his opinion thusly: "I don't believe in very young marriages, nor in comparative strangers marrying."

ONCE upon a time it may have been true that Hollywood's younger set was beautiful but dumb. They are no less good to look at today. Listen now, and see if you think they're dumb:

"Modern people don't accept the ideas of yesterday," declares Bill Eythe, of 20th Century-Fox. "They don't accept the ideas of today without examining them, either.

"In the past, love was thought of as a troubadour playing a guitar under a veiled lady's window, an illusion of romance with no reality. Love was a wild agitation of the blood, poetry, music and moonlight. When, after marriage, the lovers discovered each had married an ordinary mortal, it must have been pretty bad.

"Today, the lady has taken off her veil, the gentleman has lost his guitar. You see them sitting down, discussing their common problems—backgrounds, families, outlook, philosophy, eugenics. I don't believe in very young marriages, nor in comparative strangers marrying. They must be old enough to understand how to adjust themselves, and whether or not they can make a success of their union.

Men are queer creatures, but—

I AM sorry to say that I don't remember who wrote that delicious bit of verse, but I do know that it expresses the sentiment of most of the girls who have had the good luck to work in pictures with the very interesting, exceptionally gallant, and generally worthwhile men in Hollywood. I've had the luck, because I started in this industry when I should have been (and would have been but for my cunning escape) fuming over algebraic equations, of appearing in pictures with many of the most famous men in the world.

And, thanks to the unfailing assistance of producers, directors, writers, technicians, and others, I hope to go on with this fascinating work for many more years. Because there is nothing quite as pleasant as remembering

Of course, my two favorite men of all time are my husband, Colonel Tom Lewis, and my lusty young son, Christopher.

Also, I have just finished working with everyone's favorite man, Gary Cooper, in an enterprise that we, affectionately, dub a "westrun." The correct title is "Along Came Jones," and it is Gary's first independent producing job—a brilliant job, I would say. In this opry, I wear my hair down my back to give me that outdoorsy expression, and aiding and abetting this effect is a plaid shirt—but a big plaid!—and a divided skirt.

Gary is wearing his usual blue shirt, Stetson hat, and tight brown riding breeches. On him they not only look good, but they are convincing. Gary, of course, knows about all there is to know about horseflesh; he is so assured that he can even kid about horsemanship. The other day he was telling a visitor on the set, "Shucks, steering a horse is just like steering an automobile." He described a steering-wheel circle, his left hand at the bottom of the circle holding the reins, and his right hand at the top. "Now, watch my right hand." THE Lady VANQUISHES

Being a producer is a man's racket, they warned her. But Missy Joan Harrison just went ahead and did the job anyway . . . but good!

DID YOU see a picture called "Phantom Lady"? This is the movie now on record as being a Hollywood precedent breaker—on several counts.

In the first place, it was a good show. Second, it made Franchot Tone, usually a charming character, into a suspected murderer. Third, and most important, it was the first show in elephant's years to be produced in Hollywood by a woman. In fact, I think it's probably the first show ever to have a gal as sole boss. And that's news!

The lady in question is a small, blonde, young, vital wench named Joan Harrison. She is not one's idea of a super-executive. She doesn't go in for heavy, sensible shoes, black-framed glasses, or a mannish hair-cut. Instead, she cuts quite a swath with the stag-line in dressmaker suits, a blithe, curly Victory bob, and shoes that look like shoes. At a casual meeting, she seems frivolous and a little shy. But, when you talk to her for a few minutes, you discover she has unleashed a brain that is nothing to sneeze at. (Continued on page 70)

Barbara Britton changed from a quiet, unobtrusive starlet—to one of Hollywood's shining lights. Here's how it happened

COULD this be Barbara Britton?

Two and a half years had passed since our first meeting and the shy, terrified girl of that period had been replaced by the woman of vivacious charm and obvious intelligence who now sat across the luncheon table from us. Watching Barbara exchange quips with Joel McCrea an hour later on the set of "The Virginian," the change in this girl who, in the past, deliberately avoided people seemed even more radical.

What had happened to make her different? Vividly, I recalled our first meeting; the day Barbara, with her mother by her side, arrived at Paramount studios to prepare for a screen test. Her beauty took your breath away, but her shyness was painful to watch. She was unlike any girl the studio had ever signed, and everyone was a little bewildered at what to do with this new type of motion picture actress. Actually, it wasn't until Barbara—through one of those exciting flukes that occur only in Hollywood—became the star of "Till We Meet Again," that the studio solved the riddle of an actress who could act, but who just didn't somehow fit into any character a screen writer could dream up.

Just how Barbara emerged into a full-fledged screen star and an exciting personality was revealed in the story she told me.

"I was absolutely terrified at what had happened to me that day of the screen test," (Continued on page 75)

Words of Music

By JILL WARREN

GREETINGS, individuals! Here it is July, with summer, sun and stuff, and lots of items in the musical notebook.

Gene Krupa has dropped the string section from his orchestra and the band now sounds more like it did a couple of years ago. Gene has also decided to play more drums instead of concentrating on conducting, as he has been doing. The G-Noters and Lillian Lane are no longer with the band, but Buddy Stewart, who sang with the quartet as well as doing solos, remains to handle the ballad department. Anita O'Day, who has been vacationing since leaving Stan Kenton, may re-join her ex-boss. Krupa, who is still 1-A, hopes to break his own record at the Capitol Theatre in New York.

Tommy Dorsey is another leader who has dropped strings, at least temporarily. Traveling difficulties being what they are, Tommy decided it would be easier to transport his band minus the fiddles, etc. Bonnie Lou Williams has left Dorsey and will probably return to Hollywood, where she has several radio offers. Buddy Rich's contract with T.D. was up in May, and Buddy wanted to leave to form his own band, but he had made a verbal agreement with Dorsey to stay another year and the Musicians' Union made Buddy stick to it.

Tommy did such a good job of emceeing the R.C.A. program that the sponsors have signed him on a long-term deal, and even moved the show to the coast for the summer because Tommy had band engagements there. The Dorsey Brothers' picture, "My Brother Leads A Band," which was to have gone into production in the early fall, has been postponed until after the first of 1946, due to the recent drop in film stock quotas for independent producers.

With Lena Horne as the subject, however, the situation changes.

YOUR PROBLEM and MINE

By

Jane Wyman

Let Jane Wyman help solve your problem. Write her c/o Movieland, 9126 Sunset Blvd., Los Angeles 46, California

Verne Stephens gives Jane autograph for adopted son Michael Edward.

Dear Miss Wyman:

I have been married over six years, and in that time have lost two children at birth. My husband has been in the service for the past two years, and we had agreed that this was no time to be thinking of raising a family again.

Conditions at home have changed since he left; my father died, leaving the support of my mother and sister to me. And here is my problem.

During the time my husband has been gone, he has changed his mind again, and in every one of his letters, is emphatic about starting to raise a family immediately. He is due home in August, 1945, and I have explained to him in my letters why we shouldn't have a baby now; my inability to work during that time, my wages being stopped, the extra expenses, etc. He says he understands all that, but he is insisting that I think as he does. Either it's his lonesomeness, or he is assuming a domineering attitude, which I dislike.

Knowing him as I thought I did, he sounds like an entirely different man. He was always so reasonable. I know things may be cleared up when he comes home, but I doubt it, as he never fails to make an issue of it in his letters. We have gotten along so remarkably well that this may cause a rift between us, and I just couldn't bear that.

I have so much to contend with now, that I feel I just cannot have an extra item added. Foolish though this problem may seem to others, it has become a major one to me. I guess I've been thinking about it so much that I cannot think clearly anymore. What should I do?

Geneva

Dear Geneva:

To me, the fundamental reason for marriage is a family. Children are worth any sacrifice, and I somehow believe that Providence takes a special interest in babies, and if you have one, you will find a way to take care of it. However, in your case, I do not know your financial condition, nor what caused the death of your two children at birth. Both of these factors are important in your problem.

Evidently your husband believes your means are adequate to take this step. You say that he seems like a changed person. War changes men in many ways, but it should not have changed him so much that you cannot talk this situation over on a reasonable basis.

There are two other reasons than those which you mention which may account for his change of mind—one, that he wants to leave a child to perpetuate his name in case he fails to return, and two (which seems prevalent with men in the service), that he thinks a child will be a close bond between you two and make him less fearful of losing your love while he is away.

I feel that your worry about this is completely futile, for nothing can be accomplished by it—worry never has solved a problem and only harms you. Why don't you put the entire matter out of your mind until he comes home and you both can talk things over frankly and completely? After all, nothing can be settled until he does come home. Then, if you cannot come to an agreement at that time, I suggest that you both go to the doctor who attended you at the birth of your other children and ask him for advice in working this situation out.

Sincerely,
JANE WYMAN

Dear Jane:

I married when I was 17 and my husband was 18. We were so very happy, and had we had a child or two, our home would have been complete.

Two years passed and our home was without a child. Finally I went to a physician who told me I could never have any children. At first I decided to keep it from my husband, but I knew that wouldn't be fair to let him keep hoping for something that could never be.

After I told him, things went on as before. He was never unkind to me nor untrue, so far as I know. But I could tell he was unhappy, and he finally told me he wanted a divorce. He said he would always love me, but that wasn't enough, he wanted a wife who could give him a child. He got the divorce and three months later married another girl.

Now, here is my problem. I have met a man 16 years older than I, who has asked me to marry him. I still love my husband and I have told this man so, but he says he will be so good to me, that he will make me forget my husband. Jane, will it be fair to marry this other man knowing I do not love him? My former husband lives in the next town from me, and I see him quite often.

My doctor advises me to go far away from here, and get a position taking care of children, as they would take the place of the children I could never have. I can cook and give good references. Do you think I could get a job in California?

Eileen

Dear Eileen:

What a fine, brave girl you are, Eileen, not one word of self pity for the tragic experience thrust upon you, through no fault of yours—just a straightforward statement of facts and a sincere desire to work things out. I cannot express to you how I admire your attitude.

It would not be unfair to this older man to marry him, since you have told him the facts, but it would be unfair to yourself if you feel that you cannot love him. Do you think you could love this man if you were able to put your former husband out of your heart? If so, it might be a solution to your problem to marry him and adopt a baby, for that would satisfy your yearning for a child, and you would be doing a wonderful deed as well. However, be sure of your feeling toward this man before making such a decision.

I agree with your doctor that it would be well for you to go where you would not be running into your former husband. Seeing him only adds salt to your wounds. But I cannot recommend that you come to California, for it is overcrowded here now. Living quarters are practically impossible to find, and a stranger without local experience and references, would probably have difficulty in getting a position.

May you find the happiness that you so richly deserve.

Sincerely,
JANE WYMAN

is sweet; gracious, modest, considerate, gentle, wise, cooperative, and out of this world in every respect. You can talk to producers, directors, cameramen, vocal coaches and even hard-bitten publicity men, and the shocking worst that you could learn is that she has an impish sense of humor at times!

Not only is the girl excitingly beautiful, but apparently a paragon of character to boot! Even her impish sense of humor, it seems, has the redeeming quality of great charm, especially when the joke is on her.

For example, there was the day she first met Hazel Scott, the famous Broadway pianist with whom she shared the spotlight in a big musical number in "I Dood It." The meeting took place in the office of Kay Thompson, Metro's vocal coach, and Hazel was dressed to the teeth in black satin and mink. Feeling like a country cousin in her own attire of brown slacks and a slouch coat, Lena squirmed inwardly under Hazel's appraising glances.

The two met again the next day, but this time Lena was armed for the sartorial battle in purple sequins and double mink. In walked Hazel wearing black slacks and a simple sport coat. Lena froze in her tracks and then grinned widely.

"Oops!" she laughed. "Looks like I guessed wrong again!"

There was another occasion, a certain studio official recalls, when Lena did not guess wrong. It was on her recent visit to the White House, and as is the custom, Lena took flowers for Mrs. Roosevelt when she went to call. The studio official was insistent upon orchids, but Lena refused to accede to his choice. "I want something simpler," she said quietly but firmly.

Obviously Mrs. Roosevelt was expecting orchids, for as she began to untie the box, she glanced ruefully at the blouse she was wearing. "I'm afraid these may clash a little," she observed. Lena smiled confidently as she watched the President's wife withdraw from the box an old-fashioned nosegay of violets and pale yellow roses, a gift in perfect taste and perfect for the wine-red background of Mrs. Roosevelt's blouse!

"You undoubtedly receive so many orchids that I thought you might like these for a change," Lena told her. The flowers spoke for themselves; here was no newly-rich and newly-famous actress bent on a flashy show, but an unaffected woman bringing a simple remembrance to a friend.

That same simplicity and instinctive good taste is the keynote of Lena's quiet private life, for all she has the means now to indulge a more lavish or ostentatious mode of living. She dresses quietly in well-cut clothes in soft colors with a marked preference for suits or tailored things. Her make-up is limited to a light dusting of face powder and a discreet use of lipstick, and she cares little for jewelry of any kind. Her favorite piece, and the one she usually wears, is a star sapphire ring which was given her by several grateful theater managers for whom she broke all box-office records on a recent personal appearance and hospital tour.

With her two children, Teddy, 4, and Gail, 6, who were born of a marriage which ended in divorce, she lives in one half of a modest two-family dwelling, which she owns. She has one medium-priced car which her combination housekeeper-nurse drives for her; Lena never has learned to drive and admits she has a fear complex about tackling it. Her one extravagance is a rare and costly collection of phonograph records, which range from complete symphonies through early and out-of-print jazz classics. Occasionally she goes with friends to Hollywood's famous restaurants for dinner, but more often she entertains at home, partly out of preference for that setting and partly lest outside prejudice and intolerance create an uncomfortable situation for her guests.

In her taste for foods Lena lets herself go. She detests plain boiled dishes but rhapsodizes over exotic and highly seasoned Hungarian, Russian, and East Indian recipes. A great bowl of borscht with globs of sour cream is a prime favorite, as much because she loves the color as liking the taste. In the kitchen she is an enthusiastic putterer and delights in experimenting, especially with spices, but actually she is no great shakes as a cook.

Like most entertainers, with whom it is almost an occupational symptom, she hopes some day to own a "spread out" place in the country, complete with cows, chickens and a potato patch.

In sketching Lena's private life it is impossible to ignore her two children, for before she is a singer, an actress, or a public figure, she is first and foremost a mother both wise and devoted. Conscious of their broken home background, she is teaching them to depend on each other for a sense of security, especially since much of the time as the family breadwinner must necessarily be spent away from home. Whenever she can be with them, however, she gives unstintingly of herself. The story still is told of her first interview with an important writer, an interview which would do much to advance her fame. In the midst of their conversation two-year-old Teddy came into the room, complaining that his head hurt. Many a star in a like situation has been known to order the child from the room. Lena gathered the baby into her lap, quietly began to stroke away his headache, and calmly went on with the interview.

"I hope you don't mind," she said simply, "but Teddy's head is important, too."

Of all her champions on the M-G-M lot, none is more loudly pro-Lena than Arthur Freed, the producer of such Horne-enhanced musicals as "Panama Hattie," "Cabin In The Sky," "Thousands Cheer," and the new "Ziegfeld Follies." And he still shudders at how near he came to booting Metro's chance to sign her!

It was shortly after Pearl Harbor, and for weeks he had been pestered by an agent clamoring for him to audition "a great little singer" then appearing at a Hollywood night club. More to shut up the agent than from wanting to hear the girl sing, he admits, he finally agreed to listen to one song "at 2:30 P.M. sharp!" At 4:30 P.M. he was still listening in unabashed enthusiasm as song after song poured from Lena's throat. At 5 P.M. he personally took her to the boss man, Louis B. Mayer, for whom she sang one song. At 5:10 Lena and Metro had made a deal.

"Lena is a great artist with a great inner knowledge of how to handle herself but an amazing lack of realization of how much she has to offer," Freed said. "Like Crosby and other natural artists who come along so rarely, she sings from the heart and so moves the public emotionally with her voice. Actually it isn't the greatness of her voice, but the greatness of her own emotion while singing which catches and holds your atten-first meeting was memorable chiefly because of its spontaneous character. Mary and her mother were seated at a table in a smart New York hotel when a vividly dark man approached, bowed, and said to Mrs. Pickford, "I am Rudolph Valentino. I am a dancer. Can you tell me, please, how I may get into motion pictures?"

MARY PICKFORD

Mrs. Pickford considered. She said slowly, after thought, that he should have a series of portraits taken, and he should continue to mail these to producers and directors, specifying his qualifications, experience, and age, until some one took notice of him.

Signor Valentino absorbed this advice, then said, his eyes eloquent, that he was deeply grateful. Bowing, he turned and walked swiftly away.

While this conversation had been taking place, Mary had done her best—in a well-behaved sort of way—to remind her mother of her presence. She squirmed; she cleared her throat; she reached for the sugar. No response. After Valentino had left the vicinity, Mary sighed. "Well, why didn't you introduce him to me?" she inquired.

With an equal mixture of Canadian tact and New England primness, Mrs. Pickford said, "Because I, myself. hadn't met him."

A good many of you who read this article may not have seen a Douglas Fairbanks picture, but Mr. Fairbanks was a perfect example of the magnetism-virile-dynamic department. He was so vital that he positively radiated glowing good spirits; he couldn't understand illness of any sort and refused, ever. to give in to it. In one of his cloak-and-dagger pictures, a fellow player accidentally ran a rapier completely through Mr. Fairbanks' lower thigh.

The following summer, he and Mary were swimming one day when she noticed the double scar and exclaimed over it. "When did you do that?"

He told her, offhandedly. "But you didn't even limp. You didn't say a word about it!" she protested.

"It was over and done. You couldn't have done anything about it, so I kept it to myself, not wanting to depress you," he explained. This refusal to countenance a bodily ill was part of his driving propulsion toward success. His desire for success was so great, so perennial, so uninterrupted that, when doodling with pencil and pad during a telephone conversation, he wrote and rewrote, printed, scripted one word only: Success.

Lieutenant Charles Rogers, whom his family and friends call Buddy, is another example of magnetism of a specialized sort. His wife says of him with immense pride, "He is and always will be a charming farmer." No higher praise can be given any man.

Did you know that, despite box office avalanches set tumbling by latter-day singers, Buddy Rogers still holds certain New York Theatre records?

Buddy was born in Olathe, Kansas, and his roots have never moved westward. One night he was expected for dinner at six. Six-thirty, seven, seven-thirty, and eight o'clock rolled around before he came dashing in, breathless and calling out apologies. Seems that a chap from Olathe had misunderstood some traffic law and had been fined a sum in excess of his pocket change, but could not give an out-of-state check. So he had telephoned Buddy, who rushed down to assist a fellow Kansan.

"A school friend of yours?" Mrs. Rogers asked.

"No. I never really knew this fellow. Friend of the family though."

"Oh, I see. Your family knew his, and you knew each other as children."

"No. It was like this. At one time my grandfather was stuck to get his crop out. The grain would have been ruined and my grandfather would have gone broke if this fellow's uncle hadn't turned over a span of mules to do the harvesting. So I was just repaying an old family debt," he clarified.

His wife thinks that this adherence to the communal spirit, coming from a man who has lived a certain period of time in Hollywood, merits pleased, if somewhat astonished, attention.

But for an example of sheer personality, for a half-pint of pluperfect power, no one needs look beyond Miss Pickford's perspicacious head.

Disregard that word "half-pint." As Miss Pickford has already said, she believes that each one of us carries a thorn in his flesh. With her, the thistle has always been her height. She is not, regardless of the manner in which she appears screenwise, tiny. She is sixty inches tall (that sounds taller than five feet), which is to say that she is about Veronica Lake's size. June Allyson is only slightly taller, and June Haver is a mere sixty-two inches from toe to topknot. Still, her stature had always caused Mary vast regret. When she was twelve and thirteen, and most of her friends were ascending a stepladder of inches, she almost drove her mother to distraction by standing as tall as possible before her parent and demanding, "Have I grown lately? Do you think I'll be as tall as my cousin?"

Mrs. Pickford would study her daughter's hands (the fingers were rather long and tapering) and nod encouragingly. "I think you'll grow quite a bit yet," she would say.

Mary says ruefully that her niece's child, a lusty of tot of 17 months, is half as high as she is right now. She laughs about it, however, indicating that her diminutive stature has placed no limit on her sense of humor.

Another trait she has never outgrown is her shyness. When traveling she is always accompanied by her secretary who dines with her, shops with her, lends psychic support when Miss Pickford addresses Red Cross Drive meetings or Bond rallies.

This shyness has nothing to do with her canny business ability. Whereas women producers are alleged to be a novelty in Hollywood, Miss Pickford actually produced many of her own pictures in the days when it was believed that only a bearded jaw could count to ten. Through her United Artists' responsibilities she has kept in intimate touch with the changing Hollywood financial scene so that nowadays she can roll a million dollar budget at the tip of her tongue. She is now producing "One Touch Of Venus" and it appears that Clifton Webb, fresh from his conquest of celluloid in "Laura," will be in the cast.

Incidentally, although Miss Pickford won't appear in "One Touch Of Venus," a good many persons have been encouraging her to return to the screen. At present she has a script under consideration, and may decide to do it. She and one of her best friends, Lillian Gish, were discussing oldtime movies one evening and Miss Pickford said that she really thought all the old prints of her pictures should be destroyed.

Miss Gish made the general sound of a P-51 taking off, and said through the roar that such an act would be vandalism. After all, Miss Pickford's work in "Coquette" won the Oscar for 1932. "Time doesn't really change the value of great work," protested Miss Gish.

"The Girl with the Golden Curls" they used to call Mary. Absent from the screen for too long, she won't appear in "One Touch of Venus" but is considering return to films.

Miss Pickford still isn't convinced. She plans to turn the positives over to the Academy, but with the stipulation that they be shown only to students doing research, or those individuals actively engaged in creating motion pictures. She thinks that a Fate Worse Than Death is having one's pictures shown long after death as happened in the case of Rudolph Valentino.

In addition to her professional life, Miss Pickford's home life is a highly satisfactory and busy one. In the nursery wing of the Rogers home there are two occupants: Roxanne, aged 2½, and Ronie, aged 7. (Actually, Ronnie is 8, but he isn't growing as fast as he would like, so he always contradicts, with courtesy, his mother's statement that he is 8.)

To give you an idea of the imagination that Miss Pickford brings to her job of motherhood, here is a yarn involving Ronnie's misbehavior on a school bus. Seems he was running up and down the aisles, generally creating havoc. The driver reported him, saying that he might—by inciting riot —have caused an accident.

Mary took her young son on her lap and held a conference. "You're too grown-up and too big for me to spank, and your daddy is away, so how am I to punish you? You'll have to think of something," she informed him.

He blinked two fat tears and said that he could remain indoors all day Saturday. "That's not quite enough," ruled his mother. "Think of one more punishment."

That really provoked Niagara. "Well, I could wear those old short pants to school," he said, giving himself the haymaker. If there is anything on earth that he loathes, it is short pants. He added, stressing the extent of his self-immolation, "All the kids will make fun of me-e-e-e." That word ended in a sob.

Mary sent him to bed. Then, with a sternness characteristic of mothers, she began to worry about a way to punish her son without subjecting him to the indignity of a royal razzing from his school mates.

Getting out drawing pencil and pad, she sketched an eight-year-old, no, a seven-year-old boy, with a mouth like a tired fishworm hanging over a twig —dropped no doubt by a careless bird. Then she encased this sad son in the short-pantsed suit.

The following morning she unveiled her handiwork. "You see," she explained, "this little boy is your bad self. His name is, well, let's call him Du-dee. Everyone has a Du-dee. My Du-dee makes me do and say things for which I'm sorry afterward. Your Du-dee made you misbehave in the bus. Now, we'll punish Du-dee by making him stay at home in your short pants. Since I have him locked up here, you'll behave in the bus and at school."

P.S. It worked.

In addition to Du-dee, there are a series of quaint, invisible characters who move in and out of the Rogers household. Anyone who speaks loudly or who behaves boisterously is a strugmullion. One who is a slow man with a dollar or who could thatch a roof with the moss from his pennies is a Michael Feeney. A Lark Foot is any ponderous-pedal person with an ample heel development; the name was originally applied to those who, according to Miss Pickford, made a habit of "trotting the bogs" barefooted. Finally, a Fan Faye is any jouncing jenny with a jive-jive.

Yes, Miss Pickford is of Irish blood —about fifty percent.

As a toddler, she was taught a rich brogue by her Irish Grandmother and to this day, in moments of excitement or stress, she drops casually into divil a bit of County Cork.

Oddly enough, despite her wide traveling, Mary has never visited Ireland. "It would be like going to Heaven," she once told a friend who wanted to know why, akin as she is to the ould sod, she has never seen Eire. "I expect so much of it, I have such dreams of it, that I'm almost afraid to see it for fear of being disappointed."

She has always wanted to go, moreover, without fanfare or public notice. Just to slip away with Buddy and, as miscellaneous Mr. and Mrs. Murphy from Chicago, to prowl the quaint streets and the glistening hills, to picnic beside the lakes where banshees come to bathe and bleat. At present, this is a post-war project.

Perhaps, when the time comes, both Ronnie and Roxanne will be able to accompany their parents. Roxanne, according to her mother, will see everything—remember it, and retell her experiences with astounding exactness. She is already showing signs of being meticulous.

She adores her daddy beyond description, so each time a plane passes over the house she is inclined to believe that the pilot might be Buddy. One morning a plane passed with a roar, flying low because of a stratum of fog, so Roxanne plunged into her mother's dressing gown and went flying down the stairs and onto the lawn like a small comet with a long trail. Her nurse called up to Miss Pickford, leaning out of the window, "I believe, Madame, that it is really Mr. Rogers."

Roxanne tugged at the nurse's sleeve. "Not Mr. Rogers," she corrected solemnly. "Lieutenant Rogers."

In private moments, when she is trying to talk Buddy into doing something she wishes, Roxanne addresses him as "Daddy boy dear."

This phrase-making quality is one she may have picked up from her mother, because Miss Pickford has some stature as a writer. She has published three books, and also has the distinction of having done repertorial stints for a news syndicate. She once did a series of interviews, one of which involved talking to a murderess and the woman's parents. Mary, in her column, described this defendant —whom she found to be on the Madame Defarge order—as a "square-jawed jane." Whereupon, Miss Pickford received the hottest fan letter of her career. Seems that the woman didn't object to being called a murderess; she exploded over the description above. This was the only genuinely furious fan letter Mary has ever received. Her congratulatory and admiring letters, if they could be assembled at this time, would solve the paper shortage.

Our Army and Navy, an enterprising group of men always alert for loveliness, have been known to lean out of a passing car—upon seeing Mary walking along the street—and whistle. Not once, not twice, but with a double locomotive effect.

Remembering another war and another army of whistlers, Miss Pickford recently smiled and observed, "Time goes by so fast!"

But it skips lightly over Miss Pickford. Her yellow head is still piled high with curls, svelte is her figure, and her legs are a pair of the trimmest in town. This is undoubtedly due to a number of different kinds of love: love for her work, love for friends, her husband, and her family. "One Touch Of Venus" makes the whole world kin.

THE END

Sporting the Pickford dimples and uniform of exclusive Black Fox Military Academy in Los Angeles, Ronnie Rogers is the man of the household while Buddy is away at war.

WORDS OF MUSIC

such bands as Gus Arnheim, Johnny Richards and Alvino Rey. . .

Harry James has a big acting role in Twentieth Century-Fox "Kitten On The Keys," besides providing most of the music for the film. Harry worked fifty-two days out of the sixty-day shooting schedule, had eighty-six scenes and two hundred and forty-three lines of dialogue. And he vies with his former vocalist, Dick Haymes, for the affections of the leading lady, Maureen O'Hara. Pretty good, what?

Several servicemen were visiting the set one day, and were introduced to Harry. One of the boys, a soldier, said kiddingly, "So you're the guy millions of G. I.'s hate like poison!" With a startled expression Harry asked, "Why?" The boy replied, "For taking our pin-up girl, Betty Grable, away from us." Harry laughed and topped him with, "Well, they'd probably hate me twice as much if they knew I'm the guy who wakes them up for reveille every morning!" A few years ago when the army decided to discontinue using live buglers, the War Department asked Harry to record the reveille call; and the James horn has been waking up sleepy soldiers ever since—in large camps both in the United States and overseas.

When Johnnie Johnston goes to Hollywood to make his first movie on his new M.G.M. contract, his biggest worry is where he's going to live. Johnnie gave up his house in the valley when he came East last summer, and can't get it back. So he says if worse comes to worse, he'll move his family into a trailer camp.

WHAT'S BRISK ON THE DISC:

COLUMBIA:

Les Brown, whose records of "Sentimental Journey" and "My Dreams Are Getting Better All The Time" have been sell-outs, comes up with a new one, "I'll Always Be With You" and "'Tain't Me." Doris Day does both vocals.

Harry James and his orchestra are present and accounted for with "If I Loved You," sung by Buddy Di Vito, and "Oh, Brother!" with a Kitty Kallen lyric.

Xavier Cugat, who's been packing them in at the Copacabana in New York, rhumbas in with "Enlloro" and "Adios Africa." Del Campo sings the first side and Miguelito Valdes does the second.

Woody Herman has two goodies this time, "Apple Honey," an instrumental, and "Out of This World," sung by Frances Wayne.

With a title like "Leave Us Leap," you know just about what to expect from Gene Krupa and the boys. On the reverse side, the Krupa Jazz Trio does "Dark Eyes," with Gene on drums, Charlie Venturo on tenor sax and Teddy Napoleon on piano.

Kay Kyser and his orchestra offer "Can't You Read Between The Lines?" with Dolly Mitchell asking the musical question, and the novelty, "Bell Bottom Trousers."

All you Nelson Eddy Fans will be happy with his new Columbia album, "By Request." There are eight sides, including "Without A Song," "Great Day," and "Strange Music." Robert Armbruster's orchestra provides the background.

Don't miss Benny Goodman's new record of "Gotta Be This Or That." It's done in two parts, featuring both the band and the trio, and Benny does one of his rare vocals on the first side. This number was one of the most requested during B.G.'s engagement at the 400 Club in New York.

DECCA:

Here's Bing Crosby, with John Scott Trotter's orchestra, doing the two hit tunes from "Out Of This World"—the title song—and "June Comes Around Every Year." In the picture you'll see Eddie Bracken do these numbers, but you'll actually hear The Groaner's voice.

Bing also teams up with Louis Jordan and His Tympany Five for a little jamming on "My Baby Said Yes," and "Your Socks Don't Match."

"Can't You Read Between The Lines?" and "Negra Consentida" (My Pet Brunette) are done by Jimmy Dorsey and his orchestra. Jean Cromwell, Jimmy's new vocalist, does the first side, and she and Teddy Walters share honors on the reverse.

Carmen Cavallaro and his orchestra have recorded "Enlloro" and "Chopin's Polonaise," with Carmen doing a piano solo on both. "Polonaise" was the most popular of the Chopin selections in the picture, "Song To Remember."

Decca is releasing another album in their Brunswick Collectors' Series. This time it's "Louis Armstrong Jazz Classics." There are eight sides, including some of the historic recordings of the twenties, with such bands as Johnny Dodds' Black Bottom Stompers, Lill's Hot Shots, Erskine Tate's Vendome Orchestra and the Red Onion Jazz Babies.

The Merry Macs step forth with "Sentimental Journey" and "Choo Choo Polka." The Macs have a new girl in the group, Virginia Rees, who formerly sang with Horace Heidt. Marjorie Garland, the former canary, left the Macs because she wanted to try pictures.

The Mad Mab, Charlie Barnet, has two new ones, "Any Old Time," and "There's No You."

Decca's album of "The Snow Goose" doesn't come under the heading of popular music by any manner of means, but it's a beautiful thing, and a set I'm sure you'll want in your collection. The Paul Gallico story has been recorded by Herbert Marshall and Joan Loring, with a fine supporting cast, and a lovely musical score composed and directed by Victor Young.

VICTOR:

Artie Shaw and his orchestra have two good instrumentals, "Little Jazz" and "September Song," the beautiful tune from "Knickerbocker Holiday."

"The More I See You" and "I Miss Your Kiss" have been waxed by Sammy Kaye and his Swing and Sway boys. Sally Stuart sings the first side and Billy Williams does the second.

Dinah Shore's newest is "Along The Navajo Trail" and "Counting The Days," with Albert Sack's orchestra.

Tommy Dorsey and his band have done "June Comes Around Every Year" and "Out Of This World," with Stuart Foster doing both vocals.

"Mood To Be Wooed" and "Kissing Bug" are the latest additions to Duke Ellington's disc list. Joya does the singing on "Kissing Bug," and Johnnie Hodges plays his usual fine brand of alto sax on the "Mood" side—which melody, incidentally, he wrote with the Duke.

Martha Stewart has two ballads this month, "There's No You" and the oldie, "She's Funny That Way," with Lewis Martin's orchestra.

Wayne King is back on wax with his first record since his discharge from the Navy—"My Mother's Waltz" sung by Nancy Evans, and "Remember When," with a vocal by George Devron.

Vaughn Monroe steps forth with "So-o-o In Love," which he sings with Rosemary Calvin, and "All At Once," which he does alone.

The King Sisters have combined with Buddy Cole's orchestra for "Sweetheart Of All My Dreams" and "A Tender World Will Mend It All."

There's Electricity in the Air when the red light goes on and the musicians start making records. Trumpeter Billy Butterfield, at left, conducts his brilliant reed section through one of eight colorful renditions of songs by the late George Gershwin which have just been released in a Capitol Album Set. Billy is one of many famous artists who records exclusively for the Capitol label.

Learning Lyrics is a task all singers face, and Peggy Lee memorizes hers as she prepares to make a master. Miss Lee's current hit disc is titled "You Was Right, Baby." You're right—it's another Capitol exclusive!

Double-barreled Johnny Mercer not only wrote the lyrics of the hit tune "On The Atchison, Topeka & Santa Fe" for M.G.M.'s "Harvey Girls," he also recorded it in the company of the Pied Pipers. Capitol's singing prexy now has another hit on his hands.

Jerry Colonna concentrates on the musical score as he faces the microphone to platter "Bell Bottom Trousers" with Paul Weston's orchestra. The famed comedian is completely "at home" making records. Even without Bob Hope.

CAPITOL:

The juke box queen, Jo Stafford, has a swell new platter in "A Friend Of Yours," the ballad from the movie, "The Great John L.," and the old standard, "On The Sunny Side Of The Street." Paul Weston's orchestra and The Pied Pipers give musical assistance.

"My First, My Last, My Only" and "There You Are" are the ballads chosen by Andy Russell for his new one. Andy sings "My First," etc., both in Spanish and English. Weston's band and arrangements.

Benny Carter's waxing of "Malibu" and "I Surrender Dear" shows off his versatility. Benny plays an alto sax solo on the first side and a trumpet solo on the second.

Here's a new Capitol album, this time entitled "Music For Dreaming." It features Paul Weston and his orchestra, and the tunes are "If I Love Again," "My Blue Heaven," "So Beats My Heart," "I Only Have Eyes For You," "Rain," "Don't Blame Me," "I'm In The Mood For Love," and "Out of Nowhere."

JAM NOTES:

Randy Brooks' orchestra is causing plenty of talk in the trade. It's one of the best of the new bands, and unless I miss my guess, Randy will climb right to the top. Brooks first made a name for himself in Les Brown's trumpet section.

Frank Sinatra should be overseas by the time you read this, doing his swoon songs for the G.I.'s. Before he left Frank was kept busy denying rumors—(1) that he and Nancy were divorcing, (2) that he and Nancy were expecting another baby, and (3) that he was going back on the Hit Parade. While he's gone, his pal and arranger, Axel Stordahl, will take it easy and spend as much time as possible indulging in his favorite sport, sailing.

Clyde McCoy is out of the Navy after three years of service, and will probably organize a band again. . . . Perry Como is happy about his golf score. He is now shooting in the low eighties. . . . Vic Mizzy and Mann Curtis, the song writers whose "My Dreams Are Getting Better All The Time" has been one of the biggest hits of the past season, are crossing their fingers on their new tune, "Oh!. She Lied To Me."

When Marion Hutton signed a contract with the "Romance, Rhythm and Ripley" program, she leased a house on Long Island. The landlord would only let her have it for thirteen weeks—the length of her radio deal—but he promised her that if her option was picked up on the air show, he would also extend the rental time on her house, so Marion is hoping her option is renewed. . . . Charlie Spivak didn't make his second picture for Twentieth Century-Fox, because they had no script ready for him. But they paid him twenty thousand dollars anyway.

When Ethel Smith returned to the Hit Parade program recently, her contract called for thirty-five hundred dollars a week. Just a year and a half ago, when Ethel made her first appearance on the Saturday night show, she was paid three hundred and fifty dollars a week. . . . It's a safe bet that Andy Russell will take the big leap with Della Norelle when his divorce is final in October. Della and Andy have been holding hands for a long time now, and she wears a beautiful diamond ring on the correct finger, placed there by Andy.

Jack Owens, the cruising crooner on the Breakfast Club show over the Blue Network, is being considered for the lead in the film version of "One Touch of Venus." The producer of the picture, Sam Coslow, was the first song publisher to turn down Jack's tune, "The Hut Sut Song," a few years ago. Of course the song turned out to be a big hit—but Jack is hoping that Coslow won't turn him down this time. . . . Carl Ravazza recently signed a terrific deal with the Roxy Theatre in New York. He will play there six months a year for the next three years. . . . Cootie Williams, the trumpet man, has signed a record deal with his band for Capitol. . . . Good news for Joan Leslie fans is the announcement that Warner Bros. has signed her to portray Marilyn Miller in their new musical, "Silver Lining." Story is based on the life of the late musical comedy star.

That brings us up to date for now. I'll see you all next month. In the meantime, if you have any musical queries, drop me a line and I'll answer them for you, if they're not too involved. And remember, if you have any ideas or suggestions for the column, send them along too. Just address JILL WARREN, MOVIELAND MAGAZINE, 1476 Broadway, New York City 18, New York.

THE PERILS OF MAUREEN

eleven months old daughter, Bronwyn; for it was maid's day out and nurse's day off, and Maureen's day off from the studio. She was being Mrs. Price and mother to Bronwyn, in action.

"I've had to fight, in the past few months, as I never had to fight before. In ways that I'd never thought would be necessary for me. The reasons for my having to fight were my own fault and negligence and lack of thought. It will never happen again, I can tell you. From here on the 'perils of Maureen' are over, and I'll watch my career, and what people say about me, more carefully.

"Just call me 'misunderstood Annie.' In the past year I have heard more fabulous things said about me. O'Hara is cold. She always appears in those costume pictures, because she has bad legs. O'Hara is fat, O'Hara is thin. O'Hara is going to leave the screen. O'Hara is going to have another baby. She can't act. She has no sex appeal. She talks too much, she doesn't talk enough. That O'Hara is too good to walk on the lot; she has to drive her car. Who does she think she is, Garbo?

"That last I admit to," Maureen said, grinning as she came to the end of her recitation of all that's been said about her. "Not the Garbo part, but the driving on the lot. I went to work in December, and was quite ill, and the doctor asked the studio if I couldn't drive my car on the lot because he didn't want me to have to walk too much. The studio agreed, naturally; for they wanted me to be able to do my work and not hold up production on the picture. Still, I couldn't explain the situation to everyone. So, I said nothing."

Maureen settled down then for a good long chat on her misunderstood cycle. Teacup firmly in hand and Miss Bronwyn playing quietly in her play pen, she carried on. "Do you know what is cold death in Hollywood?" she asked. "It's to have someone say you have no sex appeal! All right, so you can act, but you have no sex appeal. I didn't have it. Never had had, and never could have it. Those pin-up pictures I had autographed and sent out were my head with another somebody's body, I'm sure. How else could I hide my piano legs?

"I was going to have another baby. That one I fought on. My husband has been overseas for more than a year, and it made me 'Irish mad' to have anyone suggest more family. I guess it's about time that I tell you that I didn't just take those accusations and let them ride. Not after the baby story; that was the final straw.

"Up to this point, I'd taken all of the jibes at me, and said nothing. I'd been six years getting to the position I'm supposed to have now on the screen. I had watched other actresses hit that spot and had heard the idle gossip about them. When it first started to hit me, I thought: 'Perhaps I'm becoming more important. Important enough for people to take digs at me.' A silly attitude, I say now.

"Quite innocently, I'd gone to a supper party one night, given for me to celebrate a new dress. This dress, let it be explained, was actually the first 'personal wardrobe' I had purchased in over two years. All the time I was carrying my baby I had just three maternity costumes, all extremely moderately priced. After the baby came, I wore my regular wardrobe. Finally Will wrote me from overseas and told me he thought I should have a glamour dress to celebrate his birthday, even if he weren't to be with me. I had Eddie Stevenson, fashion expert at RKO, design a dress for me. My agents gave me a party to celebrate the occasion.

"It was such fun, and I had a glorious time. Next day I asked the photographers who had been to the party to give me prints of the pictures they'd taken, to send to my husband. They did. A few weeks later I began getting letters from people all over the country saying I shouldn't have been out with men while my husband was overseas. You see, I had made the mistake of being photographed with a man other than my husband.

"The people were right. Although the people at the party were all friends of mine, and of Will's, still the published pictures gave the wrong impression to many people who did not know. In Hollywood, it gave more justification to the gossip about me. It was an indication to me that I must conduct my life in an entirely different pattern, with an eye to keeping in mind what other people think and say.

"I realized that I had been off the screen for a year. That although I held one of the best contracts on the Fox lot, hardly any of the producers knew me personally. Surely some of the gossip had reached them and their belief in me could be a bit dubious. When you hear stories about people you hardly know, you are inclined to believe them. I had begun to believe some of them myself.

"In the first place, I was working at RKO Studio in 'The Spanish Main'—and it was a costume picture. One day I caught myself in front of the mirror looking at my legs. Now I know my legs will never match Miss Dietrich's, but here I was looking at what people called piano legs. I called the publicity director and asked him if I couldn't go to the still gallery and have some pictures taken.

"It has always been one of my rules never to take 'leg art.' I come from a strict Irish family and had always felt they wouldn't understand. Also, I didn't think it was exactly my type of publicity. However, in this instance, not only was my career involved, but my confidence in myself. We got the most attractive play suits we could find and did a fashion layout. Johnny Miehle, the cameraman, whistled when he saw the first costume and shot about forty pictures. My confidence was restored and the resultant pictures justified my contention that my legs were not 'piano.'

"Next I began to go to my own studio. By that time I was preparing for my role in 'Kitten on the Keys.' My confidence in myself was restored when Mr. Ratoff, the director of the picture, began to talk around the studio about my acting ability. As I lunched in the studio commissary the producers I had hardly known began to call me 'Maureen' instead of the formal 'Miss O'Hara.' I realized then that the gossip about me was founded on the fact that hardly any of those people knew me, and as a result, couldn't have had any confidence.

"Now Fox is planning to make all my dreams come true. They are giving me a real acting role in 'Razor's Edge,' one of their finest story properties. All this to a girl whom they were dubious about, just six months ago. I had come out of my shell, which I myself had built around me, and was finding the world a pretty nice place after all."

I asked Maureen how she got into this shell and what had caused it. Sitting there in her favorite chair, chatting in a friendly natural way, she didn't seem to be a girl who would build walls around herself.

"I suppose I am not really a good movie star or career woman," she explained, "for my home comes first with me. My husband, baby and home first, career last. This I know is basically sound—at least for me—but I went too far to one side. I had naturally been with my husband as long as he was in this country. This the studio understood and made every allowance for. I had had time off to have Bronwyn and to be with her when she was a very small baby. After Will left I just stayed in my small circle of friends. This is all right for Miss Garbo—it's her type—but I don't think it's mine.

"Now everything is all right. My husband is overseas, he is safe, I write to him three times a day and hear from him whenever he can, which is quite often. Bronwyn is almost walking, and will be, by the time Will comes home, and my career is going like sixty. Again I am a balanced person and all is right with the world.

"I feel strongly that I am going to be a better wife to Will now, for I have learned the balance that all career women must have, especially those who are married. Will likes my career, he is proud of my achievements; but I know he disapproved of my drawing in a shell. When he comes home he will find that I have progressed and have widened my horizons, both mentally and materially, just as he has—and this is what he wanted for me. As for my career, it is working on a firmer foundation, for I am working with people who know me and whom I know. I have learned a good lesson and am grateful."

The End

TOOTING LENA'S HORN

tion. When she sings about love, that's love, and you've heard all about it!

"She is a lovely feminine creature, simple and unaffected, and she endows her songs with those same qualities. Admittedly she has great physical charm and sex appeal, yet oddly enough, she rarely evokes whistles or other demonstrations of masculine approval despite her provocative allure. The answer to that, I think, is that she never flaunts her sex but handles it rather with dignity and restraint; you know there is dynamite there, and you hear it in her songs, but you never see it manifested through any overt move on her part. It's one reason why women like her so sincerely; she doesn't take advantage of an obvious advantage. She doesn't press.

"The main thing Lena needed when she first came to us was someone or something to build her own confidence in herself. She had had so many tough breaks, she was a licked girl in her own mind. Strangely enough, some of that inferiority complex still exists in her today, even after her sensational success. Not long ago she was aghast to see six violins in the orchestra which was to accompany one of her musical numbers.

"'Six violins for me!', she cried, quite as if such a thing were beyond belief and certainly undeserved. That, I think, is one of her greatest qualities. Many people prove they can take failure, but few prove they know how to take success. Lena does."

Another ardent Horne fan is William Spier, who handles all radio matters at M-G-M and is the producer of the radio thriller, "Suspense," on which Lena recently was starred. It was an event of terrific importance to Lena, for it was the first time a performance of hers was judged on merit alone; she was announced only as the star of the play, without reference to her race. The response, incidentally, was phenomenal.

It likewise was an event of great importance to Spier, he said, for it gave him a chance to know Lena better, to plumb depths he did not know she possessed.

"Until we did the 'Suspense' show my contact with Lena had been rather superficial," Spier said. "I had met her at the studio and my chief impression was of her terrific beauty with tremendous life, power and magnetism back of it. She reminded me of a panther, with its strength all sheathed. Once I began to work with her, however, I soon discovered that added ingredient that makes you aware, not what a beautiful colored girl she is, but what a remarkable woman. And that's what came over the air. Just as Dietrich, Orson Welles, or Charles Boyer are sharply profiled and different from the everyday hero or heroine, so Lena is different from the average, run-of-the-mill artist. Even the cadence and heft of her voice is highly personalized.

"She is an intelligent woman with a quick mind which absorbs new things readily and thoroughly, yet with it she has almost a child-like enthusiasm for every new discovery, and a child-like belief in everything top of a high cliff, the sweep of ocean in front is superb. We will have ideal surf bathing as soon as I finish hewing the steps down the side of the cliff to the beach. With high rocks jutting out on either side, we will be certain of privacy.

"I feel rather proud of the paving job in the patio. The brick, mellowed and smooth from use and age, gives a delightful effect."

Like most of the material that went into the house, the brick came from a second hand dealer.

On the side of the house opposite from the patio, Vincent prepared the ground for "Edi's flower bed."

"We put a row of herbs as well as a variety of vegetables along one side," said Vincent. "The seven foot redwood planks set on end and, driven into the ground around the garden, make a solid wall.

"The cottage, built entirely of redwood, called for simple furniture. Unable to buy what I wanted, I hauled in more redwood and made it myself. Frames for springs and mattresses provide three couches for the day and beds at night. Shelves are decorative and take the place of chests and cupboards. A couple of tables, a few benches and stools, and the furniture was completed.

"The couch covers and pillows are the one touch of elegance. When I couldn't buy the material I had in mind, I ripped up a couple of Mandarin robes. The copper hued silk of one and the deep sapphire blue of the other make splashes of rich color. Each sleeve, cut in two and sewed up at either end, made four oversized pillow covers.

"Located some twenty miles above Malibu and back from the main highway, we are beyond telephone and power line wires.

Kerosene lamps hang from the ceilings. The cooking is done on an oil burner stove.

"That stove is a honey," beamed Vincent who loves to cook. "Last Sunday the chicken I roasted browned to perfection."

Edith and Vincent have a knack for entertaining, whether it's a formal dinner in their attractive Beverly Hills home, Sunday supper at the beach or brunch at his studio apartment.

Vincent turned this two room apartment—built at the rear of a garage located at the end of a dead end street—into a comfortable workshop. A yellow table, shaded by a matching umbrella, with canvas chairs, turn the tiny patch of lawn into a patio. This is his hide-away when absorbed in studying a new part or working on a painting.

In the pullman kitchen, with only a couple of gas burners to cook over, he prepares the delicious creamed chicken that is passed to his friends in the kettle it is cooked in.

It is Edith who plans the delicious home dinners. When without a cook she often goes into the kitchen and prepares the meal.

Knowing Vincent's taste for good food, it was interesting to learn how he went about losing the twenty pounds the studio asked him to shed before starting "Dragonwyck."

"I like good eats too well to struggle along on a skim milk and fruit juice diet," he said. "Shrimps, I knew, were low in calories and high in iodine. A wonderful combination for anyone trying to loose weight. Since I never tire of shrimps, I ate them, curried or cooked in tomato sauce, each day for lunch. With a green salad, I had a perfect meal. Crisp bacon, which I love, with fruit and black coffee, made a low calorie yet appetizing breakfast. Dinner was easy. A chop, a steak, a green cooked vegetable, a fresh green salad and fruit.

"Although this diet took off twenty pounds, I wouldn't advise anyone else to try it, unless they consulted a doctor."

Vincent's new slenderness was set off to advantage in the ruffled shirt, close fitting long tailed coat and tight trousers he wore as he came off the set after he had finished his love scene with Gene Tierney.

"I am happier and more contented than I have ever been in my life," he said. "The widely divergent parts the studio have given me have been stimulating and challenging.

"I loved playing the Imperial Prosecutor in the "Song of Bernadette." The soldier in "The Eve of St. Mark" was an entirely new venture for me. Although I had little to do, I thoroughly enjoyed playing Mr. McAdoo in "Wilson." The part of the priest in "Keys of the Kingdom" was intriguing. And I had so much fun making "Laura," that it seemed a crime to take money for it. There was never a dull moment while we were making "A Royal Scandal" with Tallulah Bankhead. And now, I am doing my first romantic role in "Dragonwyck."

"Ever since I can remember, I have wanted to be an actor. Only love for my parents and respect for their wishes could have kept me in college until I won my Bachelor's degree at Yale. But Dad knew I would never settle down in St. Louis and carry on with him in the candy business.

"My first job was singing coach and apprentice teacher at the Riverdale Country School in New York. My spare time was spent making the rounds of the theatrical agencies.

"After a year of 'Come back and see us when you have had some experience,' I decided I was wasting time. It was then I decided to follow Dad's advice and go over to London for special work in the London University. There was a chance that I could kill two birds with one stone. If unknown actors from London, coming to the New York stage could become overnight Broadway favorites—as I had seen them do—why couldn't I?"

Three months after his arrival in London, Vincent was appearing in the stage production of "Chicago". When the producer started casting for his new show "Victoria Regina," he chose Vincent to play the part of Prince Albert. Later, when New York producer Gilbert cast his Broadway version of the same play starring Helen Hayes, he sent for Vincent to play the part he had been successful with on the London stage.

"I had the thrill of walking down the gang plank of the boat that brought me home, with the contract for a Broadway show in my pocket," said Vincent.

After three years of the successful run of that play, Vincent was an established actor.

This good-looking, broad-shouldchap, who stands six feet, four inches, has always been a favorite with the ladies. Not until he met the charming Edith Barrett, star of such Broadway hits as "Mrs. Moonlight" and "Michael And Mary," did Vincent contemplate matrimony. So deeply in love was he with Edith, that he refused to consider any of the tempting offers Hollywood was holding out to him, until she consented to marry him and go with him.

"While both of us liked making pictures, we were not quite ready to give up the New York stage," said Vincent. After one picture at Universal, they returned to New York to appear together in a Broadway show.

With Vincent's love for change and adventure, Mr. and Mrs. Price were back in Hollywood the following year. That was the year Barrett was born. Motherhood now became far more important to Edith than her career. Talented actress that she was, she refused to sign any contract. With domestic help becoming more and more a problem, she refused to leave her little son alone with questionable supervision.

But the Price family was not yet ready to settle down in California. When the stage production of "Angel Street," in which Vincent had the male lead, moved from Hollywood to New York, Vincent found himself in another Broadway hit. With the show going into its second year, Vincent leased a charming house overlooking the Hudson River, furnishing it lavishly. Edith and Barrett came on from their California beach home.

But it wasn't long before Vincent's love of change again made him restless. He asked to be released from the show and once more the Price family was back in the film colony. Shortly after their arrival, Vincent signed a long term contract with 20th Century-Fox.

This week Vincent bought a home in Benedict Canyon in Beverly Hills. "Its an old, rambling, unique brick house," he beamed, "set in an acre of ground. Both the house and the grounds have been terribly neglected. I intend to do the improvements myself. Its going to be lots of fun."

Already Vincent's canyon neighbors are familiar with the little, dark blue Austin, from which the long-legged blonde actor unfolds himself.

"I get fifty miles to the gallon from my little car," says Vincent. "Without it I would be unable to run around the way I do."

It looks as though Vincent has found work that holds his interest. That at last he has found contentment and happiness in making pictures and establishing his home in southern California. THE END hand through the air, he put his horse through all manner of paces. Gary specializes in such gentle jokes, making a day pass rapidly.

He has a very serious side, too. One of his pet lecturing subjects is the training of youngsters (and oldsters if they haven't learned earlier) how properly to handle a gun. Gary has handled guns of all types since he was a nipper, and he believes vehemently that 97% of all gun accidents could be prevented if those handling firearms could be impressed with the deadliness of such instruments, and if they were drilled in the cautious use of them at all times. This is the one subject on which I have ever heard calm, easygoing Gary become vehement.

And now, to go away back in my history, may I mention Nils Asther—my first leading man—who grew vehement on a different subject?

As I have already said, I wangled my way into pictures in order to escape ordinary school. Had I known that, when my true age was learned I would promptly be enrolled in studio school, I might not have been so eager to become an actress.

Taking advantage of my sister's inability to accept a part, I went to work. I told the studio officials that I was eighteen. Nice going, I thought, when no one appeared to doubt this stretching of chronology. I was thirteen at the time, and needed the year's coaching that was given me.

My initial effort as a leading woman was applied, at the age of fourteen, to my role in "Laugh, Clown, Laugh." In one scene I was to indicate extreme admiration for Mr. Asther. The director was very graphic. "Now here is the situation, Loretta," he said patiently. "You're in love with this man. You adore him. You are living in the closest possible relationship with him. I want to know, as an audience, your blinding love for him the instant he steps into the room."

Love! As far as I was concerned, at fourteen, love was something of which I had seen a picture on a magazine cover. But I tried. I gathered that I should appear excited, and as nearly as I could remember, excitement always made me breathe rapidly.

Well, the scene didn't go so very well, as you may imagine. Finally, Nils drew me off the set for a brief talk. And this is where vehemence enters the story. "Look," he said in that last-gasp-of-patience voice one hears from a long-suffering man, "don't heave. PLEASE! Don't heave. Just stand there and look at me as if I were a hot fudge sundae with pecans and glace pineapple. But DON'T HEAVE."

Er—so I didn't heave. We finally photographed the scene with me thinking of an ice cream counter delicacy. You can see why you musn't trust motion picture love scenes!

I believe that my next picture was with that current naval hero, Doug Fairbanks, Jr., who seemed—even at that time—to be a most remarkable person, because the instant we finished a scene, he scorched to the telephone. Either he had a crucial call to make, or someone had called him and was holding the wire. This telephonic activity impressed me immeasurably and I once asked him if any of the calls were "long distance." I don't recall the specific answer, but I do remember that my naiveté caused him to ask me how old I was. Naturally, I said eighteen.

On a recent CBS broadcast. Loretta makes a hobby of color photography in spare time.

In the ensuing years, Doug and I made several pictures together, but eventually the truth of my actual age had seeped out. By that time, however, I actually WAS 18. So, in the course of conversation on the set one day, that fact was mentioned. Doug gave me one of those looks one sees in comic strips being bestowed upon a fat lady who has just sat most obesely upon a gentleman's silk topper. "And then your age stood still!" he parodied. From that day to this, I never see Doug without being greeted as follows: "Well, hello, my 18-year-old beauty." Nowadays this causes me no pain.

"Ramona," the first picture in which I worked with Don Ameche, was notable for two reasons. It was Don's first picture although he was a master of radio technique. During our early exceedingly difficult weeks I did all in my power to help Don, who is a very serious craftsman. I taught him all I knew. Little did I imagine that the time would come when Don would return the favor with interest. When I was signed for a radio spot several years later, Don coached me.

The second remarkable thing about the picture is that—for the only time in either my personal or my picture life—I antagonized a fellow player beyond repair. If you saw the picture, you will undoubtedly remember the beautiful baby who took the part of my child. (In the story the baby was a girl, of course, but this male infant was so adorable that we used him.)

I was quite maudlin about him, so—between scenes one day—I went over, leaned down, and started to pick him up. I was wearing a wig distinguished by two long, black braids; one of the braids swung out and slapped the baby squarely in the face. He uttered a blast of protest that brought his indignant mother running. She quieted the baby after a few moments—he had been frightened, but certainly not injured—but from that time on, it was useless for me to try to work with him. At the first sight of my wig he would give a Comanche yell and cry until I was out of sight. We had to get a stand-in baby for him. (I imagine that he will one day marry a blonde without knowing where he acquired his aversion to brunettes.)

After that I actually had an inferiority complex about my charm for babies until my adorable adopted daughter, Judy, was placed in my arms and paid me the compliment of giving me what I fondly translated as a smile.

During that celebrated period between my 13th and my 18th birthdays, I was smacked into studio school. One day, on location, when I was working in a picture with Richard Barthelmess, I was struggling with my spelling lesson. To this day I can't spell catt without wondering if I have used enough t's, and the situation was even worse in those days. Twisting and squirming in my canvas chair, I was in desperate hand-to-hand combat with the noun "opportunity."

In answer to the teacher's requirement, I was trying to turn it out in accepted fashion. First I spelled it "opor. . . ." Then I tried "opper. . ."

Dick (who, like Douglas is now doing a brilliant job in the Navy) happened to pass at this moment. "Never mind, honey," he said. "You actually don't need to know how to spell it, if you simply learn how to take advantage of it."

That was a bit of witty, offhand advice that I have never forgotten.

Ronald Colman! Ah, Mr. Colman. When I was ten, I was standing on a street corner one Saturday afternoon—waiting for the signal to change—when Mr. Colman drew up to the intersection in his car and stopped. My lower jaw dropped—I couldn't collect it—and I stared. Frankly and freely I admit it. A gaze as intent as mine would have penetrated the dust-bound consciousness of a mummy, so it isn't remarkable that Mr. Colman turned to look at me. It would have been impossible for anyone, particularly so sensitive a man as Mr. Colman, to mistake my dazzled adoration.

Smiling, he lifted his hat. "Good afternoon, my dear," he said. And he drove away, leaving me rooted to the spot. When I finally regained partial consciousness, I marched out into the street against the signal, was almost run down by a truck, but at length reached home in a state of befuddled ecstasy. Ah, the glistening idols of one's terrific tenth year!

When I was cast in the first picture in which I worked with Mr. Colman. "The Devil To Pay," I had not entirely forgotten my case of junior mesmerization. But, thank Heaven, I was somewhat better able to disguise my admiration.

Making the picture was fun because Ronnie is one of the smoothest craftsmen in the business. And after the picture was finished, he sent me—for Christmas—a black suede bag decorated with marquisette. I regarded it as the most important gift I had ever received. But my best gift—even surpassing that purse—was Ronnie's response to my thanks for the gift. "It is I who should thank you," he said. "Because I find it so pleasant to send a gift to someone whom I really admire." Ah, kings are paupers, and Helen of Troy was an ugly old wench! Only a girl complimented by Mr. Colman is rich and lovely.

Spencer Tracy, with whom I worked in "Man's Castle" is a brilliant workman. As you undoubtedly realize, he plays everything down, he strives constantly to keep a tone of verisimilitude to everyday life in everything he does. I think the nicest compliment that can be paid an actor, is the one most frequently paid Spence: "He's always so natural."

In "Man's Castle," he had to carry the burden of the plot. About all I had to do was to react to everything he said, which is by way of explaining that there were dozens of closeups of me, just expressing, wordlessly, some emotion. Finally, one afternoon, Spencer began to laugh. "This picture," he announced, "will be famed for magnificent Young closeups, while that Tracy guy tells lines—to which no one will be paying any attention—from the sidelines." That was a pretty handsome tribute when you realize that Tracy is the best in his line, and that I was just a kid, getting along. Wonderful person, that Tracy.

In "Suez" I worked with Tyrone Power, one of many times. It was always fun to be cast with Ty because he is not only a gifted actor, but a gentleman with an extremely agile mind.

He is dynamic. He used to bounce onto the set, eyes twinkling, grin shining, his entire attitude alert. He liked to play brain-busting word games such as "Animal, Vegetable & Mineral." He was so good that neither Anabella nor I had much chance to win from him.

One night at home I decided that I was going to stump the intellectual Mr. Power the next day. I went through my dictionary until I came upon that beautiful word, "bauxite." It is the mineral, my dictionary said, in which aluminum is contained. Properly pronounced "beau-zite", it is frequently mispronounced.

Aha! I thought. I had you this time, my friend. Even if you know the word, chances are that you will mispronounce it.

There is no point in making a long story of it, because you've guessed the finale. Ty hit upon my "valuable mineral beginning with B" without a second's hesitation—pronounced it correctly, too.

While I was working in "Shanghai" with Charles Boyer, I was planning a trip to Europe with my mother. I couldn't talk of anything else. Mrs. Boyer, at Charles' suggestion, prepared a letter of introduction to Mainbocher, a gesture that nearly thrilled me to death.

I was reading guide books on the set, and extracting every bit of French lore I could from everyone I knew. Charles would spend hours telling me about the romantic spots of France. "Wait until you are actually on the boat," he would say.

The last day of shooting, as we all said goodbye, Charles told me, "I'll get in touch with you at your hotel in Paris. I'll have them notify me as soon as you register."

I laughed, told him that would be wonderful, and thought no more about it, discounting his statement as jest.

But, you can imagine the thrill Mother and I had when Charles and Pat actually arrived at our hotel the first night we were in France, and carried us off to dinner. He asked where I wanted to go, and I said proudly, "Escargot." And there I ate the item of food of which I had long read: snails. Liked them, too. But Charles, that true Frenchman, wouldn't join me. Said he had never been able to stand them.

When I was working with Alan Ladd in "China" I celebrated my birthday. I had mentioned it casually a day or so before the date when a group of us were talking astrology, but I hadn't given it much thought. Alan is a quiet, serious, hard-working chap who always sees, hears, and understands more than many of his fellow players realize.

The afternoon of my birthday, a wonderful cake—candles lit—was delivered to the set and an impromptu party, all of Alan's arranging, developed. You can imagine how surprised and genuinely touched I was at such thoughtfulness.

Well, just a year later, we happened to be working together again on "And Now Tomorrow," but I had learned my lesson, so said nothing of the date. Yet, on the afternoon of my birthday, here came a cake about twice the size of the original. And we had another celebration. Alan hadn't forgotten! No wonder everyone who knows Alan well, says that Sue has one of the prize husbands in Hollywood.

Sometimes I have noticed that the things we do while making a picture turn out to be prophecies about our future. Take, for instance, that raw morning in Washington State, when our troupe was on location to make "Call Of The Wild." The rest of us were all ready to go to work, but we were waiting for Clark Gable. Finally he appeared from his cabin at the top of the hill. "What on earth kept you so long?" demanded the director.

Clark looked surprised. "I had to make my bed, didn't I?" he asked reasonably. I wonder if, when he was making his army bed, he ever thought of that location trip?

During that location the weather was so bad, and it was so difficult to get the necessary footage, that several of the men would occasionally forget themselves and indulge in a little pressure-relieving profanity. Clark got a billy-club for me. "The next time you hear anything offensive," he said, "just tap the offender on the head."

A few days later something annoying happened while Clark was making a shot. He controlled himself marvelously. He didn't utter a syllable. But, his eyes tossing sparks, he marched over to me and handed me the club. "Hit me for what I'm thinking," he ordered.

I can honestly say that there is no man with whom I have worked who has ever needed to use a billy-club on me for what I was thinking about my co-worker. I'm proud of my list of fellow players, and I enjoy remembering our work together. And, just to give this record a future, I'll be honest and admit that I hope some day to work opposite Gregory Peck, Cornel Wilde, and Alexander Knox.

in the little sketch the boys were putting on for Ladies' Night or the Union picnic. Encourage him and he'll even drag out pictures—a little faded, but you can see why he 'stopped the show.'

"Women are play-acting all the time—consciously or subconsciously. Every time a woman puts on a new dress, or new make-up or gets a different hair-do, she's seeing herself in a new role. Every female has her stage, whether its her home or the business world, and she does her best to live up to it. It's what keeps her interesting and lovely.

"As for humans in general—well, a person is acting every time he crosses a room and tries not to look self-conscious. Luckily there are only a few of us weak enough to give in to the urge as a steady thing."

The views expressed by Mr. Cotten are not necessarily those of this typewriter nor the magazine sponsoring it. All that can be stated definitely is that the "urge" for Mr. Cotten's acting has long shown danger of becoming epidemic. That high breeze which has sprung up periodically on the West coast for the last four years or so, is rumored to be vacuum created by Joe rushing from one studio to another, taking his pick of the various roles offered him.

One reason for his success, no doubt, is that this Beau from Broadway is so entirely happy in his chosen profession. Or at least, he used to be so happy. . . .

"I never turn down a part just because I don't think I'll like it," he formerly had a habit of saying. "How can I be sure I don't like it until I've tried it? It takes away the fun if you have too definite ideas of what you will and won't do. I'd rather let the producers plan my schedule—you get more surprises that way."

Currently, it must be admitted, Joe is not a conspicuously happy man. It has to do with his role in "Duel In the Sun," a camera-chore which surprised him not so much as it stunned him.

The usual method by which the usual actor accepts or rejects his roles, says he, is very simple. The actor picks up the script, sees on the first page it is a costume picture with tight pants and such . . . sees on Page 15 where he has to grow a Van Dyke . . . and on Page 40 where he must fight a duel with three expert swordsmen . . . and after hurriedly computing the time and trouble of costume fittings, beard fittings and fencing lessons, faces the producer sadly, "Sorry, old man—I just can't feel myself in the part!"

Or, says he, the guy thumbs through quickly, sees where the hero wears one suit all through the picture, that old blue sack suit of his will do . . . notes on Page 36 where hero hasn't shaved for three days, and excitedly thumps the producer on the back, "A great character! What writing—what feeling! Confidentially, I think I was made for it."

That's the ordinary thespian, mind you, but not Joe, who has prided himself on being more conscientious about the thing. Since coming to pictures it has been his practice to carefully read each and every page of every script, and sometimes twice.

"I have a terrible premonition," he oft explained, "I know some day I will pick up a script and there, printed clearly, will be a line of direction saying, 'At this point Harald comes charging up on his horse.' At this point Cotten will drop the script and run like mad. Any horse even half as scared of me as I am of him wouldn't be able to charge a step."

Everybody has their worries, and most of them never happen, but Cotten was moving toward his destiny. Already David Selznick had purchased Niven Busch's best-selling drama of hearts and hooves, and when the time came, Joe found himself a Western hero in the same inevitable manner in which a great many civilians have lately found themselves Army men.

"It's a great character," said Director King Vidor, "interviewing" him first, as a matter of courtesy. "What writing!" Joe had never read the book, but something about Mr. Vidor's opening made him wary.

"Do you ride?" asked Vidor.

"Yeah, my wife does the driving," answered Joe.

"Shoot?" asked Vidor.

"Not since I was sent home from school for my skill with a rubber band and a hunk of gum."

"It's a great part," said Vidor, "virile — red-blooded — out-doorish. Uhh—what qualifications do you think you might have?"

"I blow smoke-rings—" said Joe slyly.

"You're in!" yelled the director. "Just the man we've been looking for!"

'Way back in "The Magnificent Ambersons," Joe had been required to sit in a sleigh and handle the reins for a brief moment. The scene was made even briefer when it was discovered that the horse, under his handling, would go in no direction but 'round and 'round—which was the way the thing finally had to be filmed, and left the reins-man very sick indeed. The fact that the steed of "Duel In the Sun" comes with buggy attached, makes the situation no less horrifying. "If there's anything worse than a horse, it's one with wheels—" is the way he puts it. Moreover, in this latest story, man and animal are the greatest of pals, rarely leaving the house without each other. . . .

His first scene was shot on location in Arizona, seated in the buggy atop a lonely knoll. He clambered into the contraption, braced himself, picked up the reins—and the horse started 'round and 'round. It was at this point, it is claimed, that Cotten jumped. The point is hotly disputed, because, asks Joe, how can a paralyzed man jump? At any rate, the animal was only acting according to direction, but no one had thought to explain the intended action to his unwilling driver.

It's been this way practically through the whole shooting. The story is that of two brothers, with Gregory Peck in the other role. Peck is an expert and even dare-devil horseman, spending a good deal of time with his mount's front hoofs pointed to the sky. Brother's most frequent comment on his performances is "Show-off—!" There was one sequence in which he had to sit and watch Greg fight his rearing, snorting steed and finally be bucked off, almost into his lap. Peck was asked if he wouldn't prefer to use a stunt-man for this hazardous stuff, but refused. But better have a stunt man on call, he said—they might need him to do Cotten's watching for him! Adversely, the experience has given Joe a new interest—Western music. After a deep research, he is currently overcome with the wholesale melancholia of cowboy crooners.

"Nobody ever loves them but their horse—and maybe a few tired little dogies," he notes. "And regardless of the cowpuncher's age or state of health, he is always expecting momentarily to be buried on the lone praar-ee, maybe before the last chorus is over. Too bad those guys never had to squeeze into a New York subway or a Los Angeles bus. They'd know the lone-er the praar-ee, the healthier. . . ."

It's easy to see this Cotten is a fellow who has looked at life and found it zestful, and life undoubtedly feels the same about Cotten. If he wished, he could establish himself as one of the movie colony's real intellectuals. But waving a frail white hand and tossing off pale purple truths is not Joe's idea of an exhilarating existence. Instead, he is a connoisseur of life's little ironies—a fellow who's had his ups and downs and savored them both with a wink.

His ambition to be an actor, or rather, a person who's "allowed to indulge in it," has been a sort of one-track affair, running through most of his life since his high-school days. The child Cotten was forced to wear curls and a velvet Fauntleroy suit to church on Sundays. The school-kid Cotten was dedicated to erasing the memory of those velvet pants from the minds of the unfortunate townspeople of Petersburg, Virginia, where it all took place. It required no great amount of parental persuasion, when after high school he wished to transfer his energies to the Hickman School of Expression in Washington, D. C.

He speaks fondly of those days when he tried hard to learn Yankee talk, and to breathe correctly and speak loudly. "The last part was the easiest—we had to speak loudly to be heard over the riveters next door."

After a year's workout of these various talents, Joe felt he was ready for Broadway, but it was to be several years before Broadway returned the sentiment. The details of the time between is not too important now to his film-fans, except to stress the several times he came dangerously near to being a success in occupations other than acting.

There was a period when, due to financial strain, he was forced into becoming a whiz-bang paint salesman, and he will appreciate it if biographers will refrain from making this the basis for snappy lines such as, "From House Paint to Grease Paint." (Well, we tried!) Later, he made a trek to Florida, struck Miami during its golden era, and found himself being a sort of junior Midas. "Those were the days when you could pick up a handful of money just by introducing a real estate broker to a buyer, or vice versa," he recalls.

It was in Miami, too, that he went into the potato salad business and verged on making a fortune at it. He was rescued from a life of mayonnaise only when the drug stores, hotels et al suddenly discovered they could cut up their own potatoes and onions, and the Tip Top Salad Co. retired from the field with 500,000 wax containers as its sole asset.

All this time, it appears Joe was just warming up for his most significant venture, the one which was to prove that Florida had merely been a detour to Broadway and Hollywood. The project, when it got going, was a sort of three-ring affair which he started by organizing a little theater group with players from the University of Miami, assigning the leads in the productions to himself, and persuading the Miami Herald to let him write the reviews:

"I've never yet found a better way of insuring myself good notices," he insists.

When he left Florida he was richer by (1) letters of introduction to Burns Mantle and David Belasco, and (2) the promise of lovely Lenore Kipp, New York girl gone temporarily Floridian, to marry him. Both turned out to be valid. Belasco gave him that long-wanted start on Broadway. Lenore came through with a no-option contract and signed it Mrs. Cotten, which she is still happily using as her signature today.

There was a period in which he distinguished himself as being the only understudy on record who honestly prayed nothing indisposing would happen to the stars he understudied. He dreaded taking over, because. "After all, this was New York, and someone besides myself would be writing the reviews."

When the notices finally came, however, he found the Manhattan critics could say just as nice things about him as he had himself. Among his legitimate hits were "Absent Father," "Accent on Youth," "The Postman Always Rings Twice," "Philadelphia Story," and of course, his fateful association in the Mercury Theater with Orson Welles.

It was through this, however, that he earned the distinction of being the only established stage-romancer to work his way into the screen's heart-throb class backwards. He rode into the film public's ken in a wheel-chair, playing a sly, cigar-snitching old invalid, with a look of always being about to pinch his nurse on her back-pocket. He acted twice-his-years so well, that in his second and third films ("Lydia" and "Magnificent Ambersons") he was up and able to get about, but still wore collodion wrinkles a part of the time. For the rest of it, he wore a look of frustration, since in neither story was he allowed to win his lady-love at an age when it would spell romance.

In spite of this premature pensioning-off into the character-man class, he began to have a definite following. His presence, folks immediately discovered, had a way of staying with them after the picture was ended—always the measure of a fine actor. Too, both men and women found something pleasantly new in his mind-over-muscle personality. Yet, not until he'd been on the screen more than two years was Joe allowed to act his own age, which is in the middle thirties. After five pictures, the fans finally got a glimpse of what had been going on under all that make-up, and from then on you could walk up to almost any lady and say, "Cotten is going to be good this year," and find a ready-made customer.

Now in the comfortable flush of success, but not too impressed with it, he's a sort of a Puck with a Park Avenue polish. About his increased status in life, he says:

"There's not much difference. It's nice to have some money to spend—but then, I always enjoyed spending money, even when I didn't have it."

Today Cotten can also wet himself down in his own swimming pool, and he spends a lot of his spare time doing so. He's an ace tennis player. His Pacific Palisades home is a comparatively modest one, but his accomplishments as a householder are not. For a time he turned carpenter and currently he has just erected a retaining wall for the pool, the like of which has never been seen hereabouts. It has Mrs. Cotten's entire collection of costume jewelry embedded in the cement, giving off varicolored sparkles in the sun, and demonstrating not only his ingenuity, but his wife's good disposition.

He chooses his friends among people who can talk as well as he does. He's a charming host and enjoys whipping up such ritualistic dishes as Crêpes Suzette and Cherries Jubilee.

The Cotten-Welles friendship is a beautiful, jibing thing, and anyone following them around, jotting down their hot-off-the-griddle sentiments would have something guaranteed to curdle. Recently, when Orson wrote Joe he was lunching with the President at the White House on a Wednesday, Joe wired back, "The war will either be over—or worse—by Thursday!"

Too, there was the occasion of Joe's being best man at the Welles-Hayworth wedding, when the Cotten flair for sartorial elegance almost stole the show. Although the groom's business suit and pink sport shirt, and the bride's corsage-less state showed the haste of the preparations, Joe was something to see in a gray pin-stripe, with boutonniere and gray gloves.

The current "Duel" between horse and Cotten is being filmed in Technicolor. After Joe quits worrying how the fans will like him pale green, he is going to start having premonitions about a musical:

"I used to fancy I could sing, until they persuaded me to have a record made of my voice. It was a desperate measure, but it worked!"

Thus Joe dismisses the possibility of competing with "The Voice"—but the idea is there to haunt him, nonetheless.

so terrible! You call that acting? Ye gods, I call it mayhem! Why do these things happen to me? Why do I have to put up with it? Great balls of fire, I quit! And Miss Garland, I suggest you do the same, and right now!"

Thunderstruck at first, and then white-faced and shaking with fury, Judy strode towards the camera and the small cluster of people hidden in the darkness. Love or no love, there was going to be a pay-off to that insult! As she reached the camera a grinning face popped into view.

"Hello, Judy," the voice said sweetly. "Wonderful scene!"

Judy stopped, and her mouth fell open as she recognized her tormentor. "You fool!" she yelled, and burst into laughter. "You crazy, wonderful fool!"

The voice had been that of Danny Kaye, who had sneaked onto the set unseen and taken a place beside Minelli in the protecting shadow. The two had cooked up the gag together.

Cooking up gags, usually on the spur of the moment as opportunity and his imagination dictates, is as natural and necessary to Danny as drawing breath itself. He has to have fun, and he takes it spontaneously where he finds it, be the object of his gag a visiting dignitary, an American president, or the corner bootblack.

There are two rules he meticulously follows in his gag-making, however; one is born of instinct and the other he learned by experience. He is never malicious in his fun; he may throw people into confusion, momentarily embarrass them, or even exasperate them, but he never hurts them. That's cardinal with Kaye. And he never pulls gags on his wife, Sylvia. That's cardinal too. He knows she is so intense about him and his work, that no laugh would be worth the worry, however brief, it would cause her.

"The name for that," he admits, "is Love."

"Gags By Kaye" was a familiar legend along Broadway for many a moon when Danny was the hit attraction of the Club Martinique, and later in "Let's Face It," the smash musical which brought him to Hollywood's interest and a picture contract. Always impromptu, they struck like lightning—unexpectedly, and never in the same place twice. There was the time, for example, he dropped backstage one matinee of "Banjo Eyes" to call on his old friend, Eddie Cantor. Cantor was in something of a tizzy.

"Sorry, Danny, but we're kind of busy right now," he brushed him off: "One of the chorus boys failed to show up and we're trying to figure out what we can do with the drill number without him."

Danny was affably understanding. "Sure, Pal," he smiled. "I know how it is. See you later," and drifted away.

Came time for the drill number, and Eddie nervously took his place on the stage. Would the hastily revamped number get over or bog down in a mess of miscues? Suddenly a roar of laughter came from the audience and the musicians in the pit. Startled, Eddie took a quick glance over his shoulder to see what was amiss.

There was Danny in the chorus line, dressed in the ill-fitting uniform of the missing chorus boy, hopelessly (and deliberately) out of step! For once the nimble-witted Cantor was stopped cold for a topper; Danny was the star of that performance.

Sometimes the Kay gags are sly little moments of fun, known and appreciated only by himself and the object of his attentions. Thus it was when Jack Benny and Mary Livingstone came to "Let's Face It" one night. The audience was confused, the orchestra was baffled, and Mary Jane Walsh, with whom Danny was singing a tender love duet, kept hissing "You're off key! Get back on key!" Meanwhile, out front, Jack's loud guffaws were producing general consternation and embarrassment.

Danny was off key in the song, no doubt about it. The error was intentional, however, and committed when he learned Jack was in the audience. Jack, it seems, is driven half-nuts by off-key singing, as Danny had discovered when they made a camp tour together!

It was strictly an entre nous gag too, when he surprised Doris Stein, the always chic and impeccably groomed wife of Jules Stein, his agent and head of the important Music Corporation of America, on a train en route to Hollywood. Although he had not yet seen her, Danny knew Mrs. Stein was aboard. On the first morning out of New York he happened upon a waiter with a breakfast tray outside the Stein drawing room. A little fast talking, together with a small piece of folding money, and it was Danny who entered with the tray carried high enough to shield his face. Danny in a properly servile manner, and clad in a starched white waiter's jacket.

"Thank you," said Mrs. Stein with the barest glance at "the waiter." "Please put it down here."

"Okay, Toots, whatever you say," lipped Danny. Shocked, Mrs. Stein looked up into Danny's grinning face and then let out a long and loud "EEEEEEK!" Even worse than the surprise was the fact he had caught her with her hair up in pincurls, and her face unglamorously bedaubed with cold cream! Luckily for him, Mrs. Stein has a sense of humor to match her beauty and charm.

Twenty-three men in barber chairs were the delighted witnesses to Danny's extemporaneous fun with Producer Mervyn LeRoy. On his recent visit to New York, Danny went to the Waldorf to look up LeRoy, who also was visiting in New York. Eventually he found him in a barber chair in the Waldorf shop, his face swathed in steaming towels. Quickly enlisting the cooperation of the LeRoy barber and the silence of the other patrons, Danny slipped into the white jacket of the barber and changed places with him.

Slap! On went another hot towel on LeRoy's face. Then still another, followed by a facial massage, anything but gentle. "Hey!" LeRoy protested, starting to get up. "Getta back!" Danny barked in the Italian accent of the barber he had supplanted. "Whoosa hurt a pan like yours? Shuddup!"

Enough was enough. Roaring, "What the ———!" LeRoy charged from the chair, hot towels flying. "You!" he spluttered when he saw Barber Dan. "You human in fiend form!"

LeRoy, however, was one of elite few to taste sweet revenge at Danny's expense. Calling LeRoy from his own room at the Waldorf, Danny asked if he would be in for awhile. "For a few minutes," LeRoy answered, "come on over." As it happened, Danny had just stepped from a shower, but fearing to miss LeRoy, and since his room was just down the corridor, he hastily wrapped a bathtowel around his pink-skinned middle and dashed for LeRoy's door.

It was one "entrance" Danny will never forget, for gathered in LeRoy's room were six sedate clubwomen who had come to discuss the moral tone of movies with a famous producer.

"Emily Post won't even speak to me!" Danny observed sadly in recalling that Waterloo. "She won't even nod!"

Patrons at the Club Martinique won't soon forget another night and another Kaye gag. Neither will Producer-Director-Actor Gregory Ratoff, he of the famously thick Russian accent. It was Celebrity Night, and as master of ceremonies, Danny launched on a glowing introduction of Ratoff, the most prominent guest of the evening. It was flattering to the nth degree, a eulogy such as Ratoff never before, or since, has heard. But—it was all done in a perfect imitation of Ratoff's guttural broken English.

"There is only one thing," Danny concluded the introduction. "You will notice, ladies and gentlemen, that the rat has stolen my accent!"

The moment Ratoff opened his mouth, of course, the crowd burst into hilarious laughter, and he never did get to finish his remarks.

Until he reads it here, Louis Mandel, the Kaye attorney, won't know that he did have the right number those seven times he tried to telephone Danny recently. Each time he dialed carefully, and each time he found a strange voice—Italian, Russian, Spanish, Chinese, Swedish, Negro and German—answering him. Finally, on the eighth call, Danny answered in his natural voice, but by that time Mandel was beyond coherent sneech.

"Jupiter's tears!" he spluttered. "Not even a lunatic could get that many wrong numbers! It's a plot! It's sabotage!"

"I think you're right," Danny sympathized. "I'd take it up with Washington."

Speaking of Washington—

Danny recently was a guest performer at the annual shindig of the White House Correspondents in Washington, and, by popular verdict, registered the smash hit of all time. Everyone frankly was nuts about him, and crowded around after the affair to pour congratulations and praise in unstinted measure.

"Thank you, but I was the one who had fun," Danny answered. "I always have fun if you don't fence me in."

Fence him in? How can you fence in a guy who, in one evening alone, can charm the Earl of Atherton into scat singing, General Marshall into giving out with hot licks, and the late beloved FDR into an on-the-beam version of "Minnie-The-Moocher," in the greatest jam session of all time. The question answers itself.

Meanwhile, Mrs. Kaye's "Wonder Man" just goes his way having fun . . . and best of all, lets the public in on his good time, too. Incidentally, be prepared to enjoy a "double dose" of Danny in this Goldwyn release.

DOG DEPARTMENT:

There is in town at this moment a broken-hearted guy, name of Mac, who deserves your sympathy. Mac, personally, weighs 165 pounds—but since it would be impossible to get both Mac and his heart on the scales at the same time, no one knows how big is his heart, nor how heavy at present.

Mac is a Great Dane, and like his countrymen everywhere, he gives an unchanging loyalty to those whom he loves, and Mac happens to love his master, Lon McCallister, most profoundly.

Twice in Mac's life, Lon has gone away—abruptly and, to Mac, inexplicably. Lon has tried to explain to Mac. "See, boy, I'm wearing a uniform now. You know the difference between my uniform and my tired old dungarees that I used to wear on the beach when we played Surf Stick, don't you? Well, as long as I'm wearing this uniform, I'll be able to come home only on furlough. Then I have to go out on duty again. Get it, Rugged?"

Mac didn't get it. Always before Lon managed to slip away before Mac realized that his master was leaving. This stunt involved sneaking grips into the car during the night, relying on Mom to get the shaving kit stowed, and several other subterfuges.

This time, Mac decided that he wasn't going to let Lon out of his sight. He slept on Lon's bed until Lon nearly suffocated. "Look, there simply isn't room for both of us, Bud, and since you're about 15 pounds heavier than I am, you're getting the most space. Come on—sleep on the floor like a right guy!"

Mac would settle down, front paws crossed, great head on the paws, eyes saying eloquently, "Okay, but no funny business, kid." Toward morning, Lon would awaken to find Mac snoring cosily across the foot of the bed, effectively pinning Lon in place.

Finally, Lon had to return to camp. He had to tie Mac up (chain is the better explanation) and he had to drive away fast. Mac figured at first that Lon was going out on a date, which was offensive enough, but when Lon didn't come back with the rest of the family, Mac knew that he had been abandoned again. He sat back on despondent haunches and confided his anguish to the indifferent moon.

ALL THIS—AND THAT

Gail Russell has purchased a lot and her parents have been given a construction priority to build a one-storey house. The plans have been drawn by a clever architect who, when the war is over, will be able to add a second storey to the building.

At Paramount, there is a very timorous girl hard at work in "Blue Skies," the picture planned on the pattern of "Holiday Inn" by Mark Sandrich before his untimely death. The girl is Joan Caulfield, who never had a dancing lesson in her life, and she is currently working with that gifted operator of toe and torso, Paul Draper.

Phyllis Thaxter, the exquisite actress who enacted the role of Mrs. Ted Lawson in "Thirty Seconds Over Tokyo," has announced that she and her husband, Captain James T. Aubrey, Jr., currently in the Aleutians with the Air Force, are exchanging letters on the subject of a proper name for a young Aubrey, due in the late fall.

"There they go," cries Randy Scott to his frau on opening day of the Santa Anita track. A football star in college days, rose from the ranks in World War I and won commission.

HOUSE OF LECHLER

THE LADY VANQUISHES

It's then you sit up and take notice.

Miss Harrison is in a man's racket. Producers are important people. It's they who hire the individuals who make movies. They do the casting, pick directors and writers, oversee the sets and costumes, battle with the front office about budgets, tell the cutters and other technical men the effects they want, and generally hold a production together until it gets on the screen. The job, as you can see, demands vast experience in every line of picture-making; courage, tact, and a sure instinct towards what's best.

It's a man's job ordinarily, as I say. Yet Joan is in the saddle and doing very nicely, thank you.

One reason for this is that, with a few minor exceptions, she has lived in a man's world for the better part of her life. She didn't plan it that way. It just happened. And now she's grateful as all get-out.

She came to this country in the late 1930's as Alfred Hitchcock's special assistant and special writer. That should have been enough for anybody. During her association with "Hitch," she had worked on such insignificant operas as "The Lady Vanishes," "Jamaica Inn," and "The Girl Was Young," in England, and "Rebecca," "Foreign Correspondent," and "Suspicion" over here. That should have satisfied her, but it was not sufficient for small Joan. Perhaps you'll see why when we give you a bit of her personal history.

She was born in a rural town outside London. It was a conventional place, slightly restricted and very correct. Joan's father owned the local paper, which she maintains was one of the best medium-sized sheets in England. She had a younger sister and an older brother, and everything was quite normal.

As a child, she was fascinated by the idea of writing. Not that any of the stories she found in her head ever got down on paper, you understand. Instead, they served as a nightly treat for her baby sister. Joan told what she calls "interminable serials which were wildly dramatic," to the youngster who lay in bed and lapped them up.

She went through the usual schooling—a day school, a private boarding school, and so forth—and, at seventeen and a half, had absolutely no idea of what she wanted to be. Writing was still attractive, but nothing came of it. Then her father uttered the revolutionary statement that he believed women should be as well-educated as men.

In America, this idea is nothing new. To the British, especially those of a few years ago, it was as much of a bombshell as saying, Shakespeare's plays were written by Jimmy Durante in the back room of the Stork Club." Girls just didn't go to college. Not pretty girls, anyway. The few who entered the sacred halls were middle-aged dames with screwed-up hair who were getting degrees so they could teach school. They were about as exciting as a cold poached egg.

Her father's edict that she go to Oxford slightly horrified even Joan. A friend of hers was off to Paris to study, she told her father, and that seemed a much better idea. Why couldn't she go, too?

A compromise was finally reached: Joan would go to Paris for a year, then return to Oxford for her degree. So she went over to France, had a magnificent dose of freedom, then came home speaking French and sighing over the Champs Elysees. Oxford, after Paris, seemed a frightful, dreary, too-strict place—a horrible spot.

The situation was brightened, however, by the fact that her brother was also at the university, and by the amazing truth that men outnumbered women on the campus 40-1. Joan suddenly discovered that she was belle of any number of Balls. She had three or four dates a night and thoroughly enjoyed herself. She found that, contrary to the usual conception of the stay-at-home English girl, men were not strange creatures. They were fun. So much fun, in fact, that she only remembered in the nick of time to get her degree.

After college, she again was faced with the problem of what to be. She decided to become a journalist. But her father, who had shown great breadth up to this point, was shocked. Women reporters, he said, were hard-bitten hags. What Joan should do was take a secretarial course, get a job in an office, and wait for the right man to marry.

Joan went through with the secretarial course. On graduation, she began a series of chores which ranged from typing manuscripts for a writer, to selling dresses (after which she hated all women) and scribbling copy for an advertising firm. At long last, when she was about to throw in the sponge entirely, a friend wired her that a motion picture director needed a secretary and reader of scripts, and that she should try for the position.

She went, found shoals of other females with the same idea, told the doorman a fabulous story about her need to get home because her sister (then actually fourteen) was having a baby, and found herself in the mogul's office. She saw before her a large man who studied her solemnly for a few moments, then said suddenly, "Take off that hat!" meaning a silly flowery thing she had tossed on her skull that morning. They talked, she said she spoke French well, without knowing that the job specifically called for a knowledge of German . . . and somehow, by some stupendous miracle, she was hired. Her boss' name was Alfred Hitchcock, of course.

She had never been in a motion picture studio before. But that didn't bother "Hitch"—nor Joan. She found herself turning into a jill-of-all-trades. She sat in on story conferences, played script clerk, watched pictures being cut, attended to production details, and managed everything else that came her way. The secret of this was, naturally, that Hitchcock's films were made differently from those in this country. He was absolute boss. His company was his own. His people—and there weren't many—had to do everything. Thus Joan got an education in how to make a movie which has seldom been equalled.

She began writing (in collaboration) on "The Girl Was Young," and by and by it was a normal thing for her to be one of the scripters on the Hitchcock shows. This training stood her in excellent stead when she made her own picture, "Phantom Lady." For in that she was writer as well as producer.

When her boss came to America, Joan was the only one to accompany him, beside his family. She first entered this country on a visitor's permit. Then, seeing how great were the opportunities here, she went down to Mexico and came through again on the quota. It was shortly after this that it struck her that it might be a good idea to break away from "Hitch." After all, she did have talent of her own. But Hollywood was beginning to say that she was "being carried by Hitchcock."

"Hitch" gave Joan his blessing and she went forth by herself. As a writer and a collaborator, she had lousy luck. Oh, she got jobs, all right. At Columbia, Paramount, MGM, and a few other places. But somehow every picture she worked on was subsequently put on the shelf.

Finally, she got fed up. Universal had a story called "Phantom Lady." Joan was wanted as a writer. She replied that they would either never film the thing, or film it contrary to her ideas. Nuts to them. Then Universal made the astounding proposition: "Maybe you'd like to do it yourself."

They gave her a completely free production hand. She did the show, and it was what is called in the trade "a sleeper." Suddenly, from a somewhat minor picture, it turned into a thing that set the critics crazy. And Joan turned into an important personality.

From then on it was smooth sailing. For with the success of "Phantom Lady" came a long-term contract to produce more pictures for Universal Studios. Before that went into effect, however, she did "Dark Waters" for General Service Studios. Then back to her home lot for "Uncle Harry," which is based on the stage play of the same name.

Joan says that being a woman and a producer is very strange—but wonderful—and the advantages far outweigh the disadvantages.

The bad side includes the fact that men can often settle their shooting difficulties over a flock of drinks at a bar. Joan can't exactly do that. Nor can she tell off a co-worker who is acting up, as a man would.

On the credit side is the fact that, as a woman, she can appeal to her staff of technicians and actors for fair play and hard work for the good of the picture. She can make female stars happier about their clothes, for she knows how a lady should look. She thinks she pays more attention to details than a man. She can see male players, in particular, in new lights and get them out of casting ruts they've fallen into. (Remember Tone in "Phantom Lady"?) And, most delightful, she gets flowers along with the star on the first day of shooting!

Being an attractive gal with a brain makes for situations, however. And Joan's favorite occurred at Universal:

She had been working late one evening, until after dark, and on her way to her car passed a night gang setting up flats on a stage. The boys, seeing a blonde with a good figure prancing by, whistled violently. Joan grinned and went on. It wasn't until the next day that the gentlemen discovered she was their boss!

Morgan, Leon Ames, Mildred Natwich, Mary Nash, and Charles La Torre are the members of the cast.

THEY WERE EXPENDABLE, from the magnificent book by W. L. White, is working on a closed set with Robert Montgomery, John Wayne, Ward Bond, Jack Holt, Leon Ames, Bruce Kellogg, Jeff York, Tim Murdock, Cameron Mitchell, Robert Barrat, Ted Lundigan, and—to make it co-ed—Donna Reed.

SHE WENT TO THE RACES is a picture involving James Craig, Frances Gifford, Edmund Gwenn, Reginald Owen, Sig Ruman, Charles Halton, and J. M. AT RKO:

BELLS OF ST. MARY'S is the blue ribbon picture starring Bing Crosby, Ingrid Bergman, Ruth Donnelly, Henry Travers, Joan Carroll, Dickie Tyler and Director Leo McCarey. You'll see this, no matter how the story is described here, so why waste paper? Better write it down on your calendar.

TOMORROW IS FOREVER is the picture in which, were I an actress instead of a writer, I would like to work. Orson Welles spends every spare moment away from the camera showing magic tricks to George Brent, Claudette Colbert, Lucile Watson, Joyce MacKenzie, and Dick Long.

DEADLINE AT DAWN is the story about a sailor, Bill Williams, who falls for a taxi dancer, Susan Hayward,

AT MONOGRAM:

SUNBONNET SUE is a happy opus with Phil Regan, Gale Storm, George Cleveland, Alan Mowbray and Charles D. Brown. The following anecdote has nothing to do with this particular picture, but a great to do with Alan Mowbray, who is a very sweet guy. One Saturday night not so long ago, William Babb, 20, a merchant mariner, married Rosalie Bishop at the United Seamen's Service Merchant Marine Club in San Pedro. Jinx Falkenburg arranged to have the club decorated; Fred MacMurray served as best man, Janice Carter and Adele Jergens were bridesmaids, Alan Mowbray gave the bride away, and Dame May Whitty was matron of honor. JOAN LORRING grow up to be Joan Lorring, used to entertain herself by trying to imitate them.

She was four when she began taking ballet lessons from a young Russian whose thick Slavic accent intrigued her. Home from class, the child's life-study of her teacher made her mother laugh long and heartily. Pretty soon she was copying the "wash amah," a beautiful Chinese girl who had a way of getting days off more frequently than the other amahs. Anyone beautiful could get anything from Joan's mother, very handsome herself with her long, thick, yellow braids and starry eyes. It took the child's shrewd imitation to open her mother's eyes.

One of Joan's favorite sources at that time was Frenchwoman, whose extravagant gestures and quaint arrangement of words made amusing material. The little girl garnered so many laughs on this neighbor that her conscience began to bother her. Maybe it wasn't right to take off her mother's friend. She went to her: "Do you mind if I listen to you and try to speak like you?" asked Joan.

The woman's eyes widened. "But I speak perfect the Eenglish!" she cried, throwing out her hands. "The same as you, I speak it! Where, I ask you, where is different my Eenglish?"

Joan learned never to ask again.

At six, she made her first appearance at school, playing a doctor in a top hat and her father's old tails cut 'way down. Other amateur and charity appearances followed, attracting such attention that once Joan was offered a stage role that would have paid $350 a week in Chinese money. Her father refused the offer; he expected to provide for his family.

The threat of war threw its shadow across the world. In 1939, Joan's father realized that conflict was inevitable and sent his wife and daughter to America. In 1940, he came over for a brief visit; returning to Hong Kong to wind up some business, he was captured by the Japs, and at this writing is still their prisoner.

Dr. Mei Lan Fang, a friend of the family, at whose home Douglas Fairbanks, senior, used to stay while in China, gave Joan a letter to the actor as a parting gift. "Show him what you can do," he advised. Joan's thirteen-year-old heart leaped. She saw herself, starring in Hollywood.

Arrived in San Francisco, mother and daughter remained there for months. To her dismay, Joan discovered that Hollywood is nearly five hundred miles south, and Mr. Fairbanks as far out of reach as ever. Across the street from their hotel hung a sign reading: "Dramatic School." As she went in and out, the child looked at it. . . Here she was thirteen—getting older every minute and nothing was happening!

"Mother," she coaxed, "let's go over and see what they say!"

The head of the school interviewed them. Then she said: "Here are two scripts. Before I enter you, let's see what you can do. Learn these and come back tomorrow."

One was a dramatic sketch concerning a boy and his dog. Joan did this with tears raining down her cheeks. The other was a series of dialects—Chinese, Cockney, Negro, German, Spanish, Irish, French.

The teacher listened. "I am not going to enroll you in this school," she said, "and you must not go to any other dramatic school. Keep on just as you are—be natural—never act. A director can take you and get whatever he wants from you, but if you try to study, you'll ruin the remarkable thing you have."

After that, what could they do but go to Hollywood?

Arriving, the letter was despatched to Mr. Fairbanks, who responded by inviting them both to a party.

"I may call on you, if things get dull," Doug told Joan. Thrilled she came equipped with costumes and props, and sat in a corner tensely watching Hollywood celebrities arrive. There was Doug, junior; Frank Capra, Ronald Colman, all the glamorous creatures she had watched on the screen, only more devastatingly lovely than she had imagined them.

Eventually, however, Mr. Fairbanks rose. "I'd like to present my young protegée from China. I think she's remarkable."

Since Doug had never seen her do anything, this was quite an introduction. Having made it, the thought probably occurred to him, too, for he began to creep quietly away. He wasn't out of earshot when he paused. Joan was singing a little French song. Then she did a Chinese dance. And, finally imitations. Doug was leading the applause long before the audience let her go.

Next day he signed the child to a personal contract, saying he had great plans for her. Joan was on top of the world! That night, Doug left for New York; from New York he went abroad. Upon his return in September, there was a new flurry of plans which were cut short by the actor's death. Joan's contract was ended.

One of the enthusiastic guests at the Fairbanks' party had been Ronald Colman. Joan had watched him with little-girl adoration, vowing to herself: "I'll play opposite you one of these days, mister!" Now that dream seemed unattainable. Joan was nothing but a schoolgirl, forgotten and forlorn.

Just four years after the Fairbanks' party, Joan stood at a radio microphone playing Frith in Paul Gallico's "Snow Goose" opposite Ronald Colman, whose comment, after watching her age from twelve to twenty-one in their thirty minutes on the air, was: "She's so wonderful, I'm fearful!"

She was seventeen. Life was beginning to look brighter. Beside her radio work, which had become increasingly important, she had signed a contract with MGM and had a small role with Robert Taylor in "Song of Russia."

"It only looked brighter," sighed Joan, shaking her crisp brown curls. "They left most of my part on the cutting room floor. I did a very good little maid from a convent in "Bridge of San Luis Rey," but that was on loan-out. I was terribly unhappy because I had nothing to do. A year is a big slice out of life when you are young."

Pictures then under way at MGM called for glamour girls. Joan has a gay and impudent face, her irregular features and unusual eyes are interesting rather than breath-taking; she was convinced that she never would have a chance at that studio. The only happy thing during her stay there was her graduation from high school and release from formal education.

Free-lancing again, she did two stage plays at Hollywood's Geller Workshop, in one of which she played Charlotte Brontë at various ages. Here she met Casey MacGregor who was to become important to her.

"They need a cockney brat at Warners'," said her agent, one day in 1944's springtime. "Let's go over. Hal Wallis will see you."

Joan went, telling herself that she expected nothing. Mr. Wallis, who was to produce the picture, gave her the script and said she'd be called for a test. Three days later he left the studio and the picture was shelved. "There you see—I knew it!" cried Joan, and burst into tears.

Jack Chertock took over the picture, and Irving Rapper was appointed director. Joan was not called for a test, although she had studied her script night and day, loving the part more and more. "It was too good to happen!" she wept.

And then, Casey MacGregor—(didn't I tell you he'd be important?)—on his way to Universal Studios, was hailed by a hitchhiker whose car had broken down. The hitchhiker was Rhys Williams from Warner Brothers. It turned out that he was working on "The Corn Is Green." He confided that they had tested practically every girl in town and couldn't find a Bessie Watty.

"Why not test Joan Lorring?" inquired Mr. MacGregor. "She's remarkable."

Joan's knees shook so she could hardly get to the director's office. Mr. Rapper seemed pleased that she had brought props—earrings, beads, a funny hat—just to read for him. Her characterization pleased him, too; he gave her a screen test, and again nothing happened.

Weeks went by. "They've found someone else," thought Joan, nearly dying of disappointment. She tried affirming that the part was hers, declaring that "they" had to let her do it. Still nothing happened.

June 5th, 1944, she was rehearsing a radio play with Charles Laughton, under the direction of Norman Corwin. Between her scenes, she picked up a trade sheet. Letters that seemed written in fire leaped at her . . . Betty Field is to do Bessie Watty. Joan cried out, involuntarily. Mr. Laughton, after hearing her story, tried to console her. "There are other good parts, my dear," he said. "When you are as old as I am, you'll have learned that better ones will come along, and you will get your share." But Joan was not to be comforted.

Her mother was in San Francisco on business, and a girlfriend was sharing the apartment. The girlfriend, who had a car, was to pick up the young actress after rehearsal. It was nearing midnight. Joan sat in the CBS lobby, tears for Bessie Watty making tracks down her cheeks.

Suddenly: "Flash!" came from the loudspeaker above her head. "This is D-Day . . . Invasion has begun!" Joan listened, electrified, to the breathless accounts of troops fighting their way ashore. But her tears still came.

Norman Corwin, emerging from an elevator, stopped at the news, and sat down beside Joan to listen. Between broadcasts, he asked about the tears. Heartbroken Joan told him. At intervals in her story, excited bursts from the loudspeaker related tales of what went on on the beaches of France. When Joan had finished, Mr. Corwin shook his head. "Yes," he said, sympathetically, "It's dreadful—Betty Field and Munich."

"All at once I grew up," said Joan, remembering that night, "How could I worry about a part—any part, no matter how wonderful—on D-Day? I realized at last, that it made no difference if I never acted again. How could I matter, when boys were dying?"

She went home with a sense of release, listened to her radio until 3:30 A. M., and went to sleep. Six hours later, her agent telephoned. "Warners want to see you."

"If it's about Bessie Watty, I won't go. I'm sick of the thought of her!"

The wily agent assured her it was something else. But he led her to Mr. Rapper's office. Joan stiffened. "I said I won't do Bessie Watty!"

"They want to say 'Hello!'" The agent patted her shoulder and pushed her into the room.

"Inside," related Joan, her eyes glowing, "were Mr. Rapper, Mr. Ureeland, Rhys Williams, and Goldie, the prop man—a man of great talent, and why he's rustling props instead of acting, I'll never know!—they all looked at me and beamed. They shouted: 'It's all yours!'"

Apparently, the picture never dropped from his high point. Mr. Rapper, according to Joan, was a very Svengali of a director who could have wrested five-star performances out of blocks of wood. "John Dall and I were his Trilbys," she grinned. "Don't tell anybody, but we owe everything to him. Everything we don't owe to Bette Davis, I mean. She isn't like some stars, who sit down with the script before each scene and say: 'That's a good line—who has it? Take it out!' She helped us both."

To Joan, Bette Davis is beyond compare. The young actress, through bitter experience, had become convinced that she was ugly, undesirable.

"Don't worry about beauty; people get tired of the same old face, beautiful or not. What's important to an actress is to see that hers is not the same," she told Joan. "Often I am hideous on purpose, and I play all ages. No one can say of me: 'Just look—dear, dear, she's falling apart, she's getting so old!' because I've always kept changing. When they're tired of me as an elderly woman, I'm suddenly young again."

The self-confidence Miss Davis had given Joan helped her turn in another excellent performance in "Three Strangers," in which she plays a gunmoll opposite Peter Lorre.

You can't forget Joan, once you've seen her work. Two years ago she did a brief role on an Orson Welles radio program. It was her birthday and someone produced a birthday cake. Mr. Welles had nothing to do with her at the time, but twenty-four months later he needed a girl for another program. "I know the one I want," he asserted, "the girl with the birthday. Who was she?"

"The part was only three lines long," recalled Joan, "but they gave me credit on the air. Funny thing, Mr. Welles didn't know me when he saw me, didn't remember that again it was my birthday. All he remembered was my work."

Remarkable Joan!

THE GREAT BRITTON

Barbara confessed. "Really you have no idea of the hopes and fears that were whirling around in my brain. Everything happened so suddenly—yet not suddenly enough for me to stop thinking about it—to do a good job."

Hollywood had always been a magic city to Barbara for as long as she could remember. Born in Long Beach, California, growing up without so much as a train ride out of the state, Barbara was near and yet so very far away from the center of her childish dreams.

Barbara's mother and father, Mr. and Mrs. Adna Brantingham (Brantingham is Barbara's real last name), were staid members of a staid community. For twenty years, Barbara's mother had taught in the same Sunday School and her father was, and still is, an official in the city government. An only child, Barbara was brought up to enjoy the simple things and to lead a thoroughly normal life, protected at every turn by parents who adored this beautiful child of theirs.

That protection, so much a part of her daily life, was suddenly snatched away with the exciting advent of a Hollywood agent, and the knowledge that fame in this fantastic, wonderful world of Hollywood might someday be hers.

At six Barbara appeared in a church play—her first dramatic effort. Throughout grammar school and high school Barbara was interested in play-acting, but her parents treated it as the normal interest of a normal child. Acting was just one of the things that Barbara did that was equally as exciting as her clubs and class work, but not more so. Barbara took part in sports, was of average intelligence in school, had the usual number of crushes and the usual number of boys paying tribute to a good-looking girl. Then suddenly her world of normalcy was turned all topsy-turvey.

"It is all so funny the way things happen," Barbara said, giving that quiet little laugh of hers. "Little pieces of things happening and all fitting together in a pattern that finally led to all this." Her gesture toward the studio executives eating lunch nearby who now control her destiny, was eloquently inclusive.

"I was majoring in English and dramatics at Long Beach Junior College when it all came along," Barbara continued. "Confidentially, the dramatics major was only because it was an easy way to make good grades. I suppose once in a while I thought rather idly of a career on the stage, but no more than I thought of a dozen other careers."

The miraculous chain of events that led Barbara to Movie fame started with a picture taken of her at a Long Beach charity fashion show. This led to photographic modeling for a department store, and then a place on the Long Beach float in the lavish Pasadena Tournament of Roses parade. There a newspaper photographer snapped her picture, a city editor decided to publish it, and a Hollywood agent—knowing beauty pays monetary dividends when under studio

Beginner Earns $1,819.00

"Today I received a check for $165 for a story. Another I sold for $34. The other day I counted up just how much I made previously. It amounted up to $1,620.00. Not bad for a beginner, is it?"—Mrs. L. L. Gray, 579 E. McHarg Ave., Stamford, Texas.

How do you KNOW you can't WRITE?

Have you ever tried?

Have you ever attempted even the least bit of training, under competent guidance?

Or have you been sitting back, as it is so easy to do, waiting for the day to come when you will awaken, all of a sudden, to the discovery, "I am a writer"?

If the latter course is the one of your choosing, you probably never will write. Lawyers must be law clerks. Doctors must be internes. We all know that, in our time, the egg does come before the chicken.

It is seldom that anyone becomes a writer until he (or she) has been writing for some time. That is why so many authors and writers spring up out of the newspaper business. The day-to-day necessity of writing—of gathering material about which to write—develops their talent, their insight, their background and their confidence as nothing else could.

That is why the Newspaper Institute of America bases its writing instruction on journalism—continuous writing—the training that has produced so many successful authors.

Learn to write by writing

NEWSPAPER Institute training is based on the New York Copy Desk Method. It starts and keeps you writing in your own home, on your own time. Week by week you receive actual assignments, just as if you were right at work on a great metropolitan daily. Your writing is individually corrected and constructively criticized. Thoroughly experienced, practical, active writers are responsible for this instruction. Under such sympathetic guidance, you will find that (instead of vainly trying to copy someone else's writing tricks) you are rapidly developing your own distinctive, self-flavored style—undergoing an experience that has a thrill to it and which at the same time develops in you the power to make your feelings articulate.

Many people who should be writing become awestruck by fabulous stories about millionaire authors, and, therefore, give little thought to the $25, $50 and $100 or more that can often be earned for material that takes little time to write—stories, articles on business, local and club activities, homemaking, hobbies, decorating, etc.—things that can easily be turned out in leisure hours, and often on the impulse of the moment.

A chance to test yourself FREE!

Our unique Writing Aptitude Test tells whether you possess the fundamental qualities necessary to successful writing—acute observation, dramatic instinct, creative imagination, etc. You'll enjoy taking this test. contract—sought Barbara out.

"I assured him that motion pictures would not be interested in me," Barbara's blue eyes twinkled in fun. "Then feeling that I'd been rather abrupt after all his trouble, I invited him to come and see me in a play called 'The Old Maid' which the school was putting on. I felt that he could then judge for himself and not waste more of his time.

"When he accepted the invitation, and later called to tell me that a Paramount talent scout would be with him, I was terrified," Barbara continued. "I've never lived through such a night. The play is a five-act show and I didn't come on until the third act. I was alternately hoping they'd be discouraged and leave after the first two acts, without seeing me, and burning with a fever of desire that they'd wait until I came on and perhaps—dream of all dreams—sign me to a contract."

They came, they saw, and Barbara signed.

Within the next few days Barbara made a screen test without quite knowing which end of the camera relayed her image to the film. She saw the test and wept bitter tears of disappointment.

"On the screen I wasn't what I thought a screen star should look like," Barbara wrinkled up her nose in disgust. "I couldn't understand what I was doing here. However, the studio said they had no intention of having me commute between Long Beach and Hollywood, so Mother and I moved up to Hollywood. All day long I was before the cameras—but not acting. I was doing publicity pictures, modeling clothes, or else I'd be scheduled to appear at Chamber of Commerce luncheons, banquets and the like. It seemed to me that a motion picture camera was as far away from my life as it had ever been."

Intestinal fortitude is one thing that Barbara definitely does not lack. So, after six months of this her mother returned to keep her home in Long Beach and Barbara moved into the Studio Club.

"I was one bewildered girl," Barbara confided. "I was being paid a salary for being an actress, but no one seemed to think it odd that I never acted."

High glory was topped with bitter disappointments day after day. There was the time Barbara tested for a role in "Secrets of the Wastelands" with Bill Boyd. She was thrilled to death

SPIKED COCKTAILS:

Jennifer Jones was entertaining friends of slightly long-hair persuasion one night, when she remembered a recording recently given to her by Alexis Smith. "I have here a wonderful recording of Cocktails For Two," she announced. "I've never played it, but a friend of mine says that it is the most delightful symbolic arrangement of the song ever waxed. Want to hear it?"

So she played it. It's true, as you know if you own the record, that it starts out with the elegance of an ostrich plume fan, but midway in the melody, the music suddenly goes mad . . . that is if you have the disc made by Spike Jones, whose orchestra includes such revolutionary sounds as a squawking parrot (alive) and the clattering of bleached bones (very dead).

"Dorothy—you're so old-fashioned about CRAMPS!"

because she had her first role in a real motion picture.

"I wore horn-rimmed spectacles and a horror hat," Barbara said. "Even my best friends couldn't recognize me."

Then followed role after role in "Reap the Wild Wind," "Louisiana Purchase," "Mrs. Wiggs of the Cabbage Patch" and "Young and Willing."

"But I was just a blur in the camera's eye," was the way Barbara put it.

The one big chance for a starring role in all those two and a half long years came when Barbara tested for the part of Eileen in "Stage Door Canteen." She had to watch this plum role go to another actress when her studio said she must play a bit in "So Proudly We Hail." But Director Frank Borzage, the man who made the test of Barbara, was to remember, and that test was to bring about stardom and real hope to the girl who didn't know how to get fame for herself.

Nearly a year late, the day so important in Barbara's life started as many days had started since she came to Paramount. She was told to be at the studio at three o'clock in the afternoon for a wardrobe fitting. No one bothered to tell her what it was all about. From wardrobe, she was pushed in front of a camera in a nun's habit. She turned around twice while the camera ground her image onto film, and then was sent home.

At nine o'clock the next morning the script of "'Till We Meet Again" was thrust into her hand, and she was told she had the role that was destined to make her a star.

Again that mysterious chain of events had linked, in a manner which catapulted Barbara from obscurity to fame. For six days, "'Till We Meet Again" had been shooting with Maureen O'Hara and Ray Milland as its stars. Then came a sudden decision on the part of Maureen's doctor that she might jeopardize her life and the child she was carrying, if she continued her picture work.

Director Frank Borzage remembered the girl he had wanted so badly for "Stage Door Canteen." He fought a noble battle for Barbara at the front office, for Paramount executives were not happy about entrusting a million dollar role to a starlet. Borzage won—and another star was born. Barbara's next will be "The Virginian," another million dollar picture, this time in technicolor.

On the verge of a nervous breakdown after working on "'Till We Meet Again," she found the rest and quiet of an apartment more to her taste than the Studio Club with its innumerable parties and girlish laughter. In need of medical care, Barbara sought the services of a doctor in the same apartment building.

Young Doctor Eugene Czukor, just released from two years service in the Army Air Corps, was the doctor. He saw to it that she took her vitamins and that her lights were out at nine o'clock. Once in a while, a dance at the Jonathan Club and a night at the Philharmonic were allowed—provided her doctor was with her! The professional attention developed into romance, and a year and a half after they had met, the young couple was married. Barbara gets a big kick out of telling her friends about it.

There was a time when Barbara declared if she ever decided to marry, it would be the end of her career in pictures. She had decided she was prepared to give up anything that might interfere with a happy married life. But since her marriage to Doctor Czukor, that idea has changed somewhat.

There can be no doubt that her husband is proud of Barbara's talents and the career she is making for herself; just as Barbara is proud of his success in the medical profession. Their complete accord on this usually controversial subject is the reason their friends know that this marriage will be a success. For the present, they are still living in a small apartment, hoping to move into a house before long.

"But we are making our plans to build a dream house in Laguna when materials are more easily secured," Barbara says. "Meanwhile, we live quietly."

The last statement brought a new thought, for she said: "Incidentally, did you see that thing about me in a recent magazine where they said, 'She doesn't smoke, drink, go to night clubs, use much make-up or play gin-rummy'?"

I nodded that I had.

"That sounds very dull," she said emphatically. "You know, people always ask me about my personal habits as if I were some freak. Sure I lead a quiet life because picture-making demands it. I don't know how to play gin-rummy because no one has ever taught me, but I'm a whizz at backgammon. The only reason I don't use make-up is that it makes me look like the dickens."

Barbara's life is far from dull. Into her private life as Mrs. Eugene Czukor, and her career life as Barbara Britton, she pours an enthusiasm that knows no equal. No wonder she is now that exciting woman—the new Barbara Britton of the screen!

THE END

SNATCH:

Helmut Dantine was in a hurry. He was driving to Ida Lupino's house, from which point they were to motor to Union Station because Helmut was leaving for the East. First, however, he had to stop at the Beverly Hills Hotel to leave a script.

He parked, pulled on the emergency, grabbed the ignition key, and vaulted over the side of his convertible. Running, he entered the lobby, left the manila envelope with the clerk, after having made brief explanation, then hastened back to the spot in which he had left his car some 90 seconds earlier. The car had been stolen.

MANY NEVER SUSPECT CAUSE OF BACKACHES

This Old Treatment Often Brings Happy Relief

Many sufferers relieve nagging backache quickly, once they discover that the real cause of their trouble may be tired kidneys.

The kidneys are Nature's chief way of taking the excess acids and waste out of the blood. They help most people pass about 3 pints a day.

When disorder of kidney function permits poisonous matter to remain in your blood, it may cause nagging backache, rheumatic pains, leg pains, loss of pep and energy, getting up nights, swelling, puffiness under the eyes, headaches and dizziness. Frequent or scanty passages with smarting and burning sometimes shows there is something wrong with your kidneys or bladder.

Don't wait! Ask your druggist for Doan's Pills, used successfully by millions for over 40 years. They give happy relief and will help the 15 miles of kidney tubes flush out poisonous waste from your blood. Get Doan's Pills.

she does. Watching her performance on the 'Suspense' show, it was difficult to credit that in her eagerness to succeed, she was scared half to death. She seemed so poised, so sure of herself and her every speech, so business-like in her approach to the role. Yet her hand, when she grabbed mine for encouragement, was ice cold. Part of it stemmed from nervousness, yes; every true artist is nervous about a performance. Most of it, however, came from her great anxiety to justify the chance which had been given her, and the faith we all had shown in her. She has real humility in the finest sense of the word."

An equally revealing Horne trait was evidenced after the show, Spier said. In celebration of the evening the entire cast had been invited to the Spier home. Lena deliberately was over an hour late in arriving.

"I figured by this time the broadcast would be forgotten and no one would feel obliged to say 'You were wonderful!' just to be polite," Lena said, explaining her tardy arrival.

Kay Thompson, the vocal coach with whom Lena works in preparing her songs for pictures, is enthusiastic about Lena as a friend, an artist, and a woman.

"As a friend she is trustworthy, appreciative, understanding, and genuinely affectionate and generous," Miss Thompson says. "Whatever she says or does comes straight from the heart, not from a sense of obligation or because it might be 'good business.' As an artist she is a tireless worker who loves what she is doing, and far from having a 'big star complex,' she invariably is quick to accept criticism or advice. If she happens to differ with that advice—and she has a strong mind of her own!—she never says a flat 'No' but always 'Let's try it that way,' and then really tries. As a woman she is singularly lacking in jealousy and guile, and scorns to use petty wiles and 'women's tricks' to win her way. Sometimes her honesty is a little startling, but you can always bank on her saying what she means, and meaning exactly what she says. As naturally friendly as a puppy, she sends out a liking for others and is eager to be liked in return. All in all, she is one of the few completely real people in Hollywood."

One of Miss Thompson's favorite stories about Lena concerns the day they were working on a song and Lena protested she could not reach high C in a certain passage.

"My voice isn't that good," she insisted. "Better put it down at least one key." Miss Thompson agreed, and they ran through the music again. This time Lena hit the high note perfectly. "You see?" she said. "B-flat is my limit."

"I see," Miss Thompson nodded gravely, and then began to chuckle. "For your information, I didn't change the key, and you can hit high C right on the nose as long as you think it's B-flat!"

No less enthusiastic a Horne fan is Vincente Minnelli, fiancé of Judy Garland, who has directed most of Lena's pictures. He calls her a director's

"Oh, she's OLD! Almost thirty!"

At twenty, thirty seems ancient.

At thirty, forty is distant middle age.

At forty, well, it'll be a long time before you're fifty.

The point is that ten years ahead always seems like a long time. Yet, actually it passes "before you know it" . . . and you find yourself face to face with problems, opportunities, needs, that once seemed very far in the future.

This is a good thing to remember today, when you buy War Bonds to speed the winning of the war.

In ten years—only ten years—those bonds will bring you back $4 for every $3 you put into them today.

Think of what that money may mean to you in 1955. An education for your children . . . a home . . . maybe even retirement to the place and the life of your heart's desire.

All this your War Bonds can mean to you . . . if you buy all you can today and hold them to maturity.

It won't be long till 1955. Not half as long as you think.

dream come true—a wonderful dream!

"Lena has so many talents, so many facets to her, that it is a sheer joy to draw on them and arrange them to your needs," Minnelli said. "She seems to understand almost intuitively what you want, and responds with such quick understanding that you can almost direct her by sign language. Her approach to each situation is simplicity itself, and always she permits the material to guide her, rather than trying to fit the material to her own tricks or mannerisms as many of our actresses are prone to do. Actually Lena has no bag of tricks, or any one identifiable mannerism, unless it could be in the eloquent use of her hands and shoulders. Watch her hands and shoulders the next time you see her on the screen, and observe what a tremendous effect she can get with the slighest lift of one shoulder, or a half motion with one hand.

"Her greatest asset, however, greater even than her versatility which ranges from great emotion to light comedy, is the great warmth and sincerity she gives to everything she does. She believes in whatever she is doing, and the audience in turn believes with her. She rings true, and so do her performances."

Fellow actors like Lena because she is a smart girl who understands her craft and has a genuine respect for the work of others. They like her sense of humor and her intellectual curiosity. And they like her because she is a real trouper.

Not long ago, for example, she was singing at the opening of a local USO, when a sharp earthquake rocked the building. It was Lena's first experience of a quake, and in natural panic she started to leave the stage to find her baby daughter who was in the audience of several hundred colored servicemen and their girls. It was the instinctive act of any mother whose child was in danger. After a few steps, however, she returned to the microphone.

"We've got a lot of men here who are trained to act in emergencies, so I suggest we let them take over and lead the rest of us out of the building," she said. "Okay with you soldiers and sailors?"

The calm quality of her voice and the quiet logic of her suggestion rooted the milling crowd in its steps, and a few minutes later everyone had been led safely from the building. Not until then did she find her own daughter who, it turned out, had been downstairs all the time, guzzling an ice cream soda instead of listening to Mummy sing!

Lena is a forthright and intelligent champion of her people. She is proud of the strides they have made so far, and constantly stumps for greater educational opportunity for them. Only through education can their hopes for a better heritage for their children and their children's children be realized, she firmly believes. That better heritage she defines as financial security, economic equality, and a cultural background.

It is bias, however, to think of Lena as a colored performer, rather than as a performer who happens to be colored, as Greer Garson happens to be English, Bergman happens to be Swedish, and Bernhardt happened to be French. All who know her agree on that.

owing someone 25% of his salary.

You'll enjoy the music, especially the five piano team of Carmen Cavallaro, Ted Fiorito, Henry King, Ray Noble, and Joe Reichman.

ANCHORS AWEIGH (MGM)—All this and Sinatra too! With Swooner Frankie and Dancer Gene Kelly vieing for the love of pretty songstress Kathryn Grayson.

Gene is a Navy "Wolf," the envy (hey, how's about this, gals!) of shy fellow-gob Frankie. The situation, briefly, is this:

A policeman seeks the boys' help for returning a runaway youngster to home base. After gaining the lad's confidence, they take him home and meet his aunt (Kathryn Grayson), who's addicted to spending her spare time on movie sets watching Jose Iturbi conduct. Motive; to get herself "discovered" so that she can have a chance at a musical career.

But for all the real help she gets from this pair of errant knights in sailor suits! Well anyway, everything ends in rosy fashion, with the two boys going off to the high seas. And who's starred in the very next USO show they see? You guessed it—Iturbi and his new find, Auntie Kathryn.

NOB HILL (20th Century-Fox)—A super-colossal costume picture, in Technicolor, with George Raft as Tony Angelo in a story about the rough 'n' tumble Barbary Coast in Old San Francisco.

Tony runs the famous "Gold Coast," where Sally Templeton (Vivian Blaine) sings for her supper—and for being in love with her boss. Little Katie Flanagan (Peggy Ann Garner), just off the boat from Ireland, comes expecting to find her Uncle Pete. No Uncle Pete, and her big little-girl wish to stay in San Francisco notwithstanding, her chances don't look so good—till she sees the beautiful Harriet Carruthers (Joan Bennett), whom she'd met on the boat coming over.

Harriet classifies as one of the Gold City's "Snob Hill" aristocrats. Her interest in Tony Angelo develops as genuine heart interest, however, and she's resented by Sally, and Katie becomes the innocent buffer-between.

ALONG CAME JONES (International)

"Wish I had a sweetheart
I'd set her on the shelf
And every time she'd grin at me
I'd get up there myself."

Gary Cooper's a singing cowboy in this one (look to your laurels, Mr. Rogers). It's the same tune all the time, but there's "over a hun'nerd verses." (See sample above.)

Singing, however, is not Melody Jones' main claim to fame. He's better known as a double for the town's bad boy, Monty Jarrad, played by Dan Duryea (the lad who's been getting all the best skoonk parts lately). And for a guy who can't fire a gun without having it fly right out of his hand, looking like Monty is dangerous business. Just as the law and order boys are drawing a bead on Melody, Cherry DeLongpre (Loretta Young) finds it fittin' to come to the rescue—thinking if the sheriff and his boys

Make Him Say
"I Love You"

Fascinating women know the secret of charming the man they love. They depend on LASHLOOR, the WATERPROOF formula that does wonders for drab, unattractive eyes. LASHLOOR emphasizes the beauty of your eyes and eyelashes. Gives them new glamour, new silkiness. Not a mascara. Easy to apply in just a few seconds. Available in brown, jet black, or neutral, in a convenient pancake-type plastic compact you will treasure for years. Complete with instructions, only $2.00 postpaid if remittance accompanies order (or $2.35 C.O.D.). We GUARANTEE you must be delighted, or money back. Send for LASHLOOR now, and enjoy the thrill of soft-as-silk eyelashes that glow anew with tantalizing fascination. In ordering, state shade desired.

start looking for Melody, Monty might get away. Bill Demarest, as Melody's sidekick, wants to have "no truck" with Cherry, but Melody is intrigued—as well he might be by the beauteous Miss Young of the long curly hair, worn natural style.

True to the code of the westerns, there's a stage-coach holdup, a shot in the dark, the sheriff's posse, the chase, the villain, the hero, and the sweet lil' gal (though she's just a bit mixed up as to where her loyalties lie).

Because of the big star cast (incidentally, Gary Cooper produces as well as acts), you might call this one a grand horse op'ry.

ON STAGE EVERYBODY (Universal)—is the name of a radio show born after the Sullivans—Pop (Jack Oakie) and his 18-year-old daughter Molly (Peggy Ryan)—have washed up with vaudeville.

But let's get this straight—Pop doesn't like radio! Fact is, he hates it. Yet it seems that Molly's maternal grandfather (Otto Krueger) is president of a big broadcasting company. And for all that Pop doesn't budge from the idea that radio isn't really here to stay, Grandfather finally convinces him that he is holding Molly back from the good things of life. He consents to having his daughter to go to live with her better-able-to-provide senior relative. Phony advice from friends makes her assume a snobbish attitude about things in general—and her grandfather's money, in particular—but comes Danny (Johnny Coy), who is Molly's love, and who gets her straightened out about a thing or three.

And Pop, meanwhile, has become a radio fan, through a World Series broadcast no less, and conceives an air show to represent both old and new talent. With Molly's help, he sells the idea to Grandpop, the new program clicks—and so do Molly and Danny. Happy ending!

DANGEROUS INTRUDER (PRC)—A mystery thriller involving mysterious deaths and huge fortune is solved by Jenny (Veda Ann Borg) while she convalesces at home of Maxwell Ducane (Chas. Arnt). Aided by fiancè Curtis (Richard Powers) she saves life of little girl (Jo Ann Marlowe) and sees that murderer gets just desserts.

THREE IN THE SADDLE (PRC) The Tin Cup Ranch out Texas-way is the setting for the fancy ridin' and shootin' of "The Texas Rangers" Tex Ritter and Dave O'Brien. Panhandle Perkins (Guy Wilkerson) assists in evicting "Heavies" Charles King, Jr., and Edward Howard from the ranch rightfuly owned by Peggy Barlow (Lorraine Miller).

JOHNNY ANGEL (RKO) Akin to the "To Have and Have Not" theme of intrigue—with a smattering of romance—this is a picture with similar wallop for mystery fans. A strong cast, headed by George Raft as Johnny Angel, Claire Trevor as the inevitable two-timing gal, Signe Hasso, a French refugee, and Hoagy Carmichael (of piano-tinkling fame), makes this a sure-fit for all cinema-goers.

The plotting is taken up with Johnny Angel's efforts to track down the mutineers who were responsible for his father's death aboard his ship, and the hijacking of eight million dollars in gold bullion. With the assistance of prophetic and philosophical taxi-driver Celestial O'Brien (Hoagy Carmichael), Johnny invades the "Quarter," a nest for spies and thieves in New Orleans, to garner information.

GLORIA DeHAVEN—MGM Star In "Between 2 Women"

It takes two shootings to resolve the mystery—but George Raft and Signe Hasso emerge unscarred, and we bid a fond farewell to them as they sail for Free France—with the eight million dollars!

TWICE BLESSED (MGM)—meaning the Wilde Twins, Lee and Lyn—and we defy you tell one from the other! Even their cinema mother and dad (Gail Patrick and Preston Foster) are confused, when the twins decide to change places. And thereby hangs the tale.

One turns out to be a veritable Quiz Kid, her sister emerges as the neighborhood's slickest chick. And wouldn't you know it? Each thinks the other's life is best. So, they pull a switch—with said transfer leading to any number of situations, all amusing.

WITHIN THESE WALLS (20th Century-Fox), stars Thomas Mitchell, playing the role of a prison warden in an escapist film having nothing whatever to do with war. Mary Anderson is the warden's pretty daughter, in love with Mark Stevens, one of the convicts; Eddie Ryan is Mary's erring young brother, always in trouble and finally—he's an inmate in his father's prison, helps to pull a "big break."

The story is reminiscent of others—"The Big House" and "I Am a Fugitive," to mention two—but lacking stature to warrant being anticipated as "the same as."

BOSTON BLACKIE'S RENDEZVOUS (Columbia)—And a mighty close shave it is, too, for Boston Blackie (Chester Morris)! His life with crime episode this time has to do with the escape of James Cook (Steve Cochran), homicidal maniac.

Intending to meet beauty contest winner Sally Brown (Nina Foch), the insane man, frustrated when he doesn't find Sally, kills her girlfriend. And as usual, Boston Blackie and his crime pal, The Runt (George E. Stone), are found at the scene of the murder and have to do a deal of explaining for what's such an incriminating coincidence, to our old chum Inspector Farraday (Richard Lane).

But, their innocence at last established to the Inspector's doubtful satisfaction, Blackie goes through an exciting game of hide-and-seek with the maniac murder man, finally trapping him—but of course!

ONE EXCITING NIGHT—(Pine-Thomas, released through Para.)—is spent by Pete Willis (Wm. Gargan) and Sue Gallagher (Ann Savage) when they try to buck up against a ruthless diamond thief (George Zucco) who holds life cheaply enough but puts great value on diamonds.

Pete and Sue are feuding reporters on competitive newspapers and their trials and antics in trying to trace the murderer of long-wanted gangster Joe Wells (George E. Stone) lead them through amusing incidents that start in a Wax Museum and end up in the middle of nowhere . . . on a ferry!

Paul Hesse, who's done more to glamorize the glamorous, via his famous portrait camera, than any press agent in town, is the guy officially credited as being Bob and Mary's personal Dan Cupid. Hesse played a hunch that the two would hit it off, beer-and-skittle-wise, and drove the lovely Miss E. to Bob's San Fernando Valley ranch home one Sunday, presumably for a swim. Bob, up to his imagination in interviews at the time, made with a quick though cordial "hello" and had to let it go at that.

But one look was apparently all he needed. He managed to see Mary every week after the initial handshake, and it wasn't long before the date was set for the Flyers' Chapel.

A proud product of South Carolina, Mary is blonde in an unnaturally (for Hollywood) natural sort of way. She's pretty, slim, and talented. She was a radio, screen, and stage actress until she promised Bob to make the new Mrs. Cummings title mean a new and exclusive career for her.

Hesse, elated over his match-making ability, turned over his photographic studio on the Strip for the elaborate wedding reception, and everybody whose name means enough to hit the columns regularly, turned out for the event, gasped appropriately over the towering wedding cake, and wrung out hearty congratulations on the groom's saluting hand.

The plans were perfect in every detail except that Fate and Hal Wallis got in the way of the honeymoon, and the following Monday morning Bob reported on the set at 9:00 A.M. sharp.

To stymie the hecklers who'd been having a field day for weeks before the Main Event, Bob had himself rolled onto the set in a wheel chair! Covered up to his chin in blankets, he sported an ice bag on his head and the Purple Heart was pinned conspicuously to his buzzum! The jesters admitted they'd been topped, and the court rested.

Mary's making her current headquarters at the Van Nuys Cummings manse, but she's planning on going to the Mira Loma Air Base with Bob the day he reports back to the field to resume his pilot instructor's duties.

"Even the Chamber of Commerce can't find anything complimentary to say about the weather at 'Splinter City' where we instructors live," Bob says. "It's definitely no place to take a bride, but Mary insists on taking over and running a home for me, and I admit I'm not putting up too much of an argument."

As we said before, the Cummings-Elliott nuptials of March 3rd were simple, sweet, and to the point. But we can't help wondering how Mrs. Ruth Cummings (the groom's mother, an ordained minister) managed to simplify the all-important query, "Do you, Charles Clarence Robert Orville, Blade Stanhope Conway, Brice Hutchens take Mary for your lawful wedded wife?"

A lesser woman, we know, would have collapsed from sheer exhaustion.

Although the Charles-to-Orville half of the name is just as legal as you can get, and right smack off the Joplin, Missouri birth certificate, the Blade-through-Hutchens part is an integral part of the Cummings success story, and as such cannot be ignored here.

"Blade Conway and Brice Hutchens may be just another pair of euphonious male names to most people. But to me," says the guy with the new-found luck, "they are two of the reasons I'm a star.

"It started," he says, "back in the early 30's when I waded knee-deep in stardust. I decided the only way to break through the ranks of the unemployed was to satisfy the then Broadway desire for English actors."

He cashed in on a small insurance policy and crossed the big pond for a season of "accenting" his positive baritone in the English countryside. The big idea smacked him one afternoon, and it wasn't too long before a pound note slipped from Bob's hand into the hip pocket of a local theatre's porter, and that worthy began slipping the letters that spelled "Blade Stanhope Conway" into the markee. Bob hotfooted it to the local lensman and had him immortalize the effect for Broadway's talent-mad producers.

The picture turned out magnificently. There was no mistaking the Cummings pan grinning beneath the markee that shrieked you-know-what name as star of Shaw's "Candida." Bob, paternally proud of his brainchild, promptly shipped off prints of the picture to New York's showmen.

This ingenious device ultimately landed our hero the romantic lead in "Earl Carroll's Vanities." He shared—and we use the word loosely—honors with Milton Berle.

Nothing loath to brushing up his newly-acquired stage technique, Bob kept his eyes and ears open until he had devoured, digested, and assimilated every trick of the trade. The result was that he assumed a smooth and finished revue style that landed him right in the middle of the memorial production of "Ziegfeld Follies," in which he cavorted through a series of uproarious skits with Eve Arden, Willie Howard, and Fannie Brice. The training proved invaluable and developed in him a magnificent timing and a Hope-esque type of delivery that later panicked audiences throughout the country, when he went on tour with one of Louella Parsons' personal appearance troupes.

But Broadway is fickle, and when the "Follies" closed, Bob sat around perfecting his method of cutting mental paper dolls.

Then his agent relayed the news that King Vidor was looking for a real and rugged Texan to play the lead in "So Red The Rose," and Bob dropped Blade Conway on one of his broad A's and became Bob Cummings, cow-poke

In Hollywood, Vidor put Cummings under his directorial microscope and saw a guy who looked like the real McCoy. His legs were obviously on intimate terms with a cow pony's back, his drawl dripped Panhandle, and his eyes squinted Texas-wise into the sun.

He got the job.

Bob returned to being Cummings again, although the name did nothing in the way of moving audiences to deluge him with fan letters, nor his studio to handing him anything more exciting than a flock of B pictures. Eventually he and the disinterested studio parted company, and he signed with Universal.

The only advantage this gave him was the fact that he was loaned to Warner Bros. for the important role of Parris in "Kings Row." He did "The Devil And Miss Jones" with Jean Arthur, and "Flesh And Fantasy," back on his home lot.

"But acting wasn't my first love," Bob says. "Back in Joplin I lost my heart to planes and began taking flying lessons. Somehow I managed to solo in just three days, and my first passenger was—amazingly enough—my mother."

Through the years that followed, he flew anything that had two wings and a prop. Some of the crates he took up were held together with little more than a flyer's faith. Some were sleek jobs right off the assembly lines. Bob accumulated an impressive number of air hours, and while Pearl Harbor was still numbing the complacent American public, he went out and joined the Civil Air Patrol.

Universal threw up its hands in horror!

Bob flew for CAP for months, convoying coast-wise shipping along the Atlantic seaboard. When our mushrooming fleet disposed of the sub menace once and for all, Bob felt the main job of the CAP was over. He returned to Hollywood and did "Princess O'Rourke" on loanout to Warners. Meanwhile he applied as test pilot out Lockheed way and finished the picture while he awaited word. Universal became unhappier, and finally put him on their suspension list, which automatically kept him jobless and out of other studios. Lockheed decided they were loaded with enough sky-devils to keep their planes tested from here to the post-duration period, and Bob went down to the Army Air Forces to offer his services.

Universal extended the suspension period.

Bob was delivered the news that, being over 27, he was too "old" to fly in combat, but that his record automatically qualified him as a flight instructor. So he scrawled his signature on a contract that bound him, for the duration plus six months, to the Army Air Forces as a civilian instructor.

A few months later he enlisted in the AAF and became Private Robert Cummings.

Simultaneously with his enlistment, Universal again extended his suspension. Brother Oscar Cummings, his manager-attorney, realizing that studio bigwigs were bent on winding up Bob's career in the dust of the well-known shelf, filed a right-to-work suit against them.

Small talk to you is big news to him!

SEND IT V-MAIL

MAIL is one of the most important factors influencing the morale and efficiency of our fighting men. Frequent and cheerful notes—even though short—are infinitely better than long, occasional letters.

But increasing the frequency of letters also increases the tremendous mail load to be carried in precious cargo space, particularly in planes.

INCREASED USE OF V-MAIL is the answer. V-Mail is not only ideal for short, frequent letters, but it is also expressly designed to save precious space on planes.

At the Mira Loma Air Base (near Lancaster, California) Bob went on training men, while the California courts brooded over a decision. That he finally won his release and an uncompromising victory over the studio, is now official.

It was because of the nature of "You Came Along" (it involves the War Bond tour of three wounded combat pilots) that the AAF saw fit to break a precedent and give Bob a leave-of-absence. Now, at the end of the last day's shooting, when the reels are all counted and canned, Bob goes back to Mira Loma to train a new batch of cadets.

His boys, incidentally, are a source of pride with him. As of April 1st, he had trained fifty-five young pilots now flying in combat. He got a real boot out of the news that one of his cadets, a Texas kid, downed three Nazi planes in his first five minutes of combat. Another ex-student, now in the Pacific theater, recently sent him a ring made from the prop of a Jap Zero he'd shot down.

Returning to the cameras after two years left Bob shaky. "Frankly," he says, "I was scared stiff at the prospect of having to face a camera again. During the 20-odd months I've been flying for the government, I figured I must have forgotten what little I might ever have known about acting. You know the business of preparing cadets for the job of aerial combat doesn't afford much time for extracurricular activities, like practicing how to be an actor. But after the initial shot was over, it was a lead-pipe cinch."

At 37 Bob still looks like a college kid. His grin falls into the "infectious" category. He's informal as a "T" shirt. A comely gent.

The timing he taught himself during his stage years has stuck. It is evident in his screen roles and in his private life. Today, while most people idly discuss their post-war plans, Bob can haul out the blueprints and scale model of the new home he'll put up on his San Fernando Valley acreage.

Because he is a graduate engineer, he's devised a solar heating system, hydraulic lifts, and a helicopter landing field on the roof. Orchards on the land prevent him installing a regulation field, but Bob has been convinced of the practicability of a roof landing for the windmill-type plane that threatens to replace the suburban family coupe.

From our vantage point behind this mechanized eight-ball, we point with pride to Bob Cummings; pilot instructor, husband (new wife), and actor (new contract). The world by the tail? Heck, he's got it in his vest pocket!

Learn the TRUTH about REDUCING

—and win the war against FAT cells. When reducing begins, there is civil war between FAT-CRAVING cells and your WILL. Fat cells are caused by HABIT—and the habit must be destroyed. YOU CAN WIN this battle, gain will-power, and be master of yourself.

I learned from a famous physician that there are four kinds of fat people. What reduces one may fatten another. This physician tells a thrilling story of two women, different in type, who visited Paris to become streamlined. They returned with perfect figures and enhanced beauty. Any woman can become streamlined by following the advice, secrets, and tricks of these Paris physicians.

Learn the truth about REDUCING. Get valuable information from my manuscript "Reducing Secrets Learned From Paris Physicians". $2.00 postpaid.

THIS IS YOUTH SPEAKING

matters and child training, but if she has no taste for home-keeping, this may not be true. In some instances the woman may have the better business head. Facts should be recognized. Just because you are a man, you don't automatically know everything.

"I think marriages should be honest. I'd hate to have my wife, if I had one, get her way in some subtle fashion. You can be gay, laugh and kid each other—but heck, why make a sap of your husband?"

Differences in religion used to be an insurmountable obstacle to marriage, but young Mr. Eythe is sure this is true no longer. The Eythes are Catholic, yet both Bill's sister and brother have married Protestants and are happy. It's a matter of increasing tolerance.

The idea now being advanced that subsidies should be arranged, either by parents or government, so that young people may marry early and start having families, meets with no great favor from Bill.

"We should take our own risks," he asserts. "Living on a slim budget could be fun; there'd be a triumph about each advance, a sharing not possible to the comfortably financed. The only exception might be where two people were at college when they fell in love and couldn't resist the urge to marry. It would be all right then for parents to finance the rest of their education, if their aim were a profession that would make them self-supporting. I think they should pay this advance back."

Careers, thinks Bill, are important now because there's so much to be done that we must all keep busy. Plenty to do saves the crise de nerf of war.

"Later, it's up to the individual to decide about careers. I'd hate to have my wife give up her career and throw it in my teeth afterward. A career is a hard master, demanding to be put first, and if there are children, the marriage may go on the rocks. Before making rules, the particular girl must be considered, for some girls would be frantic without important work. I hope I wouldn't resent my wife's career, if it made her happy."

That nagging problem of the wife who loves her job and the husband who enjoys running a home can be weathered temporarily, Bill believes.

"If circumstances make it necessary, and both work hard at their marriage, the situation can be handled. But in the long run it puts the wife on the defensive before her friends, who never approve of her earning the living, and the implied criticism he sees in every casual remark makes the man difficult to live with. In the end, cr-rash goes marriage."

Audrey Long, RKO's lovely young lead in "The Most Dangerous Game," believes the most important thing youth has to learn is to live NOW.

"You can't put off living until after the war. You must do all the work, have all the fun, give all the pleasure possible every day," she insists. "I believe in budgeting. War bonds are the best of boons because everyone saves. But after war bonds are bought and current expenses paid, something should be laid aside for luxuries and fun. What's the use of being young if you haven't something pretty for an important date? Or never giving a party, if you like parties? You can't put off dancing until you have arthritis, or wait for a fur coat until you have no beauty to set off with it. THIS MOMENT is important.

"If you'd asked me about subsidies for young-marrieds before the war, I'd have said NEVER! Struggle is a bond of matrimony, and sacrifice for each other draws people closer. But since I've been visiting Birmingham Hospital, where servicemen are rehabilitated, and have seen their incredible courage under suffering, their wonderful spirit, I believe nothing that can be done for them is too much. If a subsidy enables them to marry earlier and live normal lives, then let's give them subsidies! It's a debt to them, not a favor!"

If it's modern to believe that a bad marriage should be broken, then Audrey is strictly modern.

Audrey's father was a chaplain in the navy. A chaplain's family learns to make the most of very little money, and Audrey's best times were not expensive dates. "Pick out the right companion, and a hike through the woods or a beach picnic can be wonderful," she says.

That question of subsidies intrigues Hollywood's younger set.

"I think the younger generation has a pretty soft time, except for those directly connected with the war," declares Diana Lynn. "It wouldn't hurt any of us to struggle for a living. It would help our characters. But I won't shrug it off. If two people know that eventually they will inherit money, why not a marriage-settlement, if their people can afford it? Why should they wait till they are 65 before enjoying a fortune? They'd probably get a persecution-complex, run up debts and develop into a couple of meanies

"Most marriages break up over money. Education might make it possible for the man to earn a decent living, so I couldn't say 'No' to a fund that would help him there.

"Education is almost a phobia with me. I want to go to college. If I have a daughter, she'll go—if she knows what she wants to be. I'm appalled to learn that some of my former schoolmates now in college have no idea what they want to do. I went to a good private school, then attended high school at Paramount Studios. It wasn't as much fun as real high school, but my compensation was that I was doing what I most wanted to do. Now, if I could go to college—!"

Being in pictures, Diana believes, has taught her tolerance. Not that she has mastered that virtue, but she understands its value. "Since people gossip about everyone in this business, I realize they gossip about me," she observes. "I know that what they say of me is seldom so, therefore what they say of others must also rarely be true. I live and let live—or at any rate, I hope so"

Diana's views on advanced inheritances are echoed by Jeanne Crain (20th Century-Fox), but Jeanne doubts the value of subsidies which must be paid back.

"If we expect no future inheritance, we should consider if we are the kind of people who can take poverty," she says. "Some people don't need money to be happy—they have other resources, know how to make a little go

Why Be SKINNY?

When You, Too, May

GAIN WEIGHT

and Perhaps Have Those Full Glamorous Curves Men Admire

Are you thin, gawky, underweight due to lack of sufficient vitamins? Don't be! Let added weight help to round out your curves as Nature intended them to be. Men admire well developed, beautifully moulded women.

Poor appetite and lack of necessary vitamins probably cause many underweight conditions. You may eat three meals a day, yet be vitamin and mineral starved. BEAUTY FORM-TABS contain Vitamins A, B1, C, D, and G (B2) plus calcium pantothenate, phosphorus, and iron—which may be the vitamin and mineral supplement you need for that improved appetite and added weight that often means added curves on your figure.

A well developed, shapely, normal figure attracts, inspires, and often leads to love and romance. Use the BEAUTY FORM-METHOD to help you gain normal weight, thereby often transforming your figure into adorable rounded curves.

FREE with every order: Special Brochure on HOW TO IMPROVE the appearance of your CHEST and FIGURE.

Order the BEAUTY FORM-METHOD today. Only $2.00, postpaid if remittance accompanies order, or C.O.D. plus postage. Try it for 10 days at our risk. You must be satisfied or we guarantee to refund your money.

a long way, can do without luxuries and not be bitter. But others are naturally extravagant. They'd drive their marital partners mad if funds were curtailed.

"You can't look at life through a rosy cloud and think that love will settle life's problems. I agree that today's youth talks things over, frankly. Our grandmothers were taught to seem helpless in order to appeal to men; our mothers revolted and became too independent. No girl is modern if she doesn't know how to run things when necessary, but she won't be a successful wife unless she conveys the idea that her man can do it much, much better.

"People in Hollywood," observes Jeanne, "like to play at romance when cast as lovers in a picture. But the minute the last scene has been made, they forget all about it," she marvels.

"Subsidy of any kind is definitely wrong," says Richard Crane, of "Captain Eddie."

"I've provided against ever letting my wife (Kay Morley is his bride of a few months) support me," he confides. "I have insurance so that if I'm ill or incapacitated, a set sum will come in. We'll live on that."

No one should rush into matrimony, he believes. Let them know each other for years, see each other in every mood, understand what makes each one tick, and once they take their vows, let nothing break them. "I'll make my marriage work. If it seems headed for the rocks, I'll salvage it—because I'm determined not to fail.

Mona Freeman, whose performance in "Together Again" (Columbia) has rocketed her to stardom, does not believe young marriages are wise.

"The years between 14 and 21 should be for youthful fun," says the 18-year-old, seriously. "We're not fit for responsibilities of marriage until we've finished growing up.

Mona has earned money since she was 14 and believes that no girl should consider marrying unless she's learned to handle her own funds. "I'd rather have a woman handle my money than a man," she announces. "He is apt to be extravagant, spending on things that make a show, while a woman sees underneath, knows what's actually necessary and what can wait."

If Mona were to become a top star, drawing fantastic money, she'd still hope to marry for love. Money should not take a falsely prominent place in anyone's life, she thinks. "I'd choose a man who had other assets more valuable than riches. I hope he wouldn't be too proud to let me set him up in whatever business or profession interested him. I'd keep the rest of my money in my own name, as I'm sure he'd approve."

Paramount's genius-girl, Gail Russell, has known the lack of money and found it nothing to laugh off. She's in favor of a fund to help educate ambitious youth, whether or not they marry young.

Modern youth isn't ready to solve all life's problems, says Gail, who believes only a few of our grandmothers could afford to faint when crises occurred. Most of them were pioneers.

"Its hard for an independent girl to keep from becoming opinionated," she observes. "It's better to say: 'What do you think?' to a man, and let him tell you, or ask him to show you how to do something, if you think he'd like to."

Don't Stop Saving Paper NOW!

IN PAPER SALVAGE DRIVE FOR DURATION —These Paper Troopers won't stop collecting waste paper till the last Jap surrenders. Huge quantities of waste paper are still required to make or pack the thousands of items our Armed Forces must have! Send every scrap of paper to war!

HELP WOUNDED VETERANS, TOO!—Many local organizations collecting waste paper are channeling part of their waste paper funds to buy extra comforts for wounded, sick and disabled veterans. Such things as radios, head sets, cameras, photographic supplies, small tool work sets and free phone calls home are always welcome, and provide another big reason for saving waste paper.

Separate and tie in bundles: 1. Wastebasket scraps. 2. Carrugated boxes, brown paper and bags. 3. Magazines and books. 4. Newspapers.

these exciting young hair-dos!

On this page Drene brings you, through its Paris correspondent, news of how smart young Parisians are wearing their hair!

LOVELY MADELON MASON . . . one of New York's top-flight fashion models, a Cover Girl and a "Drene Girl" . . . posed for all three photographs. For this perky up-swept arrangement her hair was parted down middle from forehead to nape of neck, pulled up toward each side and tied firmly with narrow ribbon. The lustrous smoothness of Madelon's hair is due to Drene Shampoo with Hair Conditioning action, which Madelon always uses. No other shampoo leaves hair so lustrous yet so easy to manage.

No other Shampoo...

only Drene with Hair Conditioning action leaves your hair so lustrous, yet so easy to manage!

Make a Date with Glamour! Now . . . shampoo your hair the new glamour way! Get the combination of beauty benefits found only in Drene Shampoo with Hair Conditioning action. ✓ Extra lustre . . . up to 33% more sheen than with any kind of soap or soap shampoo! Because all soaps leave a film on hair which dulls lustre, robs your hair of glamour! Drene leaves no dulling film, brings out all the lovely gleam. ✓ Such manageable hair . . . easy to comb into smooth, shining neatness, right after shampooing. ✓ Complete removal of unsightly dandruff, the very first time you use this wonderful improved shampoo. So insist on Drene Shampoo with Hair Conditioning action, or ask your beauty shop to use it!

Drene Shampoo

WITH HAIR CONDITIONING ACTION

Product of Procter & Gamble

She Behaved like a Fool

UNTIL LOVE TAMED HER!

SHE wanted desperately to be loved, admired, respected; but she behaved like a fool—and earned nothing but the contempt of the very ones she cared for most. Twice she was jilted—then to hide her shame, fastened herself upon a nerve-shattered Veteran—and used him as a pawn in her selfish game. He knew what a fool she had been—what a fool she was making of him—but he pitied her until, at the right moment, he tamed her with the whiplash of truth—the truth which others had feared to tell her! And instead of disaster they found peace and happiness!

As the Philadelphia Inquirer says, "'Image of Josephine' adds a notable figure to Tarkington's gallery of feminine portraits that already includes the unforgettable Alice Adams, Kate Fennigate, and Claire Ambler. It is one of his best books." In 'Image of Josephine' you will thrill to the regeneration of a selfish, misguided woman; you will cheer the courageous Lieutenant; and at last you will love them both, as they loved each other. Read 'Image of Josephine'—a copy will be sent to you free if you join the Literary Guild Book Club now.

BOOTH TARKINGTON'S

"IMAGE OF JOSEPHINE"

The Literary Guild Book Club is proud to have selected in recent months such books as 'Leave Her to Heaven,' 'Green Dolphin Street,' 'Earth and High Heaven,' 'Captain from Castile,' 'Great Son,' and 'The Razor's Edge'—all of which were, and still are, sensational best sellers all over the country. Our members received their copies of these books long before the book-buying public appreciated their outstanding merit—and at a considerable saving over the publishers' regular price. Now comes 'Image of Josephine' by Booth Tarkington—another smash hit—which is offered to you FREE as an example of the kind of reading entertainment you will receive as a member.

GUILD MEMBERSHIP COSTS NOTHING

THE extraordinary savings which you make on new books alone make Literary Guild membership worth while. There are no dues or fees. There is no obligation on your part to accept a book every month after you have joined. Your sole obligation as a Guild subscriber is to accept, at $2.00 each, four Guild selections in the course of a full year, and this means any four selected by you from the Guild list of more than a dozen best-seller selections. These selections are brand-new books, full-sized, cloth-bound new works by outstanding modern authors. Each month's selection is chosen by our Editorial Staff from proofs submitted by the publishers long in advance of their publication date. Every selection is printed at the same time as the publisher's edition which is on sale simultaneously at retail for not less than $2.50 and often for as much as $4.00.

Save 50% on New Books

The Guild manufactures for its subscribers such a large edition of the book chosen by the Editorial Staff that great savings in cost can be effected. The savings are passed on to subscribers in the form of lower prices, and in still another way: The Literary Guild gives each subscriber a FREE Bonus Book as soon as four Guild selections have been purchased at only $2.00 each. This FREE book is always a popular new title, selling at retail for $2.50 to $4.00. The cash savings, plus bonus books given during the year, save you at least 50% on the selections you decide to purchase.

Brochure "WINGS" Free

As a Guild member you receive FREE each month the famous Guild Brochure, "Wings," which contains illustrated articles about the current selection and its author. "Wings" is sent to subscribers one month in advance so that it describes the book selected for the following month. If you feel you do not want to examine the book, merely return the accompanying form, which notifies the Guild not to send it when the time comes. On the other hand, if the selection sounds interesting, you let it come automatically for your approval. "Wings" is also an invaluable guide to all important current reading, for each month it keeps you informed of new publications by reviewing about 30 other new books.

Send No Money — Just Mail Coupon

Guild service will start and your free copy of "Image of Josephine" will be sent you immediately upon acceptance of your free membership. As a new member you can now buy any of the following recent Guild selections for only $2.00 each. See coupon.

Captain from Castile, By Samuel Shellabarger. (Publisher's Price, $3.00)

Green Dolphin Street, By Elizabeth Goudge. (Publisher's Price, $3.00)

Leave Her to Heaven, By Ben Ames Williams. (Publisher's Price, $2.50)

Earth and High Heaven, By Gwethalyn Graham. (Publisher's Price, $2.50)

Guild membership is your answer to "What's good to read?" and your guarantee of purchasing only NEW best sellers of your choice at a saving of at least 50%. Mail coupon now.

The METRO-GOLDWYN-MAYER'S
LION'S ROAR

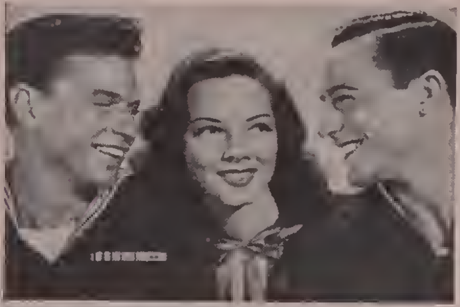
Published in this space every month

The greatest star of the screen!

We've just composed a two-word definition of good motion picture entertainment. It's "Anchors Aweigh", the title of M-G-M's big Technicolor musical salute with a full complement of 21 show-stopping numbers.

* * * *

Here's the picture with everything: Stars, a good story, gifted direction, music, dancing, and that certain something to make you completely content.



First for the stars. "Anchors Aweigh" has Frank Sinatra, Kathryn Grayson, Gene Kelly, and Jose Iturbi.

* * * *

From FRANK SINATRA you get four numbers, duets with other principals, and—shiver our timbers!—some fancy footwork as a bonus! From honey-throated KATHRYN GRAYSON you get the title song, a Spanish number, six popular arias, and that smash song, "All of a Sudden My Heart Sings"!

* * * *

From GENE KELLY you get plenty of the dazzle-dancing you expect—only it's more dazzling—plus duets with Frankie and Kathryn, and a dance number with —we swear it!—an animated mouse!

* * * *

From the three you get romantic escapades with complications of hilarity. From JOSE ITURBI you get music—by a 100-piece band, a symphony orchestra, a Hollywood Bowlful of 18 grand pianos!

* * * *

From these four—and from Dean Stockwell, Pamela Britton, "Rags" Ragland, Billy Gilbert, Henry O'Neill—you get the merry musical story of two sailors on leave in Hollywood with nothing on their minds but what you'd expect.

* * * *

Isobel Lennart's screen play provides many a gay situation which George Sidney's direction and Joe Pasternak's production turn into sheer delight.

* * * *

Technicolor enhances the beauty, gaiety, and charm of it all.

* * * *

It doesn't take a prophet to forecast the success of "Anchors Aweigh". It's a nautical nifty from M-G-M's top musical drawer.

ZING WENT MY HEART STRINGS:

June lived up to its reputation in Hollywood, to wit:

Judy Garland entered the office of her great friend and employer, L. B. Mayer, and said regretfully that she wished he were going to be in New York for her marriage to director Vincent Minnelli—it seemed a shame that he couldn't be present at the ceremony.

Said Mr. Mayer, "If you'd get married here, I'd be there. I'd even give you away."

So Judy decided instantly that she would be married in Hollywood and made arrangements. The ceremony was performed by Dr. William E. Roberts of the Beverly Hills Community Church; Betty Asher, Judy's long-time buddy, was maid of honor, and best man was Ira Gershwin.

From the Garland-Minnelli wedding, Dr. Roberts drove hurriedly to the home of Donna Reed, where he married Donna and Tony Owen, her agent. Donna's bridesmaid was her sister, Lavonne Mullenger, and the best man was Walter Van Pelt.

Both the newlywed Minnellis and the newlywed Owens left on the same honeymoon train, Judy and Vincent bound for New York and Canada, and Tony and Donna on their way to Dennison, Iowa.

MR JINX (no relation to the comic strip "Brenda Starr, Reporter.")

In 1941 Jinx Falkenburg was in New York on a personal appearance tour and met a newspaper man named Tex McCrary. He was tall, personable, charming; he was instantly taken with vivacious Jinx and gave her a handsome ring. But he was convinced that the U. S. was going to get into the war; he and Jinx decided to wait for marriage.

So, four years later, after Lt. Colonel Reagan McCrary had returned from his tour of duty with the 8th Fighter Command in England, Jinx met him in New York. They were married in a double ring ceremony by Supreme Court Justice Ferdinand Pecora at his home. Jinx wore a light blue sheer wool dress and her hair was bound with a halo of pink, red and white carnations. Her matron of honor was her mother, Mrs. Marguerite Falkenburg, and Tex' best man was Jinx' 19-year-old brother, Bob Falkenburg.

LUCKY NUMBER:

Deanna Durbin signed her first film contract on the 13th of the month, and there are 13 letters in her legal name: Edna May Durbin. She has always made it a point to start her pictures on the 13th, and in many other ways she has paid spiritual tribute to the number that she considers lucky.

Latest bow toward numerology was the selection of June 13th for her marriage to her producer, Felix Jackson. Deanna's matron of honor was her sister, Mrs. Clarence Heckman, and Mr. Heckman was best man. The ceremony was performed in Las Vegas, Nevada.

First reaction of fans: No! No! No! The letters began to pour in in much the same fashion they did after the release of Deanna's first mature-problem picture, "Christmas Holiday." Gist: "You are too young for this man; you are too sweet to marry a man who has already had three wives."

Apparently it didn't occur to these dissenters that a man Deanna would choose to marry must possess the attributes she most admires: Intellect, knowledge of the arts, charm, and true spiritual quality.

Col. star Jinx Falkenburg flew to N. Y. to wed Lt. Col. Tex McCrary, just back from overseas.

SHORTAGE DEPARTMENT:

When Lee Bowman moved to Santa Monica, he couldn't—natch—get a telephone. He was needed on the set at Columbia one morning at 7 A.M. instead of 9, his regular call, so someone at the studio, knowing Lee couldn't be reached by telephone, sent him a telegram. Lee arrived happily at 9 at the studio; the telegram was delivered at noon by an octogenarian.

Whether the practice is elegantly emilypost or not, Rosalind Russell has always chewed gum between scenes while making a picture because it seems to reduce her nervous tension. The other day, between shots of "She Wouldn't Say Yes" someone noticed Miss Russell's jaws working suspiciously. "Where did you get that gum?" demanded someone. Said Miss Russell, "Are you kidding? Where would I get gum? It's just an old rubber band."

of their house. Among other things, one of John's responsibilities is doing the family marketing. Just before leaving the studio where he is working in "The Postman Always Rings Twice," John scanned the list of purchases prepared by his wife. He stopped a workman to place a question. "What in the world is this stuff?" he asked. "Look:—Romaine. What's that?"

Tables in good restaurants are just as scarce as diamond-bearing dewberry bushes. Loretta Young, sitting alone at a table because her luncheon companion was late in arriving, noticed a Naval Lieutenant-Commander and his mother looking disconsolate over being told that there were no tables available that noon, nor would there be even if the visiting pair waited. Miss Young leaned out, called, "Please join me, I'm anxious for some company." So, if a charming member of your Minnesota bridge club came home from a visit with her Naval officer son with the story that she had luncheon with Loretta Young—it's true.

PROFESSIONAL JEALOUSY:

Probably you saw, at your neighborhood theatre, the war bond short made by Bing and his four boys. Your Inside Hollywood reporter had the fun of watching the short being photographed on the grassy quadrangle at RKO.

Making a sound sequence in the open air is a tedious and nerve-shattering task. Shooting on this particular short started at nine one morning, yet the completed film, brief as you know it was, was not in the cans until noon.

Reasons for the delays were many: early that morning a flight of the new P-81s went over. Naturally, all recording had to stop until the planes had disappeared and the mechanical thunder of their motors had dispersed. After that a series of four-engine jobs shook the sky. One take was spoiled by the approach of an innocent water vendor whose tin cart clinked merrily into the mike. Another scene had to be re-recorded because a bandsaw in the nearby woodworking shop was turned on; after that, the track was agitated by the distant rumble of someone moving furniture. A courier had to be dispatched to secure silence.

Finally, everything was quiet. The camera rolled, the mike recorded. At which point three mockingbirds, who had been observing Bing's behavior from a high branch, burst into a frenzy of conversation.

Bing cut his lines, rested his hands on his hips, sighed upward with the reproachful remark, "Oh gosh, fellas! You, too?"

OUT OF THE MOUTHS OF BABES:

Jeremy Prince, the small son of Bill Prince, is an analytical character. Told by his mother to pull on a sweater before going outdoors, he asked that perennial juvenile question, "Why?"

"So you won't catch cold," said his mother.

"Does a person ALWAYS get a cold if he doesn't wear a sweater?" asked Master Prince.

His mother is still trying to be a logical parent. "Not always, Jeremy," she admitted. "One must be chilled, AND there must be a germ present to cause a cold."

Jeremy mulled this over. "Why don't the germs wear sweaters then?" he said.

Gloria de Haven and John Payne are expecting Santa Claus and the stork at the same time.

Movieland's New Picture Guide

WEEK-END AT THE WALDORF (M-G-M) starts, as Robert Benchley is there to tell you, on an ordinary Friday afternoon at the New York hostelry of the same name (or an amazingly like movie-set facsimile thereof). With Ginger Rogers, Lana Turner, Walter Pidgeon, Van Johnson, Edward Arnold, Phyllis Thaxter, Keenan Wynn; directed by Robert Z. Leonard, produced by Arthur Hornblow, Jr., suggested by a Vicki Baum play.

To comment that the whole idea is reminiscent of "Grand Hotel" would be obvious—and besides, not original with this commentator. The script writers thought of it first! To be surprised that there's such a big cast of big names . . . check that one off, too; because it's offering one couple for comedy, another twosome for romantic boy and girl heart tugs, and a lot of other people for reasons that don't need to classify exactly, simply because there always are a lot of people at a place like the Waldorf.

But in any case, more important than any of these several threads of tied-together story is the fact that Walter Pidgeon proves being a good comedian without being a Mr. (i.e. without all this he's had such a series of, and Greer Garson too). And item No. 2—not necessarily to be considered in this order, which is mere coincidence; that Phyllis Thaxter is star-stuff, enthusiastically so-rated by this reviewer. And furthermore . . . it's a good picture! Music by Xavier Cougat and his orchestra.

JUNIOR MISS (20th Century-Fox)—Adapted from the stage play, which was based on the Sally Benson stories, comes a sprightly comedy of the mishaps of an average family with growing children.

Judy Graves (Peggy Ann Garner) takes the lead in making life alternately miserable and happy for her parents and others. Like all adolescents, she has a "very close friend"—Fuffy (Barbara Whiting). Between the two they hatch all kinds of plots (situations to them have their counterpart in a movie they've seen, and all people have to do to resolve their problems is pattern themselves on a movie star). Allyn Joslyn plays the harried father and has the right amount of resignation to keep him out of the booby hatch at his child's antics. Mona Freeman is the slightly elder sister before whom marches a procession of youthful swains in various states of adolescence. Among the shy, stuttering, brash and likeable youths are William Frambes, Ray Klinge, Mickey Titus, and Eddy Hudson. Through the connivance of Judy and her "very close friend" Fuffy, a romance is dreamed up between Michael Dunne and Faye Marlowe. Luckily for the plot, they learn to love each other in short order.

It is a well-cast picture, rife with riotous gags, fast pace and sparkling witticisms.

CHRISTMAS IN CONNECTICUT (Warner Bros.), based on an original story by Aileen Hamilton, is all that the title implies—with tinsel on it!

It's Barbara Stanwyck caught in a series of hilariously funny situations (not funny to her!), as the sophisticated city gal writer of a good food and happy home magazine feature. She's Mrs. Elizabeth Lane, a contented wife and mother; she lives on a farm in Connecticut, and when she suggests recipes they're her own favorites, tried first in her own little kitchen . . . so goes the illusion created in the minds of her adoring readers, and to her publisher (Sydney Greenstreet) that spells "good circulation."

But what happens, when the deceived publisher plans a Christmas which he thinks will please those harmlessly deceived readers, and issues a big boss directive for entertaining a hungry, homeloving, rescued from many days at sea in a lifeboat sailor (Dennis Morgan) . . . only there's no Mrs. Lane (not really) and no farm in Connecticut (except if she agrees to marry a farm-owning architect, Reggy Gardiner, for purposes of filling this rush-order request for home with husband), and no baby for her to be a mother of (except an assorted daily-different, all sexes, collected from defense-working mothers in the neighborhood)???

Honest, you wouldn't believe us if we told you! With a milk cow in the kitchen, and a parson in the parlor waiting to perform the marriage service for a couple everyone as-

The discovery of Tampax (for monthly sanitary protection) is always worth a letter to a girl's best friend and confidante . . . Tampax brightens up your life in several ways. It frees you from that weary routine of belts, pins and external pads. Being worn internally, it can cause no odor, which eliminates another worry. And because it's so compact, you can always keep an "advance supply" in your purse or desk or locker—so inconspicuously!

Perfected by a doctor, Tampax is made of pure surgical cotton throughout. It comes to you in neat, slender applicators, making insertion quick and easy. Your hands need not even touch the Tampax. . . . No belts or pins. No chafing. No bulges to show through clothing. Easy to dispose of. . . . Join the millions now using Tampax regularly. (Especially popular in the big women's colleges.)

You can wear Tampax in tub or shower—or while swimming. Sold at drug and notion counters in 3 absorbency-sizes. A month's average supply slips in your purse! Tampax Incorporated, Palmer, Mass.

AT METRO-GOLDWYN-MAYER:

EARLY TO WED, in Technicolor, is in its third month of production with Lucille Ball, Van Johnson, Esther Williams, Keenan Wynn, Carlo Ramirez, Ben Blue, Cecil Kellaway, Gladys Cooper and June Lockhart. A wonderful thing happened on this set the other day. A Los Angeles police officer strolled up to Keenan Wynn, grinning, and shook hands. In the Air Corps he had been Lt. Chet Walsh and had flown Keenan over China and Burma when Keenan was on his overseas entertainment trip. When Keenan told Lt. Walsh goodbye at Kwajelein, he had said, "When you get to Hollywood, look me up."

So, when it developed in conversation that Lt. Walsh had been out of the army for several months, Keenan said, "Fine thing! Why didn't you look me up before this?"

Said Lt. Welch, "The first thing I did after I changed from army uniform to police uniform was to pick you up after your motorcycle accident. You weren't in good condition for social conversation at the time, so I waited until now to check up on you."

SHE WENT TO THE RACES is keeping James Craig busy; also Frances Gifford, Edmund Gwenn, Reginald Owen, Sig Ruman, and J. M. Kerrigan.

THE POSTMAN ALWAYS RINGS TWICE is the cinema version of James M. Cain's thumping story of romantic madness and murder, with Lana Turner, John Garfield, Cecil Kellaway (brilliant as the husband), Leon Ames, Hume Cronyn, and Jeff York.

THIS STRANGE ADVENTURE, as you remember from last month, is the story of a merchant seaman who falls in love with a librarian. The seagoing gentleman is Clark Gable and the librarian is Greer Garson. Also included in the excitement are Joan Blondell, Tommy Mitchell, John Qualen, Larry Burke, and Esther Howard.

A LETTER FROM EVIE is the story of a romantic girl (Marsha Hunt) who works in a shirt factory. She slips a note into a size 16½, going to the army. This shirt is received by John Carroll who is already knee deep in dames, so he tosses it aside. The note is picked up by Hume Cronyn, a sweet, sincere little guy, who answers it. This starts a terrific correspondence between Hume and Marsha, who mails Hume her picture. Carroll, seeing the picture, decides that This Is Merchandise For Him, and follows Hume to Marsha's home. Pamela Britton as The Other Girl helps to solve the problems presented by the above situation.

AT UNITED ARTISTS:

YOUNG WIDOW is Jane Russell's second picture. The first was The Outlaw which was shown in only a few places, because of violent censor trouble. Opposite Jane is Louis Hayward, and included in the cast are Kent Taylor, Penny Singleton, Connie Gilchrist, Marie Wilson, Louise Beaver, and Betty Newling.

DUEL IN THE SUN, in Technicolor, is under way again after long delay. Jennifer Jones plays the madcap hoyden, loved equally by Joseph Cotten and Gregory Peck. Also in the cast: Lillian Gish, Lionel Barrymore, Scott McKay, Butterfly McQueen, and Steve Dunhill.

GETTING GERTIE'S GARTER is an Edward Small Production with Dennis O'Keefe, Marie McDonald, Barry Sullivan (who was excused from army duty because he had just passed the 30 mark), Binnie Barnes, Sheila Ryan, and Jerome Cowan.

AT RKO:

DEADLINE AT DAWN is a recount of the adventures of a sailor (Bill Williams) who buys ten dollars worth of tickets at a taxi dance hall in order to spend his shore leave hours with the hostess of his choice (Susan Hayward). He becomes involved in murder, a crime that must be solved in time for him to return to his ship. Also lurking through the shadows are Paul Lukas, Osa Massen, Joseph Calleia, Lola Lane, Marvin Miller and Joseph Sawyer.

DICK TRACY in the person of Morgan Conway, Anne Jeffreys as Tess Truehart, and various other characters such as Mike Mazurki, Mickey Kuhn, Edmund Glover, and Jane Greer are scorching up and down Gower Street.

AT 20TH CENTURY-FOX:

KITTEN ON THE KEYS, in Technicolor, is now in its third month of production. Story of a plain girl who becomes beautiful through love, etc., etc., etc. (Formula No. 1B), but you may count upon it to be good by reason of the presence of Dick Haymes, Maureen O'Hara, Harry James and his Music Makers (who will be in New York when you read this), Reginald Gardiner, Stanley Prager, Paul Harvey and Almira Sessions.

NOW IT CAN BE TOLD is distinguished by William Eythe, Lloyd Nolan, June Lockhart, Leo G. Carroll and Rene Carson.

THE SPIDER is in its first month of production with brilliant Richard Conte, Faye Marlowe, Martin Kosleck, Harry Seymour and Charles Tanne.

THE ENCHANTED VOYAGE, in Technicolor, was shot principally in New Orleans. John Payne, June Haver, handsome Charles Russell, Charlotte Greenwood, Connie Marshall, Clem Bevans, John Ireland (getting a studio buildup) and Irving Bacon are being directed by Lloyd Bacon.

FALLEN ANGEL is Alice Faye's first picture in two years. She sings only one song in this one, "SLOWLY" by the man who wrote "LAURA", but it is so good that it will undoubtedly score on the Hit Parade. Also in the picture are Dana Andrews, Linda Darnell, Charles Bickford, Bruce Cabot, Percy Kilbride and Anne Revere.

LILLIAN ALBERTSON, RKO's brilliant dramatic coach, teaches beauty. And we've been sharing Rita Corday's invisible charm course!

Make-up and hairstyling have no part in our mentor's mandates. Her domain has to do with "put and take."—putting a lilt in blonde and blooming Rita's voice—taking out her international accent. For Rita's problem is a special one. Although a Swiss citizen she was born in Papeite, Tahiti, and her background includes French, Spanish and Italian ancestry. Here, in short form are some hints which have helped her. They should help you too, because while voice control and perfect speech are necessities to an actress, they are also invaluable assets to amateur allure.

Practice Pointers Rita masters manuscripts by reading them aloud with so much expression that her listener is not aware of the printed words, only of the story. Get a sympathetic audience for this control caper and try it yourself!

Rita reads the ads, for everything from face cream to foot aids. She reads them slowly, then quickly. She says them sadly, gaily, with boredom and with animation. For you, ten minutes a day of this type of training. Exaggerate, overstress and over act as you read. Only a suggestion of this exaggeration will remain to give your ordinary speech more color.

Listening In No one is tone-deaf. Listen to your own voice and consciously try to correct its faults. Listen to the radio and to your favorite actresses. Imitation brings about immense improvement. Listen intently, to every conversational companion. True interest is the truest form of flattery. Your alert awareness makes you a much more attractive audience.

NOTHING new under the sun? Applied to Paramount Pictures, after a third of a century, we're tempted to make it, "There's nothing in motion picture making that Paramount hasn't done!"

Anyway, to tell you why August 26 to September 29 is being celebrated as "Paramount Month" . . . it's observing achievements dating back to 1912, even before that date; for the story really begins when the boy Adolph Zukor (who founded Paramount, and today serves as chairman of its Board of Directors) was an orphan in the village of Risce, Hungary, apprenticed to Herman Blau, owner of the general store. When he had saved $40 from his meagre earnings, Adolph embarked for the United States. He encountered many ups and downs——as an upholsterer, amateur boxer and baseball player——before he became a partner in a fur manufacturing concern.

Adolph Zukor soon was regarded as a success, with a fortune of between one and two hundred thousand dollars, when he became interested in the Penny Arcade. Getting a 20% profit on his investment in the Arcade, Zukor had a peep at the possibilities of the amusement business—which was what prompted his forming a partnership with William A. Brady, one of the best-known men in the theatrical world at that time (1905), for starting a chain of motion picture theaters. Zukor combined his chain with one owned by Marcus Loew, in 1910. And when finding pictures proved to be their major problem, Zukor and Loew took the unprecedented step of importing from France a four-reel film, "Queen Elizabeth," which Sarah Bernhardt had made.

So, one thing led to another, as you can see . . . and Zukor formed the Famous Players Company and signed an impressive group of Broadway stars.

The history of Paramount as we know it today, however, takes "The Squaw Man" as a starting point. With Jesse L. Lasky, Cecil B. DeMille and Dustin Farnum (the first two had been successful stage producers, Farnum had been the star of "The Squaw Man" in New York), Zukor went out to the sleepy little suburb of Hollywood; they leased an old barn at the corner of Vine Street and Selma Avenue, and they were in business.

Since then, of course, much has happened — expansions, new developments, a long record of progress and improvement antedating the list of current offerings: "Incendiary Blond," "A Medal for Benny," "Out of This World," "You Came Along," "Duffy's Tavern," "Love Letters," "Kitty," and "Two Years Before the Mast."

We say it's an enviable record, and are glad for this anniversary occasion to pay tribute, together with at least two generations of movie fans, for all that Paramount Pictures have contributed.

To Martha, With Love and Hisses

MARTHA VICKERS is the only gal in town who honestly hopes she'll be hated!

Actually loathing a kid like her is a darned big assignment, because the Vickers shapely five-feet-four form is topped off with a face full of as sweet a set of features as you've seen in a month of Sundays. And the face is fetchingly framed with light-brown hair that might have been swiped right off of Jeannie-with-the.

But just let the sweet-looking Martha make a pass at her personal copy of "The Big Sleep" script, and you'll have to dive for the nearest fox-hole for protection. As "Carmen" in that superwhodunit with Humphrey Bogart and "the Look" that's known as Bacall, Martha is the nastiest gal to hit the screen in ages, with prevarication, dope-addiction, epilepsy, acute alcoholism and murder just sort of incidental music to the characterization.

Martha's fate—and we do mean acting—was inevitable, despite her concert pianist-mother's efforts in a musical behalf, and her artist-business man-father's desire to have her become a famous land and/or seascapist. Her inclination toward emotion for pay cropped up at the questionable age of five, when she began practicing hand movements before a mirror.

From then on it was a lead-pipe cinch. The gal's ambitions grew through a series of cities that sound like the answer to a train-caller's prayer: Fort Lauderdale, Miami, St. Petersburg, Detroit, Dallas, Long Beach, and Los Angeles. And with the growing came experience—Beth in a high school rendition (try the literal sense on this

"Week-end At The Waldorf" (MGM) is a modern role for Walter. Ginger Rogers is the leading lady. Robert Z. Leonard directs

THE most uncommon name . . . the most imposing feet . . . the most imperturbable charm in Hollywood . . . all these belong to Walter Pidgeon.

The name, punning to the contrary, bears no relation to that other Hollywood bird, the gin-rummy addict. It was inherited from his merchant dad, Caleb Pidgeon, and before that, from a long line of sea-faring ancestors who docked their schooners in his native port of St. John, New Brunswick.

All long-standing jokes, bon mots or just plain bright-sayings on the name business can be neatly finished off right in these first paragraphs simply by registering the recent remark of a young lady in M-G-M's property department who, every day for a week, typed out an order for "a crate of Pidgeons" to be used in a farm scene.

"I'm sorry," she said with a blush when corrected, "I—I didn't know it was spelled any other way!"

The feet are size 13 and give credence to the foul rumor that Garbo quit pictures because she couldn't hope to equal Pidgeon's standing. For anyone interested in knowing just what it means to have so much turned up at the bottom, it might be said that some of the swankest hotel towel racks in the country have been decorated with Walter's socks, which must be specially woven, and which he lovingly rinses out each night in the nearest washbowl. On location he does the same, and sleeps with one eye open to thwart the unkind souls who would borrow one for a muffler.

The foot subject, too, can be given a quick wind-up by echoing a statement which has become a sort of college yell at Metro. It started one day when a retake of the star was needed, and since it was a back view, someone suggested they save Walter a trip to the studio and use a stand-in for the shot. The director shook his head. "Nobody can fill Pidge's shoes," he said firmly. It spread around the lot, and when they use it these days they're not kidding—both ways!

The charm, also congenital, is a subject not so easily dismissed—even if anybody wanted to. Among its components is an ubiquitous sense of humor and an unfailing choice of the right words for the right occasion, both of which he had with him the day "Mrs. Parkington" finished shooting:

Swim Session

Looks as if it might be a pleasure to walk the plank for Barbara Lawrence and Mary Anderson. But who wouldn't go overboard for these two lovelies?

Water battles are a favorite sport. Runs in the family? Roddy's father is an officer in British Merchant Marine.

Roddy made a big splash in pictures when he came to USA from London. Current movie is "Molly And Me"

Girls had a head start, but guess who won? Yep, those manly shoulders had little trouble in outdistancing the determined (but delicate) gals.

Most Hollywood starlets get an early start in the dramatic biz, but Roddy's training began in London, at the tender age of eight.

DREAM of a lifetime (16 years!) came true when 20th Century's Roddy McDowall heard of a swimming pool with vacant house attached and convinced his family they should take over. After the mad rush of getting settled, Roddy's gang—Elizabeth Taylor, Mary Anderson, Barbara Whiting, Hazel Dawn, Adina Goodman, Lorraine Bendix (Bill's daughter), Barbara Lawrence, Eddie Ryan, Jimmy Cardwell, Cpl. John Ralles, and Lt. James Mason—descended on the McDowall clan for a favorite Hollywood pastime—a swim session!

Roddy and sister Virginia were host and hostess, but it was Mrs. McDowall who saw to it that there were no casualties and that everyone had plenty to eat. (How those kids can put it away!)

Always in the swim, MOVIELAND was on hand to click a lens over the frolic.

Pulchritude was furnished by Eliz. Taylor, Lorraine Bendix, Barb. Lawrence, Virginia, and Mary Anderson.

Swim sessions were temporarily halted when Roddy left for p. a. and war bond tour throughout the east.

Accidentally YOURS

DENNIS O'KEEFE's rise to stardom is in the American tradition, that if a man has ability, works hard enough and has sufficient patience, success will inevitably be his reward!

In Hollywood, the usual pattern is obscurity today and fame tomorrow. But it took Dennis O'Keefe precisely fourteen years to cross that intangible line.

For seven years he was an extra. The succeeding years were marked by gradual, and at times imperceptible, progress. But with his superb performance as Arkansas in "The Story of Dr. Wassell," and his brilliant farce characterization in "Abroad With Two Yanks," his versatile talents could no longer be questioned or overlooked by Hollywood producers. Today, he is in the enviable position of having more leading roles offered him than he can possibly accept.

Since sound came in, the transition from extra to star has been made by less than half a dozen players. As a result, fables arise around those fortunate few. (Continued on page 70)

WHO'S NEW . . .

HOLLYWOOD'S full of them—beautiful, strong, hopeful, talented young people—all eager for a future which will bring stardom, wealth and fame. They think.

Most of those now thronging the boulevards will never get one foot inside a studio. Many of those who sign on dotted lines will be somewhere else, doing something different, three years from now. A very few will be famous.

Here are half a dozen youngsters—Lizabeth Scott, Audrey Totter, Janis Page, Charles Drake, Don DeFore, Bill Williams—all of whom have made their first fine impressions on Hollywood pages.

Lizabeth Scott was discovered by Hollywood in the same fashion as was 1944's sensation, Lauren Bacall. And I mean fashion. (Each of them was a model. Remember?)

In Lizabeth's case, what her discoverer didn't know was that she was already an accomplished actress, with experience on Broadway. She had been Tallulah Bankhead's understudy in "Skin of our Teeth." Giving up hope of Tallulah's breaking a leg or her neck, Lizabeth resigned. One month later, an agitated manager telephoned her at 7:45 one night. Miss Bankhead couldn't go on, her understudy was capable of playing the role: for crying out loud, would Miss Scott come over and act? The house was sold out; it might be Lizabeth's Big Chance. (Continued on page 62)

AUDREY TOTTER came to Hollywood via soap box operas.

CHARLES DRAKE'S next will be "Conflict," W. B.

LIZABETH SCOTT and DON DEFORE both had N. Y. stage experience first.

"Jackie Coogan and I were kids when we married. After my divorce, George (Raft) was my 'steady'."

"My happiness depends on two human beings—my husband (Harry) and my baby!"

ALL of us, smart or dumb, have one very human trait in common: whenever we start thinking back over our past lives, we invariably promise ourselves: "If I had a second chance, I wouldn't make that mistake again!" Probably so. Given that second chance, plus the knowledge of the outcome, most of us would choose different turnings along the paths of our lives.

At the risk of sounding insufferably smug, however, I'm frank to admit that there isn't one phase of my life I would change if a could!

I've made mistakes along the way, of course, and some of them have been pretty costly ones, both to my career and my personal happiness. No one knows it better than I. But—the past always must be reconciled in (Continued on page 60)

I LOVE
- Life;
- To eat;
- To sleep;
- Angie, my cocker spaniel;
- Trying new things;
- California weather;
- Water. My family used to say I was part fish; when I was little, I'd sit in the bath-tub to study my lessons.

I CANT BEAR
- Overcooked or highly seasoned foods;
- Stuffy rooms;
- Tight clothes;
- Stiff hairdoes;
- Liprouge on teeth;
- Garlic;
- Hats.

I LIKE ABOUT MYSELF
- My health;
- My disposition;
- That I'm so happy;
- That I enjoy almost everybody and everything.

I DISLIKE ABOUT MYSELF
- My thoughtlessness. I tell myself it's immaturity, but I'll have to grow up sometime.
- That I say the wrong things to people who should be handled carefully.
- That I never learned anything about Arithmetic.

I WASN'T GOOD AT

Algebra or geometry. I didn't try to study them. I was elected to a good many offices in high school and was so busy presiding at meetings, being on committees, and making speeches, that I never made sense out of mathematics. I'd explain to my teachers how good it was for my personality development to engage in all those activities, and how little time I had to study. But they still gave me D in algebra and geometry.

THE FIRST THING I REMEMBER

Is being put on a table in Sunday School, where I recited the Prayer of Faith. I was two.

WHEN I WAS A CHILD

My family was not well off, so far as money goes. One winter we Veronica Lake and Esther, at opening of Jinx Falkenburg Mex. shop in her own backyard.

The girl with the poise on the cover was born with the same name she uses now, on August 8th, daughter of Lou and Bula Williams, one of five children. Educated in public schools, Los Angeles City College, and the Univ. of Southern California. She swam in school to the tune of many medals, and would have been in the Olympic games if they hadn't been called off. She's five feet seven inches, weighs 123 pounds. Her hazel eyes are wide open and frank, and she wears her hair long except when she's swimming. Learned the neat trick of oiling her hair before going into the water so that she doesn't have to use a bathing cap and emerges from pool or ocean completely unruffled.

Divorced from Dr. Leonard Kovner, whom she married in 1940. Loves children—and lots of 'em. Feels the most important person in her life is her mother, a former Iowa schoolteacher who is now teaching psychology classes at UCLA.

Swam to success after career of modeling clothes. M-G-M scout discovered her at the San Francisco Fair, and she's been wearing her bathing suit for them ever since.

lived on a sack of beans about table-high that my father brought home. My mother fixed them in all kinds of different ways, so successfully that I still like beans.

I'M NOT EXTRAVAGANT ABOUT

Anything that costs a lot. It's probably my early training. I can't bring myself to buy a mink coat—though I'd adore one. I can always think of better things to do with the money, when I have any. I put it into real estate, good pieces of furniture, items that may increase in value, or at least can be sold easily if necessary. I suppose I don't quite trust motion picture money and expect it to vanish any minute.

I AM EXTRAVAGANT ABOUT

Toy fish—anything in fish-shape: earrings, compacts, purses, pins, clips. No matter how many I may have, if something looks like a fish, I buy it.
Cologne;
Buying baby things for new babies.

THE FIRST THING I NOTICE

About a man—is how tall he is. I like them tall.
About a woman—is her vitality.

I LIKE

Nightgowns, nice white ones of batiste, lightweight rayon or very soft fabric. I never spend much money on them, though.
Comic strips, especially "Terry and the Pirates" and "Dick Tracy."
Chocolate;
Fragrant, colorful garden flowers;
Lying in the sun;
Bacon and eggs, lightly scrambled;
People who make me laugh.

I DON'T LIKE

Make-up, mice, moody people.

I'M GUILTY OF

Teasing. Sometimes I tease the wrong people and there's TROUBLE.

Ripping seams and popping buttons. I hate tight things and if I wear them, I twist and turn until I have them wrecked.

Using everything in the kitchen when I cook; not cleaning up as I go; never putting tops on cans or cans back on shelves. But my table always looks beautiful and the food I put on it is delicious. You have to clear up in the end, so why not do it all at once?

Being late for appointments. Time escapes me—I don't know how it slips away. I'll start out on time. but maybe I'll see a cute dress in a window, or a new kind of flower growing, or a person I haven't seen lately; I'll stop to look or to talk, and pretty soon I'm an hour and a half late.

I KNOW

I must correct this fault because studios must click along on time. My excuse to myself has been that I don't mind when others are late. I can use the waiting period to catch up on telephone calls, read something, or think—I never get time to think! But I know that's no excuse, really.

THE MOST IMPORTANT PERSON IN MY LIFE

Is my mother. She was an Iowa schoolteacher before she married. After she came to California and had a family of five children, she interested herself in Parent-Teacher work, took some degrees at the University, conducted classes in adult education, is especially interested in Applied Psychology, and has collected material for a book.

My father is an artist and a dreamer, so my mother had to be practical.

She was never ambitious for her children, except that she wanted us all to be happy, normal, healthy people with open minds and hearts.

I took her to her first nightclub after we attended the Academy Awards this year. She sat at a little table watching the glamorous stars crowding into the place, pushing each other. Chairs jamming against chairs, waiters wriggling their way through, no room to dance, hardly room to breathe, the noise of everyone trying to be heard above the almost deafening music. She looked around, shook her head and said: "Oh those poor rich people!"

I LIKE TO

Paint furniture, design swim suits, play with children, knit, listen to forum programs, take part in discussions about current problems like juvenile delinquency.

A FRIEND of George Sanders said to him one day, "I maintain that you are a paradox. You have had shockingly few sympathetic roles in your screen career, aside from the 'Saint' and 'Falcon' series. When you have been given a sympathetic role, it has always been tinged with shades of socially colored brutality. You were a beast in 'Moon and Sixpence,' a cad in 'Summer Storm' and a poltroon in 'This Land Is Mine.' But no matter what you do, your fan mail increases in volume and fluttering feminine voices all over this broad land inquire after the release date of your next picture."

Mr. Sanders gave this situation some scientific thought, and came up with an explanation. "I think it is because women in this country have been pampered and made to assume a position of emancipated responsibility. Although they like to have their freedom, they also long for the old position of respectful submission. When they see a man on the screen who gives the impression of being able to enforce his viewpoint, and no nonsense tolerated, they are intrigued."

However intrigued feminine theatregoers may be by the celluloid suggestion of George Sanders' male authority, it can not be said that the feminine press in Hollywood has been caught by his charm—which is a pity. There is scarcely a woman reporter who doesn't have a favorite Sanders-interview story, and these anecdotes range from the absurd (Continued on page 86)

39 minutes flat. As soon as he, Esther Williams and Van Johnson finish shooting "Early To Wed," Keenan will rush back to see the boatbuilders who used to construct his crafts in the old days.

His boat will be a hobby or plaything, to be moored perhaps in the proposed yacht harbor near Santa Monica, though it won't be a sailing vessel. His wife, Evie, and small sons, Ned and Tracy, will go out on it, too. As the boys grow older, he'll teach them how to handle her and care for her engine, while Evie looks on. She can't so much as disconnect a horn, knows nothing about motors and hasn't the slightest intention of finding out.

Airplanes were Keenan's first loves. At 14, he was a licensed pilot, and flying would have been his chosen career if Father Ed Wynn had been willing. As it was, Keenan owned several planes as he grew older, and cracked up in them three times, escaping with no more than broken ankles.

"I suppose I got to thinking I had a charmed life," he said, thoughtfully, "but I found out I was wrong. One day I took up a borrowed plane, an old crate hung together with baling wire; something went wrong with the oil line and the plane caught fire."

Keenan had a passenger, but there was absolutely nothing either man could do; (Continued on page 50)

HOW DID SHE GET THAT WAY?

When is an actor not an actor? When parts are people, says Rosalind Ivan . . . she lives every role, instead of merely playing it

Piano prodigy at 10 in her native London.

WHEN Rosalind Ivan made her screen bow in "The Suspect" as Cora, Charles Laughton's hateful, nagging wife, she jolted the customers into such an enthusiastic hatred that during her screen tantrums, many audiences gave out with hisses and boos. So terrific was the impact of her characterization that nobody blamed Laughton at all when, finally driven beyond the limits of human control, he finished her off. Yet even after we had watched Cora's funeral services (with a feeling of guilty relief), her personality continued to dominate the story clear to the end.

That's the kind of acting that takes a bit of doing, but it's nothing new to Rosalind Ivan, who's equipped by both instinct and training for playing to the hilt every part she gets.

Words of Music

By JILL WARREN

HI, CHUMS, how's your tan coming along? Grab a coke and settle down for a few minutes and let's see what's going on in the music world.

The big news of the month is that Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer is going into the record business. Actual recording won't start for a few months because of the difficulties in obtaining equipment, etc., but before too long a time, their label will be making its appearance. It's a safe bet that their talent roster will include such people as Gloria De Haven, June Allyson, Carlos Ramirez, Tommy Dix and any other musical lights on the M-G-M payroll. Also, those of their stars who now have outside recording deals, like Judy Garland and Johnnie Johnston, will probably sign with Metro when their contracts expire.

Several new bands have been showing up on the orchestral scene. Since the outbreak of the war, no new band has come along to create any sort of a sensation. I mean there hasn't been another Goodman, Miller or James. But Randy Brooks seems destined for the name band classification. Randy, you'll remember, was Les Brown's trumpet star before he decided to take up the baton. He is making good in a hurry, and his arrangements, built around hot horn, have caused a lot of talk in the trade. Decca has grabbed young Brooks, the first band they've signed since the war, and on his initial discs they are going to team him with Marion Hutton.

Shorty Cherok, another trumpet man, also has a new outfit, which has the financial assistance of Shorty's ex-boss, Horace Heidt.

George Paxton, who organized his orchestra about a year ago, is beginning to click solidly in New York and will probably be making his way across the country soon.

Jess Stacy has left Tommy Dorsey and once again he is rumored to be contemplating having a band of his own. Maybe he'll really go through with it this time. Speaking of Dorsey, he decided not to drop all his strings after all, and is using a few on his radio shows.

THE BELLS OF St Mary's

If you'd been a guest on the RKO lot

when three Academy Award winners were at work, all in one picture . . .

Going the same way: Bergman, McCarey and Bing.

Crosby & Sons: Gary, Dennis, Phil, Lindsay.

"That's my old school room!" say amazed visitors when they see this set.

"THE Bells Of St. Mary's" is not a sequel to "Going My Way." Actually, it was a mental forerunner of that Academy Award snatcher.

Long before Leo McCarey had perfected his plans for "Going," he was doing creative gymnastics with another idea. His aunt was one of the founders of the Order of the Immaculate Heart and she frequently regaled him, as a youngster, with stories of the merry life lived by the nuns. Their gentle happiness, their sisterly baiting of the new priests in the parish, and their overall devotion to their ideals of helpfulness and loving kindness, struck Mr. McCarey as representing the basis for a fine, warm, very human story.

"Someday," he told a friend, "I'm going to make an entertaining, humorous, constructive picture about a young priest who is neck deep in nuns." His early view of this story represented the young priest as an athletic character much in the position of a rugged boy brought up by a family of fond aunts, surrounded by a group of girl cousins and sisters.

Somehow the idea didn't jell as satisfactorily as he had hoped, so Mr. McCarey switched to the "Going" theme. But, having established the character of Father O'Malley, he was set. Here was his made-to-order young priest in the intelligent and sensitive acting technique of Bing Crosby.

And so, on the RKO-Pathe lot in Culver City, on one of the largest sound stages in Hollywood, fifteen different sets were prepared; one of them a brick parochial school. Father John Devlin of St. Victor's Church in Los Angeles was persuaded to act as Technical Director and so acute was his conception that, when a visitor from New York was brought on the set, she exclaimed, "Heavens, that school is a replica of the one I attended in upstate New York—I even sat at that desk! It should have my initials carved in the upper left hand corner."

Two days later a visitor from Texas said laughingly, "Why, that's where I went to school!"

Then there was the corporal from Pittsburgh who said the school room reminded him of his grade school defeat at the hands of arithmetic; and a Yeoman 1/c from Seattle said the room had instantly restored to memory the poems he had to recite on Friday afternoons.

Having had all these facts presented, any sensible jury in the land, at this point, would convict Father Devlin of accuracy in the first degree. A lovely—and rather rare—crime in Hollywood.

Incidentally, to conform with story line, there is one wing of the building that is supposed to be dangerous—actually condemned—and the corridors in this section give off a hollow echo to answer the flat sound of footsteps. In what is represented (Continued on page 73)

WHAT'S WITH WYNN

they sat there in the flames, hurtling through space. The young actor's helmet ignited, melted and ran down his cheeks. That's the origin of the tiny pock marks on his face. The other man was scarred. Just why both weren't killed remains a mystery. It was then that Keenan lost his taste for flying.

Last year, he was a prominent member of the first Hollywood troupe to fly to China, Burma and way points to entertain U. S. servicemen. Enough time had elapsed to dim the memory of his narrow escape from death, but he could understand the pilot he saw at an airport office enroute, who took off his wings, laid them on the desk and groaned: "I'm through. Do what you please with me—I can't go on!"

"They call it flight-fright now," Keenan explained. "It's like nervous breakdown—once you get it, you can't go up. The only cure is to stay on the ground till it passes."

After his accident grounded him, Keenan went in for cars. Both the Wynns were in Van Johnson's car the night that popular young star was all but fatally injured.

"In one split second," related Evie, afterward, "we saw the other car, knew it was going to hit us and that there was no escape; yet Keenan thought fast enough to put his arm around me and say, quietly: 'Relax—just relax!' He didn't seem frightened, so I relaxed and neither of us was seriously hurt. Poor Van stiffened up, fought the wheel of the car, and was nearly scalped.

"After the crash, I lay under the car with dirt pouring into my eyes. I thought it was glass and that I'd be blind all the rest of my life. I kept moaning: 'It's glass!' Keenan leaned under the car and examined my eyes, as quietly as if we'd just stopped on the street during a walk to look for a cinder. 'Don't worry, dear, it's just dirt,' he told me. I don't know how he could have been so calm. He took care of both Van and me, telephoned Whitey Hendry, Chief of Police at MGM, got a doctor, did everything with no lost motion and without losing his nerve."

Motorcycles succeeded cars as Keenan's cherished hobby. He had a light one for daytime driving, a heavy model for night travel. He used to love to take the machines apart and put them together again, assisted by four-year-old Ned, who stood by eagerly holding tools and rags. The studio wasn't too happy about the dangerous sport, but Keenan refused to give it up.

The day that Evie was returning from the hospital with their new son Tracy, Keenan was coming home on his motorbike to put welcoming flowers in every room of the Brentwood home. Connie and Johnny Maschio, close friends of the Wynns, were following him in their car, when suddenly a driver ahead made a U-turn, apparently without a signal, and Keenan ran full into the car with such force that he broke the door with his head. Death, fortunately, was on a holiday.

His ambulance, with Van Johnson riding beside him, passed the one carrying Evie and the baby on Sunset Boulevard though none of them knew it at the time.

Arrived at the house, Evie asked the ambulance attendants to wait a few minutes before carrying her into the house. "My husband wants to take movies of me coming home, as he did when I brought home our first son," she told them. They waited. She thought they seemed uneasy, but she supposed Keenan was still in the garden gathering flowers and hadn't heard the ambulance. In the end, she had to agree to be carried upstairs and put to bed.

There she waited a long time. No Keenan appeared. An infection that had developed since the birth of the baby required sedatives, which was fortunate, for Evie kept sinking into oblivion and time passed unnoticed. Night came, and with it Johnny and Connie Maschio, who didn't know how to break the bad news. In their fear for Evie, they tried to make light of the accident, saying in effect: "Oh—the funniest thing happened—Keenan fell off his motorbike!"

"Keenan couldn't do that, he's too careful!" cried Evie.

They soothed her, saying he was quite all right but the hospital was keeping him overnight to take X-rays. This made sense to Evie, and she relaxed. "I think I'll turn on the radio," she said, reaching for the switch.

They tried to stop her, but diverted her for too few moments. A familiar voice came over the airwaves: "Folks, I have bad news for you tonight. Keenan Wynn, that grand comedian, lies at the point of death . . ."

"For heaven's sake!" cried Keenan's wife, "Why can't they get their facts right? They really should check before they say a thing like that!"

The Maschios weakly agreed. But later commentators expanded the news, the telephone began to ring, and kept on ringing, with messages of condolence, inquiry, and offers of help. Merciful sedatives, subtly increased, worked their magic that night, but Evie had to know in the morning.

It was a long pull, but Keenan made it. The Wynn garages no longer house motorcycles. Van Johnson sold his, which had been parked there, too—and now the library is strewn with books about boats.

When Ed Wynn refused to permit his teen-age son to enter aviation, Keenan announced that he'd be an actor.

"You'll have to learn something first," suggested his parent.

Keenan shrugged. "I was practically born in the theater. I know all about acting," he declared.

"So?" gasped Ed Wynn. Then he sent his son to study dancing with Ned Wayburn.

At graduation exercises, however, Wayburn's other students danced while Keenan gave a dramatic reading of a Claude Rains speech in "They Shall Not Die". In the audience, looking for musical talent for a show he intended to produce, was Melville Burke, director of Lakewood Summer Theater at Skowhegan, Maine. He came backstage to see Keenan, instead of gathering up dancers.

"That was very bad, that thing you did," he told the boy. "Do you want to be an actor?"

Privately, Keenan thought little of the Burke opinion—he believed he'd been tremendous—but he said yes, he intended to act. As it turned out, Burke's offer was that he be prop boy at Skowhegan with a chance to play a few bits. Keenan accepted it for the succeeding summer, and for six years he worked at Skowhegan's theater every summer, spending winters on Broadway or on tour. The last summer, Evie was with him.

For this fact, Evie insists on taking all the bows.

"The moment I set eyes on Keenan, I said to myself: 'That's for me!' " she laughed. "All that remained was to make up his mind, which I'm happy to say I promptly did!"

Evie—programs read "Eve Abbott"—was in New York playing with Katharine Cornell and Guthrie McClintock, when Tom Lewis (who has since married Loretta Young) invited her to see a play. A boy they both knew had a role in it, and they went backstage afterwards to see him.

"He was dressing with Keenan," recalled Evie. "Keenan had a small part, but was doing wonders with it. I told him so, and he liked my telling him. I knew then that he was for me. The name of the play was 'Hitch Your Wagon'—and I did!"

Keenan is tall and dark, with broad shoulders and erect carriage. Evie is slender and blonde, with laughing green eyes. She looks something like Joan Blondell—when Joan first came to Hollywood—if you can imagine an ethereal Blondell. Several picture offers are now in the talking stage, and before long you'll see what I mean.

Before he entered pictures, Keenan had played 96 roles on the stage. Some of the plays were flops, but his notices were uniformly excellent. After his first Broadway appearance in "Remember The Day," Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer Studios offered him a screen test, which he refused. Several seasons later, they again asked him to come to Hollywood.

"Come out and we'll give you a test," they urged.

"You bring me out," he returned, "and I'll take your tired old test. I'm looking for two weeks' vacation."

Keenan didn't believe anything would happen and wasn't surprised to be offered a small salary. But the Wynns had fallen in love with California by that time, so he agreed to remain. His first three screen roles were unimportant; he was discouraged. When Lindsay and Crouse offered him a part in "Strip For Action," he left for New York without the formality of asking permission.

He'd hardly reached the big city, when he was called for a picture. Naturally, the studio was upset to discover that he was 3000 miles away, but they grew calmer when they heard about the play. Keenan's hilarious antics in it brought him home with a new contract, to play the gangster in "Lost Angel."

"I knew quite a few members of gangs in New York. You see them at night clubs," the actor recalled. "The modern gangster hasn't a broken nose or a cauliflower ear. He's an average-looking guy, except that he's a little unsure of himself in society; self-conscious about his table manners, and afraid people are criticising him. I tried to get that idea over."

Audiences got it—they became rabid Keenan Wynn fans. Whether he is playing a brief bit, as he did in "Marriage Is A Private Affair," or a sustained comedy role, as in "Without Love" and "The Clock," his name on a credit sheet will draw the discriminating into any theater.

"Keenan has integrity," said Evie, proudly, "He won't do a part, no matter how long or important, unless he thinks he is right for it. But he'll do any tiny scene if he can see a way to make it mean something.

"To me, Keenan's father, Ed Wynn, is the funniest comedian on the stage; offstage, he's serious and rather quiet. Keenan's mother, Hilda Keenan Wynn, was the wittiest woman I have ever met. I've frequently listened to Noel Coward, Tallulah Bankhead, and others who are famous as international wits, but none of them could touch Keenan's mother. She could size up anyone with an epigram in two words that would have you in spasms. 'That's so true—why couldn't I have said it?' you'd think. She was funny around the house, and Keenan gets that from her. His timing and stage presence are from his dad.

"He never argues with me. Once in a while I lose my temper and say something to him, but he never flares up. He rises from the table in the most dignified manner—and goes out of the room on his knees. I can't stay mad—I laugh. He's glorious fun at home. It's not so much what he says, as the way he says it. He keeps me laughing."

Keenan isn't always clowning. He takes great pains with young Edmund Keenan Wynn, known as Ned, teaching him to enjoy fine music. He began his son's training by buying a recording of "Peter and the Wolf" which has verses telling the story.

"Here comes the wolf!" the young father would say, acting the wolf's role. Soon Ned could tell exactly what the wolf was doing, no matter what music was played first. Then came "Bambi," "Dumbo," the "Nutcracker Suite." Now Ned is beginning to demand "great big records" of symphonies.

Tracy, when he is old enough, will have the same training. But Ned will assist. "I'll teach that baby to blow his nose and brush his teeth first," he says, earnestly, "As soon as he has teeth, he'll talk, won't he?" Ned talked when he was nine months old.

The boys will be painlessly exposed to art as well as music, in good time. Keenan knows at a glance who painted a picture, and can discuss foregrounds, color, perspective, and why the result is good or bad. Evie thinks it's fun to go gallery-visiting with him.

"He reads all the time," she told me, "not only current best sellers, but Dickens, Thackeray, Carl Sandburg. I gave him Sandburg's four big books about Lincoln, and do you know, he's read them three times?"

Keenan's next assignment after "Early To Wed" is to resume the role of Mulvihill in "What Next, Corporal Hargrove?" When the first Hargrove picture was released, Evie was hailed in shopping centers as "Mrs. Mulvihill," which made her furious. The character, you will recall, was always "trying all the angles."

"Don't call me that," she begs, "Mulvihill had nothing in common with Keenan. My husband is the sort of guy who would give you six one-dollar bills for a five!"

While the actor was away on his three months' tour of war zones, he used to visit with servicemen everywhere, look at their home snapshots, and show them his.

"This is my wife," he'd say, "Write to her, will you, boy? Tell her you saw me and I was okay."

Evie has received more than fifty letters from farflung battle fronts, some containing pictures of her husband taken with the writers, each letter to her is touching and wonderful.

"The gist of them is that Keenan's a great guy," she smiled. "That's no news to me—but it's always welcome!"

James' saxophone section, wants to be a leader man. And if he does, it's possible that Harry will supply the moola. James did sensational business at the Astor Roof, with the hotel turning away on the average of two thousand customers a night.

Johnnie Johnston is going to take Perry Como's place on the Chesterfield Supper Club program for six weeks in August, while Perry plays some theatres and does a little vacationing. Then Johnnie has to report to Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer on his new contract, and Perry is due in Hollywood to make his second picture for Twentieth Century-Fox. He may appear in "Doll Face," opposite Carole Landis. The stork is scheduled to make an appearance at the Johnston home this fall. Both Johnnie and his wife, Dorothy, are hoping for a little boy.

WHAT'S BRISK ON THE DISC: VICTOR:

Dinah Shore's newest platter couples "I Fall In Love Too Easily," from "Anchors Aweigh" and the popular "Can't You Read Between The Lines."

Another one of Victor's double feature discs combines Duke Ellington, with Tommy Dorsey's orchestra, on Sy Oliver's tune, "The Minor Goes Muggin'," and on the reverse side T. D., with the Duke's band, get together on "Tonight I Shall Sleep."

Tommy, with his own band, does two of the tunes from the new Metro musical, "The Harvey Girls"—"On The Atcheson, Topeka and Santa Fe," sung by the Sentimentalists and "In The Valley," with a Stuart Foster vocal. "On the Atcheson," etc., looks like another Chattanooga Choo Choo."

Betty Jane Bonney makes her second solo appearance on wax with the old Gershwin song, "They Can't Take That Away From Me," and "While You're Away."

Here's another two-in-one record—Lena Horne and the Phil Moore Four doing "I Want A Little Doggie" and "How Long Has This Been Going On?"

David Street, the singing star on the Sealtest air show, makes his debut on the Victor label with "I Don't Care Who Knows It," and "Nevada," Frank De Vol's orchestra and arrangements.

Hal McIntyre and his boys do "I'll Buy That Dream" and "I'd Do It All Over Again," with his new vocalist, Frank Lester, handling the lyrics. The McIntyre band should be back from overseas soon.

DECCA:

Bing Crosby, with the Six Hits and a Miss and John Scott Trotter's orchestra have waxed "On The Atcheson, Topeka and Santa Fe," and "I'd Rather Be Me," from "Out Of This World." Then Bing solos it on "If I Loved You," the lovely tune from the Broadway musical, "Carousel," and "Close As Pages In A Book."

Helen Forrest does another song from Carousel, "What's The Use of Wond'rin'" and "Anywhere," with Victor Young's orchestra.

"While You're Away" and "Gotta Be This Or That" are the two numbers chosen by Glen Gray and the Casa

Hark! Hark! . . . not to the lark, but an off-the-air recording of the Philco Summer Show. Making with an enthusiastic listen-to are Jill, Maestro Paul Whiteman and Radio Singer Georgia Gibbs.

Loma Band for their new one. Skip Nelson sings the first side and "Fats" Daniels the second.

Ethel Smith, first lady of the Electric organ, swings out on two old goodies, "Liza" and "I Got Rhythm."

Ella Fitzgerald and The Delta Rhythm Boys get together for "It's Only A Paper Moon" and "Cry You Out Of My Heart."

Fred Waring has recorded an album called "Songs of Devotion." The selections include "Ave Maria," "Nobody Knows The Trouble I've Seen," "Onward, Christian Soldiers," "Battle Hymn Of The Republic" and others. Jane Wilson, Gordon Goodman and the Glee Club are featured.

Connie Boswell hasn't been heard on records for a while, but her new one is so good it sort of makes up for her absence. She does "There Must Be A Way," with The Paulette Sisters and "Who'll Lend Me A Rainbow" with the Satisfiers.

Eddie Heywood's piano and orchestra are heard on "Please Don't Talk About Me When I'm Gone" and "Blue Lou."

Decca has some good things coming up in the future, among which is a Gershwin jazz album by Eddie Condon. Also, John Hodiak has recorded a couple of the tunes from "The Harvey Girls" with Judy Garland. The combination should prove interesting. And there's a rumor afloat that Alan Ladd will make a tune or so for Decca.

CAPITOL:

Freddie Slack, the boogie woogie man, has a new platter, but it's not boogie woogie this time. He does "A Kiss Goodnight" with Liza Morrow on the vocal, and "Gee Chi Love Song," featuring a clarinet solo by Barney Bigard.

For his first Capitol disc, Coleman Hawkins offers "It's The Talk Of The Town," with a dreamy Hawkin's tenor sax solo, and a jump instrumental, "Stuffy."

Jerry Colonna, the mustacheman, does "Bell Bottom Trousers" and "I Cried For You," in his "inimitable" style. "I Cried" is particularly amusing, with the whole band breaking down in tears.

Here's an all-Gershwin album by Billy Butterfield and his orchestra. The vocalists are Johnny Mercer, Liza Morrow, Sue Allen, Margaret Whiting and Tommy Taylor; and the numbers include "It Ain't Necessarily So," "Nice Work If You Can Get It," "Someone To Watch Over Me," "Somebody Loves Me," and others.

Stan Kenton, whose band is becoming more popular all the time, has two new ones—"Tampico," sung by June Christy and the Glee Club, and a rhythm instrumental, "Southern Scandal."

COLUMBIA:

Frank Sinatra can't make too many records to suit his followers, and this platter should more than please his fan-atics. It's "If You Are But A Dream," adapted from Rubinstein's "Romance," and Frank's radio theme song, "Put Your Dreams Away."

Cab Calloway and his orchestra are heard on "All At Once," with a Calloway vocal, and "Dawn Time."

Woody Herman and the Herd give us "A Kiss Goodnight," which Woody sings, and "Goosey Gander."

The Benny Goodman Sextet, who always rate a front place on the record shelf, have two new originals, "Oomph Fah Fah" and "Slipped Disc." Benny has just signed Dottie Reid to sing with his band.

Xavier Cugat has waxed a bolero, "Say It Over Again," and a conga, "Chupa-Chupa." Del Campo sings the first side and Miguelito Valdes and the Cugat Chorus handle the second.

Gene Krupa's new instrumental is "That Drummer's Band," and it's just what the title implies, with a hide solo by Gene. On the flipover we find "What's This?" which is sung by David Lambert and Buddy Stewart.

Columbia has an album which I think everybody should own. It's Norman Corwin's complete radio show which he wrote in tribute to V-E day, "On A Note Of Triumph. Lud Gluskin conducts the fine score, which was written by Bernard Herrman.

JAM NOTES:

The Major Glenn Miller band, which has been led by Sgt. Ray McKinley since Glenn's disappearance last December, may be back in the United States by September. Johnny Desmond, who sings with the band, has had dozens of post-war offers for radio, films and recordings. He's been so popular with the servicemen that they've dubbed him "The G. I. Sinatra" . . . Kitty Kallen has been taking flying lessons and hopes to solo soon. Incidentally, Kitty certainly rates a bow as one of the best dressed band singers in the business. And she doesn't make the mistake so many vocalists do, that of wearing too much jewelry . . . Andy Russell has been doing very well on his theatre tour with the Pied Pipers. He may get the singing spot with Joan Davis on her new fall radio show . . . The Andrews Sisters will probably be overseas by the time you read this. The girls wanted to go last year, but didn't pass the physical at that time. Maxine and her husband, Lou Levy, have adopted a two-month-old baby girl . . . Skip Farrell, the popular Chicago singer, has been signed to record for Capitol . . . Eugenie Baird, Bing Crosby's singing partner on the Kraft Music Hall, may sign with Paramount. It is rumored that The Groaner won't return to radio after his overseas trip, but then those rumors start every year when Bing goes off the air for the summer, and he always winds up at his regular Thursday night spot . . Dave Raskin, who wrote the sensational tune, "Laura," has composed a new one called, "Slowly." It will be the only number Alice Faye will sing in "Fallen Angel." . . . Dick Haymes and Helen Forrest are due for a personal appearance at the Roxy Theatre in New York about the end of July, which will make their eastern fans happy. They haven't been in the big town for quite a spell. Dick will have Celeste Holm as his leading lady in his next film, "The Bandwagon." . . . Frank Sinatra sold his house in Hasbrouck Heights, New Jersey, so it looks like he plans to spend most of his time on the West Coast in the future . . . Marilyn Maxwell has been signed for a leading role in "Nellie Bly," a musical comedy which will open on Broadway about September. Jimmy Van Huesen and Johnny Burke are writing the music. . . . Ginny Simms will have a new radio sponsor this fall. She is switching from Philip Morris to Borden's Milk . . . Jo Stafford and her manager, Mike Nidorf, have been holding hands. And Buddy Rich and June Hutton, of the Pied Pipers, also have that romantic gleam in their eyes . . . Jane Harvey, whose first professional singing job was with Benny Goodman, is set for a big solo build-up with Columbia Records . . . Louis Prima is breaking records everywhere he appears. He's a terrific showman and his popularity is growing by leaps and bounds . . . Judy Garland and Deanna Durbin, who started together at Metro several years ago, were married within a few days of each other, each for the second time—Judy to her director, Vincent Minelli, and Deanna to her producer, Felix Jackson. Judy's ex, David Rose, received a medical discharge from the Army.

That wraps it up for now Playmates. Don't forget, if you have any musical questions, drop me a card or a letter, and I'll answer them for you, if I can. Just address Jill Warren, MOVIELAND Magazine, 1476 Broadway, New York 18, N. Y.

Capitol NEWS FROM Hollywood

Andy Russell, now in "Stork Club," records 'Love Me' and 'Noche'

YOU HEARD him first on Capitol Records . . . you'll see him soon in the film musical "Stork Club" . . . and Andy Russell's smash new recording of 'Love Me' and 'Noche' will be available shortly from your favorite Capitol dealer.

Picked as a "comer" by Capitol just 18 months ago, Andy Russell's phenomenal rise to fame is another sterling example of how the new stars—and new hit tunes—shine first under the Capitol label.

Careful choice of songs, diligent rehearsals and superb engineering help a talent such as Andy possesses. Whether he's singing or drumming, as above, you get the real thing on Capitol!

YOUR PROBLEM and MINE

By

Jane Wyman

Let Jane Wyman help solve your problem. Write her c/o Movieland, 9126 Sunset Blvd., Los Angeles, 46, California

Jane believes in teaching 'em while they're young, so daughter Maureen, age 4, studies Spanish and French.

Dear Jane:

This to you may seem very unimportant, but to me it is important and I am sure you can help me.

Last year I went steady with a girl whom I loved very much. She jilted me for my best friend, Jack. We are now dating again, and she swears that she loves me and will be true to me. But I am afraid.

She hurt me once and I do not want to be hurt again. Should I trust her? Please help me if you can.

Anthony

Dear Anthony:

Where the heart is involved, it is difficult to look facts squarely in the face, but that is what you will have to do in this case.

I do not know all the circumstances, so can give you only this advice: find out what has caused this girl's changed attitude.

If she came back to you because Jack lost interest in her, then you will be wise not to take her seriously. If, on the other hand, she found, after going with Jack, how much she liked you, and came back for that reason, you probably can believe her.

Be sure you find out the truth in this matter before making your decision.

Jane Wyman

Dear Miss Wyman:

My problem is loneliness. You see, I am away from home, resting in Arizona for my health. My mother sent me with a friend of hers. I am 17 and old enough to have dates. But the woman who is responsible for me just won't trust me to go out.

I don't want to disobey her, so I have been staying home every day and night. Some times when I am alone, I cry—I cry so hard it hurts inside.

The doctor has told me I shouldn't get upset, but here I am always crying and getting sick again. Please help me.

Joyce

Dear Joyce:

Loneliness is an unhappy thing to bear, but not nearly so hard as a long sickness. It apparently has not occurred to you that perhaps it is not lack of trust that makes this friend forbid you to go out, but concern over your getting well. You say you are in Arizona to rest, and that is what you should do.

You are young yet and have plenty of time to go out on dates, and the important thing for you to do now, is concentrate on getting well so that you can enjoy them later.

If I were you, I would arrange to have a talk with my doctor, at which I would have this friend present. Ask him if it would hurt you to go out, and tell him the situation. If he says you should completely rest, then be a brave girl, stop your crying, read good books or do anything else that interests you, and devote all your efforts to getting well.

Your future health depends on the care you give yourself now, so do your best. All good wishes to you for a speedy recovery.

Jane Wyman

Dear Jane:

Seeing you have helped other girls with their problems, we are hoping you help us with ours.

For a long time we have been wanting to work on a Dude Ranch somewhere in the western states: work around the ranch house such as getting meals, waiting tables and cleaning. But we don't know where to get that sort of a job and we are hoping you can advise us. We'll be watching for your answer.

Pam and Kit

Dear Pam and Kit:

I suggest that you go to one of the travel bureaus and get the names and addresses of ranches that appeal to you from their advertising folders, and write to those ranches, giving your qualifications and experience. You should be able to get such jobs during the vacation season when the ranches need help. Best of luck to you.

Jane Wyman

Dear Miss Wyman:

I am seventeen years of age and a mother of a child. My husband is overseas, somewhere in Germany. He is very fond of the baby, and me. I live with my in-laws and they, too, are very fond of us both. My mother-in-law won't let me do anything for the baby, and thinks it is her own. I feel very hurt because I believe it is my duty to bring up my own child. We had an argument over this situation, and she said she would take the baby away from me.

I wrote my husband and told him about this matter. He felt very upset to think his own mother would take this attitude, and told me to leave and go on my own.

I know I'm very young to take this problem into my own hands. So would you please give me some advice?

Marianne

Dear Marianne:

For a girl of your age, you have taken a very mature attitude in regard to your problem, and I am sure you are going to be able to work it out sensibly.

You are entirely right that it is your privilege to take care of your baby. You are the baby's mother and should have the joy of looking after him. Being young, you also need the advice of your mother-in-law, but that doesn't mean that she should usurp your place. And if you are a good mother, I see no grounds upon which she can take the baby away from you.

I would have a frank talk with her, telling her just how you feel. If she does not change her attitude, show her your husband's letter and insist that unless she does let you have charge of the baby, you will have to do as he says.

Let her understand that you do not want to leave and that you need her advice and help—that you want her to enjoy the baby too; that if she persists in acting as she has done, she will force you to take the baby away. If you handle this tactfully, I am sure you can work it out.

I, too, believe you are a bit young to go on your own with the responsibility of a baby, and unless you have some relatives to whom you can go, you should hesitate to take this step until you have exhausted all other methods to remedy this situation.

I KNOW A SECRET

more. A means to an end. It helped me brazen through moments when I actually felt like running away and hiding. It was something I had to do in order to get ahead.

"I got so tired of that patronizing 'I'm so sorry, but Mr. X isn't seeing anyone today,' from producers' secretaries, that I built up a skin-deep poise and assurance—almost an insolence—that got me into offices which otherwise would have remained closed to me.

"One particular instance—and I shall use John Golden as an example, although he was one of the few producers I didn't try it on—I walked into an office and up to the secretary.

"Mr. Golden, please," I said in my best hauteur.

"This poise sort of threw the secretary for a minute, because she looked around frantically on her desk for the appointment pad.

"You had an appointment of course?" she asked.

" 'Of course,' I said.

"Then I felt kind of sorry for her. She smiled in a tentative sort of way. 'I'm afraid I've mislaid your name, Miss—er—Miss——'

"Miss Bacall."

"She rushed into Mr. Golden's office, only half-closing the door. I heard her announce me and when he protested that he didn't remember the appointment, she insisted that she had written it down carefully for him. Then she ushered me inside. As soon as the door closed behind her, I sort of folded up.

"You're right, Mr. Golden," I said. "I didn't have an appointment. But this is the only way I could get in to see you—about a job. I need one. And I want one. And I know I can act!"

"And occasionally it worked. But it has always seemed strange to me that you have to connive and brazen your way through things, just to prove that you can deliver. But if that's the way things are, then you have to meet the challenge by conniving like a fool and turning into that fresh kid that was the stage-bound me.

"It's not much of a confession, I guess," she said, "but it's been my private secret for a long time."

Veronica Lake took time out from "The Blue Dahlia" to talk about her secret hate—her own posture. Ronnie's always wanted to do a real shudder whenever she spotted herself in a full-length mirror.

"Look at that!" she used to yelp. "Just look at that posture! I'm supposed to be a glamour girl, but I stand like a capital S!"

Ronnie wasn't satisfied with herself "as was," so she went out to change her posture status from quo to queenly. She enrolled in a dancing class under Anton Dolin's fine Russian ballet hand, and studied hard to master the pedal positions. She had just reached the entre-chat when her impending motherhood called a halt to the proceedings.

But Ronnie is smart. Besides loving dancing in every form, and hoping to be a ballet dancer, she realized that the dancing technique would improve her posture and add grace to her walk.

Now that her baby is no longer in the infant brigade, Ronnie is stitching new ribbon on her toe shoes and has re-enrolled in Dolin's class.

Self-improvement is a wonderful thing. But the Lake lady has more than just that on her mind.

"I'll cut you in on a secret," she says. "Someday I'm going to do a ballet in a picture!"

So don't say we didn't warn you.

It seems that in order to get ahead in Hollywood you have to pretend to be completely disinterested in and bored by whatever it is you ultimately want to achieve, or you don't get anywhere at all. If this confuses you, pax vobiscum. It is confusing even to Hollywood's habitués!

Take the case of Marsha Hunt, who arrived in this town of flashy films with much fanfare by the local press. This was back a few years, when a Powers model (which Marsha was) actually meant a girl who worked as a model for John Robert Powers, and not just any kid with a pretty face who trained in from New York.

Marsha disembarked the train and was swallowed up in a wave of press boys who fired questions at her in every conceivable dialect, including the Brooklynese.

"Say, Marsha," ran the reportorial theme, "are you out here to try pictures?"

Miss H. drew herself up to her full height, looked down her turned-up nose (neatest trick of the year) and hissed, "Certainly not!"

The following week she signed (but quickly) one of the more promising of the umteen studio contracts that were passed before her goggling eyes.

Today Marsha lets out her secret and confesses it was all an act. "Who doesn't come to Hollywood looking for a job in pictures?" she wants to know. "I just figured that the negative approach was 'different' and quite intriguing. And I must have figured right."

"Now take me," says Betty Hutton generously. "I guess it's time I told it. I hate to be alone. Why, even that song 'I'll Walk Alone' gives me the horrors. I used to think it was something to be ashamed of—this two's company business. But I've discovered that almost everybody has some kind of secret phobia like that, so I guess it's kinda silly hiding my particular blight under a bushel."

The Hutton, it seems, was what you might call a homely kid. Sort of pie-faced and gawky. And she had a frightening scar on one of those alabaster cheeks of hers, dating back to the time she'd torn her face on a rusty hunk of barbed wire fence.

Her sister was a knockout, and Betty kept noticing all the attention Sis got from the male of the species. It made her feel ugly and shabby and completely alone and unwanted. So she got to making friends with all the attractive girls in school. No matter where she went—across the campus, to the malt shop, or to the book store—she'd drag one of those cute babes along, and the boys would always stop and chat. It made her feel less lonely.

"But that feeling is still with me," Betty confesses. "Even today I grab up anybody that's handy to walk across the Paramount lot with me. I

Tasty DISH . .

SINCE the outbreak of the war, Gail Patrick has entertained between four and five hundred boys of all ranks and nationalities, in her charming colonial home. During this time, one dish the boys ask for over and over, she says, is the homemade ice cream she makes herself. Topped with a yummy concoction that Gail calls "Flaming Delight au Rhum," you'll see that five hundred soldiers can't be wrong! The recipe is one you can try yourself, so here goes!

1 pt. Milk and 1 pt. Cream
(if you can't get cream, use 1 can condensed milk with $1/2$ pt. milk)
Sugar
2 Eggs
1 Tsp. Vanilla
Pinch of Salt

Beat eggs until light. Add salt. Put in milk mixture, add sugar and vanilla. Beat until thoroughly mixed. Put in freezer. Freeze with 1 part salt and 3 parts ice. Turn rapidly for 4 minutes, then slowly for 3 minutes. Pack in rock salt for hour after freezing.

won't eat alone. Or drive. Or go to the dentist's solo. I suppose it's silly, but I find I really enjoy good company now, so I wouldn't think of changing. That's the way I am. That's me.

"Say, I left my keys in the dressing room. Wanna walk over with me to get them? It'll only take a jiffy."

"It's no secret that I've got ants in my plants," says Eve Arden. "Let this be a warning, though. I'm horticulture-happy, and if you go leaving an old shoe around my house, you're likely to end up with posies on your pedal extremities."

Eve, the gal who did such a bang-up job in "The Doughgirls" as the Russian sniper, is currently featured in "My Reputation." She is also the gal whose house looks like a nicely run Ye Florist Shoppe. Green things hang from the rafters, drip from the drainboards, sprout from the shelves. Philodendron, baby ivy, lucky plants—whatever is green and growing strikes the Arden fancy.

"Yes, I'll tell you my secret," Eve says. "A friend of mine had picked up a pair of high buttoned shoes, vintage 1896, a while back. She was going to wear them to a masquerade that evening. But she left my home in a hurry, and forgot the shoes. I just couldn't bring myself to return them, somehow, so I had them planted and set them in the entrance hall. They're quite chic.

"When my friend came over the next day to pick them up, she let out a shriek at the sight of the 'garden' blooming from her shoes. After the first shock wore off, she was so amused she let me keep them. It cost me a young fortune to replace the shoes—how did I know they'd once belonged to Lillian Russell? But I still had a pair of unique plant containers, and they've brought nothing but joy into my life."

About the friendliest gal in town is June Allyson. But this same twinkly-eyed gal once had the reputation for being quite snooty. And there was a good reason for it. June kept it secret for a great many years.

"When I was nine," she says, "I had an accident that sent me to the hospital for months. When I was finally allowed to go back to school, I had to wear an uncomfortable and ugly brace to help me walk. Luckily the brace was hidden beneath my dress, but I was always in terror that the other kids would find out about it and tease me. So I began shying away from them.

"Finally everyone began to avoid me, to leave me completely alone. I got the reputation of being cold and unfriendly. Now, of course, I don't blame the kids. They didn't know my reason for being aloof, and I certainly did nothing to stimulate their interest in me, nor to make them like me.

"If I had only known then, as I do now, that friendship—sincere friendship—has nothing to do with the physical, I would have avoided two of the unhappiest years of my life."

Ella Raines' secret is more in line with "secret weapon," you might say—for the thing she's kept to herself for so long is the fact that she uses eye appeal to lend sincerity to her acting.

"Most people pull the curtains down on their eyes," she declares. "As a result, their real feelings don't show."

The Raines method of expressing emotion through the eyes is most effective in her starring role with Charles Korvin in "Enter Arsene Lupin." While making this picture, Charles Korvin told her, "Ella, your eyes bother me. I have a queer feeling when you look directly at me."

"That's because we establish contact," she told him. "It's a good sign. When that happens the audience is aware of it, too, and the scene packs wallop."

This does not apply only to acting, the actress warns. "Friends as well as business contacts respond to eye expressions too. So, when you talk to people, you'll be doing a good deed if you use eye appeal.

Speaking of good deeds, it's nice to hear of a good turn that paid Ella dividends.

Driving to work one a.m. at 5:45 for an early call in "Uncle Harry", she stopped to pick up five sailors on their way to San Francisco. There was a blowout. The sailors alighted, changed the tire in exactly two and a half minutes, and Ella arrived at the studio all as scheduled. She repaid the gallant sailormen by taking them to breakfast in the studio commissary.

So it's eye appeal, is it? Sounds like a secret worth knowing!

Disputing the legend that blondes are beautiful but dumb, June Haver, 20th Century-Fox starlet, was graduated from high school in 1944, "with honors". But that isn't her big secret.

Ever since she was a little girl, June had dreamed of the day when she would have three things: a car of her own, a home for her family and herself . . . and a mink coat! When she signed her film contract, she acquired the car—a convertible sedan. Later she got a home in Cheviot Hills, not far from the studio. But now she thinks that she will let her husband give her the mink coat.

"Not that I have any marrying plans," she said quickly. "I haven't had time yet for any serious romance rumors."

Maybe so, but it is generally accepted that June's big romance is an Army Flier. The news came to light with the return of Lt. Robert Vallier, navigator in the Army Air Forces, who has completed several dozen missions over Europe.

Lt. Vallier and the young blonde star were former schoolmates and spent much time together before he became a flier and she a screen star.

Before leaving Hollywood for a personal appearance tour that started in New York City, Andrea King, confessed that her secret is worry . . . worrying about weight. Unlike most glamour girls, this actress has to watch her diet so that no precious poundage will disappear.

This worry was aggravated somewhat, when she spent a morning going up and down a long stairway for rehearsals and takes for a scene in Warner Bros. "Shadow Of A Woman."

When Director Joseph Santley finally called "lunch", Andrea sank down on the step where she stood.

"Whew!" she sighed with relief. "Much more of that, and I'd have been just a shadow of a woman."

In spite of all this, however, Andrea recently was voted "the gal with the best looking legs in Hollywood", by the Hosiery Designers of America, who ought to know whereof they speak! For the statistically minded, here's how she measures up: ankle 8½; calf, 12½; thigh, 19½. She nosed out such competitors as Marlene Dietrich and Betty Grable—and that's no secret!

up a stage wall, clinging to a vine which, it said in the script, led to Greer Garson's boudoir window. A member of the stage crew had composed a poetic tribute, and in order that he might more fully enjoy the reading thereof, someone had removed the ladder with which he started the climb.

Neat but not sticky, the offered sentiments were something as follows:

"Here's to Walter—what a pal,
Friendly as the dickens with each boy and gal,
As 'Gus' you did a might fine job,
Just as you always do—corn on the cob."

Unaccustomed as he was to perched speaking, their hero was not caught without suitable response. Ripe off the vine he gave them a lofty bit of oratory, complete with daringly one-handed gestures.

"Where did you get the speech?" asked someone who heard of the incident.

"Stole it," he said contentedly, "from Romeo. There was a guy who made a habit of getting caught under balconies!"

People who never guessed how well Pidgeon could have played Rhett Butler, if Scarlett's dream-boy hadn't been so well played by Gable, were surprised by the dash he gave to Gus Parkington. As a matter of fact, Walter was a little surprised, himself. His ego being of the comfortable sort which never weighs him down but can be thrown into the balance when needed, he at first tried to sell a couple of other fellows for the role.

"I just couldn't see myself as a swashbuckler. 'Take Ward Bond,' I told them. 'Let him do a lusty, vital thing like he did as John L. in Gentleman Jim. Just change him from a beer-drinker to a champagne-lifter, and he'll be terrific!"

What for, said the producer, when Walter already had the champagne manner? The deal was cinched by a Gay 90's cutaway, tailored to his measure, and a brace of handsome mustachios.

"I took one look at myself," he admits, "and yelled, 'Hey, that's the guy—I'm for Gus. Let Bond go get his own cutaway!'"

In "Week-end at the Waldorf" Pidgeon makes several departures. For one thing, he plays it bare-faced. This, in itself, will cause not half as much commotion as Metro's publicists are undoubtedly hoping. More important, however, will be the fact that not only is his role a modern one, but one in which he again has use for his nicely-caged animal magnetism. Ginger Rogers is the lady in the picture whom, as a romantically inclined war correspondent, he loves—and leaves. For Rogers fans we might point out that if one must be left, the Waldorf is one of the best places. For Pidgeon fans this should be a small gain, at least, in the campaign which, now that national politics are settled for another four years, Metro will be hearing from again.

Although not so loud as other parties, the Pidgeonites are much more lucid. Their platform is simply and stubbornly, "A 'Mr.' picture for Pidge!"

A few radicals add an extra board by insisting not only is it time their favorite got an occasional opportunity to wear the top-billing in the distinguish series of Garson-Pidgeon domestic dramas, but maybe, even the widower's weeds. Since in three of their four matings he has made a mid-picture demise, it seems not unreasonable that just once, at least, he should be given a chance to lay the gorgeously indestructible Greer tenderly to rest, and stick around for the last close-up himself.

Be that as it may, the person least perturbed about whether the campaign ever gets beyond the whispering stage or not, is Walter. He is undoubtedly the only actor in the business who could have espoused the electric redhead through a quartette of films and allowed her to be the better-half in title only, and it is quite likely that he knows it.

There is a story—unconfirmed by either principal—that during the making of "Minniver," Greer asked to have the script changed so that Richard Ney would be, not her son, but Walter's by a former marriage. And that Pidge, hearing of her request, took a placid pull on his pipe and said, "It's okay with me—even if they make Greer my daughter!"

One thing certain, audiences like them together so well that when Greer soon afterwards became the real-life bride of Ney, their entire public (with the exception of Mrs. Pidgeon, of course) felt they had been done in. "Aw gee," they moaned, "We wanted her to marry Walter!"

Sitting with him on his sun-washed patio in Beverly Hills on a Saturday morning—when, if it weren't for you and your silly questions, he'd be halfway through a golf game—you find it hard to believe Walter could have been the winner of the Hollywood Women's Press Club's title of "Most Un-Cooperative Actor" of the year. It is a fact, however, and therefore should be included in any up-to-date story on him.

The titles, bestowed by the lady reporters in commemoration of each season inside Hollywood without gun or Gunther, are by majority vote. But it is also a fact that each year the minority, every one a little put out because her own candidates for co-operative or un-cooperative actor and actresses went unelected, spends the next eleven months wondering how it could have happened. True to form, this press-clubber now rises to wonder—unless, it could be, the gentleman in question will be interviewed either too little or too late.

Otherwise, for the perfect example of smoke without fire, we must give you Pidge and his pipe, comfortably over-filling an arm-chair, or leaving it briefly to pour you another cup of fresh-made coffee. Betraying neither by huff nor puff that it is no time to talk about business, but Saturday morning—of which everyone knows there is only one in a week.

Like his home-setting, Pidgeon is picturesque: The patio's flagstones are informally laid around the bases of two large and lovely trees, with flowers ringing their roots, and other flowers optimistically trying to climb the house walls to the roof. The host has on an open-necked white shirt, with a swatch of braided raffia hitching up his tweeds, and is colorfully shod in what is, no doubt, the most expensive pair of huraches ever to be lugged across the Mexican border.

He has one boast which he applies equally to his private or public life:

"I'm the laziest guy in the world," he says happily. The brag is accompanied by an over-all stretch of his six-foot-three which, if nothing else, proves that where other people may have laziness, they don't have so much of it.

"Those fellows who are always aching to play Hamlet or Cyrano de Bergerac, or something, make me tired just thinking about them. I don't know what 'type' I am, or what my acting 'style' is, and I'd just as soon not find out. This way, I can enjoy doing any role I don't have to act. The one thing I ask of a picture part is that I can feel at home in it—the one thing I never want to be is an act-er."

Just how "at home" he can feel in the right role is best illustrated by again harking back to "Minniver." One of the best beloved touches in the film, and we're not punning, was the slap delivered by Mr. to the delectable derriere of Mrs., in one of their boudoir scenes. This little informality was entirely his own idea, occurring when reaching for a bedroom slipper with his foot. He missed, and never a man to lose his balance, ad libbed a bit of action with his hand instead. Greer, completely surprised, sprawled face forward on the bed just as any back-slapped victim would do—and Willie Wyler, just as any good director would do, insisted it stay in the script.

"Leave it in," he said. "It's delightful. I'll let the critics think it's 'one of those Willie Wyler touches!'"

And although there are those who bemoan the fact that Walter's brilliant baritone, which made him a musical comedy star, is heard no more, he is not among them:

"I don't get fun out of singing anymore, except in the bathroom," he says. "I insist that's where my finest vocal achievements always occurred, anyhow—under the shower."

The truth is, Pidgeon is that rarity, an accomplished thespian who arrived at his art almost entirely without "suffering," and he doesn't see any reason to start letting it pain him now.

He has had two Hollywood careers, neatly divided by a two-year return to the stage. His first six months in Hollywood were spent off-screen but on salary—a nice way of not working, if you can get it.

"There was a catch in it though," he added. "They finally decided I'd have to earn it."

His first was "Mannequin," with Dolores Costello, in which he was an instant success, and which was followed by other screen musicals, and then, the aforementioned return to Broadway where he again distinguished himself.

Screen career No. 2 had some low moments to begin with, during which lady movie critics of the land suffered excruciatingly at such waste as Walter playing a villainous sheriff in "Girl of the Golden West," totin' two guns and mustaches designed like a longhorn's headpiece. Pidge, himself,

ONE MOTHER TO ANOTHER

Making prepared baby foods available within the reach of every mother has had a double advantage. Not only has it given us healthier babies, but it has also given mothers more time to enjoy their babies.

Mrs Dan Gerber

Remember, it is always wise to check your baby's feeding program with your doctor.

Well-fed—
I know all about that!

It's just natural for Gerber babies to look well-fed and healthy! For Gerber's Baby Foods bring babies these four advantages: (1) Cooked the Gerber way by steam, to retain precious minerals and vitamins. (2) Famous for smooth, uniform texture. (3) Made to taste extra good. (4) Laboratory-checked at every step.

Your baby, like millions of other American babies, will do well on Gerber's!

Baby cereals with precious iron

Many babies, three months or more after birth, are apt to be short of precious iron. Gerber's Cereal Food and Gerber's Strained Oatmeal are especially made for babies and, for that reason, have generous amounts of added iron and vitamins of the B complex as a help to baby's well-being. Both cereals are pleasant tasting—both are pre-cooked, ready-to-serve with milk or formula, hot or cold.

Be sure to get Gerber's—with "America's Best-Known Baby" on every package

IF I HAD A SECOND CHANCE

terms of the present and, had I done differently, I would not have now the perfect happiness I know. That happiness naturally includes my success on the screen, but basically it is measured in terms of two other human beings—my husband and my baby! My whole world revolves around them—and them only.

Let's suppose, for example, that my childhood had been different through choice or obstinacy on my part. For I could have changed it, either through active rebellion or passive resistance to my mother's determined ambitions for me. Mother had her heart set on either me or my sister becoming a dancer, possibly because it was a secret unfulfilled ambition for herself. Because I seemed to show more talent along those lines than sister, I was elected. That meant that every day, after regular school, I would spend several hours in dancing school.

Looking back, I suppose there were times when I wanted to be out playing like the other kids instead of practising taps and toestands. Frankly, I don't remember, and I don't believe, as adults, we can tell what we wanted or did not want as children. Obviously, however, my regrets could not have been too keen or I would have circumvented the program by emulating my sister's lack of these particular talents which could spell a career.

The point today is this: dancing led to singing, singing led to my interest in music, and that interest led me straight to Harry James and our little Vicky. A plus B equals the world with a fence around it!

But going back to my marriage to Jackie Coogan in 1937. Many people, I expect, would anticipate my saying that was a mistake, and that given a second chance, I would not make the same decision. Those people are wrong; I have no regrets of that marriage, even though it ended unhappily, for from it I gained a great deal and learned much that is contributing to my happiness today.

Jackie and I were just kids when we married. Neither of us had any sense of responsibility or the real significance of a marriage partnership. We had fun together, great fun, but inevitably we learned, as of course we had to learn, that a successful marriage must be based on a firmer foundation than just fun. I realize now, among other things, that I was disastrously selfish with Jackie, and he undoubtedly realizes now that he let me get away with murder. Both of us were sorry it did not work out, but both of us knew to, its very failure had prepared each of us to be better partners in a better marriage in the future.

Likewise, I knew it was best that I did not have a baby when I was younger, even though Vicky has brought me greater joy than I dreamed was possible. Filled with rapture over her as I am, I do sometimes begrudge the empty years I did not have her, the extra time she could have been mine. Still, she would not have been Harry's baby then, and that's what makes her doubly perfect. Too, my career would not be where it is today if I had had a child earlier in my life. The demands on the time of a rising young actress are never-ending; she must run all over the country, forever at the beck and call of those who are guiding her career. In my case it would have spelled "finis" to my career, because I'm not the kind of a mother who can leave her baby for any length of time, content to have some other woman care for her.

Not that I ever cared about stardom as such. I still don't. Everyone is for you when you are the underdog, fighting your way up; once you are up there, however, it's a different story, and many often are at your throat. What I mean is that had I had to choose between stardom and a baby, I would have tossed away stardom without batting an eye. As it worked out, now I have both, with no choice necessary. And don't think I don't know how lucky I am!

Then this business of my being a "one-man woman," which my friends and family seemed to deplore (before marriage, of course) and brand as a fatal mistake. It cut me off, they said, from lots of beaus and lots of parties, which are the romantic birthright of every girl. Devoting my interest over a long time to George Raft exclusively for instance, was supposed to have cost me the friendship of many attractive men and a gay, gay whirl as a bachelor girl.

It's perfectly true, I always have been a "one-man girl" as long as I can remember. I've never "played the field," preferring rather to concentrate my time and attentions on one man at a time. Jackie was my first and only beau when I reached a dating age. After our divorce in 1940, George became my "steady," although we never contemplated marriage as so many of our friends took for granted. Then I met Harry in 1942, during the making of "Springtime In the Rockies" and eventually it was he alone who held my interest, even if it was some time before we became serious about each other.

Put it down to a quirk in my nature, but variety never has been the spice of life to me. When I like a person, I am perfectly content to go just with him. Besides, I never have cared for night life and "rounding," so I've never needed a lot of beaus to escort me here and there. I don't like parties—people in large groups terrify me!—and I'd rather not go out at all than go out just to be seen. No, I want no second chance to change that phase of my life.

And now about my career. What would I do differently if I were starting from scratch again?

To be perfectly honest, not a thing! I came up the hard way, true, and it took me 12 long years to be ready to handle what I have now. But the point is, I'm ready for it. I don't have to learn to dance when a picture calls for dancing, or scramble around learning to sing if a picture calls for a song. I've learned to act and handle dialogue through slow and painstaking work in small roles. It's that—my versatility—which makes me of value today in pictures like "The Dolly Sisters," my latest for 20th Century Fox. I know I'm not a great dancer, or a great singer, or a great actress, and probably never will be. But I am fairly competent in all three lines, which is as much as any picture usually demands of one persons, and I have my years in the chorus, vaudeville, and singing with bands to thank for it.

Sometimes I think perhaps I should have been a little more aggressive in forging my career in Hollywood. Aggressive tactics on Mother's part certainly worked a miracle when I was playing in "DuBarry Was a Lady" on the New York stage. Being young and inexperienced, it never occurred to me to complain of my small role, unbecoming costumes, and a general pushing-around. Mother, however, spoke right up in meeting, and overnight I had new costumes, a new dancing partner, and a role almost as important as Ethel Merman's!

Sometimes, too, I think I should have been less honest and forthright in my dealings with people; all honesty ever got me was a load of grief, while dissembling, flattery and a phony line often seems to pay off nicely. Perhaps I should have taken myself more seriously and made impressive demands about my stories, clothes, photography, and leading men, instead of tending to my own knitting and leaving those things in the hands of the people responsible.

Yes, I might have reached the top sooner that way—and I'd probably be on my way down right now!

There are little things, of course, I'd like a second chance to do over. I'd go to the dentist regularly, as anyone should do rather than sort of save up those visits, which almost anyone needs to make regularly, and then have to spend half of a much-needed vacation having fillings attended to, as I had to recently. I'd keep up my study of ballet, too, rather than let it drop as I did when I began to do the type of dancing required in picture-making. I'd skip a picture like "Pin-up Girl" if I had to take a suspension for it, and I've never seen a rush of a scene I've done that I didn't think I could do it better on another try.

And finally, I wouldn't go on a tour with Harry and his band as I did last summer. That was a mistake, and a costly one with my fans. I didn't think of myself as Betty Grable, the movie star, when I went with them. I was just Mrs. Harry James, a girl who wanted to be with her husband on his tour, the same as any other girl in love with her husband. I was tired and didn't feel my best. I also was a little overweight after the birth of the baby and didn't look my best. Traveling in hot, dusty busses for long hours at a stretch didn't help matters either. Most important, I felt the limelight should be all Harry's.

What I failed to consider was that fans along the way didn't realize all this. They were antagonized and resentful, therefore, when I would refuse to make appearances or greet them when we stopped at various towns, because I looked and felt so badly. Now that they know the truth I hope they will forgive me. I want their good will and their loyalty. Certainly I have asked for it and worked for it all these years, and would not now throw it lightly aside in a whim of temperament.

Yes, it was a mistake, that tour, but I might as well be honest. I have a sneaking hunch that all Harry will have to say is "Ready to come with me on this next tour?" and I'll shout "Let's go!" Guess I'm just plain in love with the man.

But next time it won't be a mistake. I'll see to that.

Lizabeth, tall, slim and tawny brown, strolled onto the stage. The audience liked her appearance. They loved her voice, deep and low, with a harpstring quality. It's a natural voice, though no one believes it at first. She's a naturally dramatic person, too, and might have been born on the stage instead of in Scranton, Penna. New York critics nodded approval. When the company moved to Boston, Lizabeth went with them, to play the full engagement.

Lizabeth had played in stock and toured on the road before she appeared on Broadway. Her photograph attracted Hollywood's attention, and Producer Hal Wallis signed her to a contract as soon as he heard her voice.

Nothing makes Lizabeth more furious than to be called a second Bacall, perhaps because they are strangely similar at moments. But Lauren is first of all a personality, and Lizabeth yearns to be a great actress—like Ethel Barrymore, Helen Hayes or Tallulah Bankhead—one who can go on starring to the end of life.

"I believe in Fate," she declared, her deep voice striking chords on emphasized words. "You are meant to have a thing, or you are not. All your struggles are in vain, if you aren't meant to have success; nothing can keep you from it, if it's yours. That doesn't mean you won't have to struggle. You probably will, but you'll always rise after being beaten down, crying: 'I will do it, I WILL!'

I once knew a first-rate secretary who wanted to act but had no talent. She'd work in an office a few years, save money, then take a year off and devote herself to trying to get on the stage. She was never able to do it, but she kept trying. For all I know, she's still trying. That shows persistence won't do it alone."

If would-be stars follow Lizabeth's advice, they won't go to dramatic schools. Except for learning to get up before an audience, her experience was unfortunate. "They didn't like my voice," she confided. They kept at me to raise it and I came out speaking 'way up here." (squeak) "Because they were fiends for diction, I bit off my words and pronounced them so precisely it was torture to hear me. When I lost all my friends, I came to.

"There's no use—no use at all—coming to Hollywood for a career! Go to New York, try for the stage, or ease yourself into a play somewhere until you have experience. Then don't come to Hollywood, let it come after you!"

Two of Hal Wallis' contract players nodded agreement—Lizabeth's fellow actors in "You Came Along," Charles Drake and Don DeFore.

"Go to New York," advised Don. "Twelve years ago I attended Pasadena Playhouse courses; whatever may be going on now, we learned a lot then. But when I was graduated, I visited Hollywood and had no luck. If I could get an agent, he couldn't land me a part. Every deal fell through. Finally, a man at Warners' told me I could never get into pictures because I had too many chins.

"I looked in my mirror hopelessly and decided he was right. So I went to New York. For two years I played in 'The Male Animal', then Warners' brought me back to Hollywood. When my agent got the word, he didn't believe it. He called them back. 'Sure you can use him? Hasn't he too many chins?' They resented that. 'No, he has a square jaw!' they said, coldly. And I came back.

"Frankly I think a boy or girl who wants to act must have either a backlog of money to live on while waiting, or something else to do on the side. And it's hard to do another job and still have energy to work hard at acting. I starved for quite a while in New York. I remember all too well the 25c spaghetti dinners I ate at an Italian cafe."

If you can't get a job on the stage, Don thinks it's a good idea to go places where actors gather. Watch them eat, sit near them, get the atmosphere of acting.

Don's seven-year contract with Mr. Wallis didn't come about as easily as it sounds. The six-foot-two, Cedar Rapids basketball player was studying to be a lawyer when Little Theater parts gave him the acting urge. He checked out of the University of Iowa to enter Pasadena Playhouse. His first Hollywood career was disappointing and he returned to Broadway to play the lead in "Sailor Beware." This brought him back to Hollywood for "Human Comedy." After several good roles, Don was packing for Broadway when he was signed for "Affairs of Susan," leading to his contract.

Charles Drake was Charles Ruppert, radio actor and advertising model in New York City in 1938, when he entered into what he supposed was a contract with a film company that called for screen tests. Reaching the coast, he discovered it was all a mistake, and he was on his own.

"I went the rounds of casting directors," he recalled, "but once they have seen you and told you they have nothing today, all you can do is go around again; by that time they're tired of you. You're like an old coat and they don't care if they ever see you again. If you can't get to New York, get into a play somewhere, or enter a contest."

Charles entered the "Gateway to Hollywood" contest, after he'd given up the struggle in the film city and returned to Manhattan. The contest resulted in an RKO contract, succeeded by one with Warner Brothers. Perhaps you remember him best in "Air Force" and "Now, Voyager." Then came his "Greetings from Uncle Sam," a term of service in the Army, and finally a medical discharge.

He is tall and well-built, looks like an ex-college athlete, and is one. Has curly hair and that helpless-male appearance that is always an asset to romance, if a man is tall enough.

Persistence in pursuing an ambition that's not for you is wrong, says Charles. "Stop and take stock if you've tried for stage and screen for too long, in vain, or you'll wake up one day to realize you're thirty-five and still an extra. That's a lazy man's job in the long run. You're likely to feel that success is just around the corner and give it another week, but don't drag on forever."

What to do to attract attention is another question.

"Girls may be able to stage an offstage show, and that may be wise," said Charles. "I've heard of girls' losing glamour roles in pictures because they slopped around in slacks. But I doubt if a man can do anything spectacular and get away with it. He'd be put down as a show-off.

"It's true that many parts are cast in studio commissaries. A producer may need an actor for a particular role. He looks over actors as they enter, sees one and thinks: 'Why wouldn't he do?' But that's accident. I've done a lot of things I've been told to do to catch someone's eye, but none of them ever worked.

"The first time I ever saw a girl try the spectacular stuff," put in Don, "was in Pasadena. She came to class in a purple outfit cut like a nun's habit, a coin pasted in the center of her forehead. The class ignored her. But the gal was beautiful and I broke down and asked why she did it. 'To attract attention,' she confessed. Well, she did that all right! But I think it can work the wrong way, and people will take a violent dislike to you that will prevent your getting on."

Bill Williams, who made a smash hit in RKO's "Those Endearing Young Charms," thinks there may be something in Fate, but you can't afford to sit around and wait for it.

"Once a kid is inside a studio," he asserts, "he should try to stand out from the crowd. The way to do that is not to be spectacular—that's old stuff in Hollywood, where experts have driven the streets in silver cars with twin monkeys in red suits. No, the way to stand out is not to look the same all the time. If an actor comes in every day looking like something out of Esquire, who is going to think of him for a honey of a part as a rough diamond? Barbara Hale, for example, comes in sometimes looking like a million dollars; next day, she wears tailored slacks with a ribbon in her hair. Sometimes she's sophisticated; sometimes naive. Directors can see her in any role."

Bill, who burst on audiences like the sun coming up in China 'cross the bay, is no amateur. He comes from Brooklyn, his real name is William Katt, and he studied to be a construction engineer. Because he enjoyed swimming, he became Junior National Champion in 1934 and 1935, in the 220 and 440 swimming events. Upon leaving school, he swam for the New York Athletic Club, Park Central, Dragon and other swimming clubs. While he was doing exhibition swimming at Sands Point Beach Club, the idea of a theatrical career dawned on him.

In 1936, after exercising his nice baritone voice for two seasons with St. Louis' Municipal Opera Company, Bill organized the Stuart Morgan Dancers, and toured Europe and this country, playing a year at the Palladium in London.

"Actually our act was acrobatic," said Bill. "We couldn't call ourselves the Muscle Men, but that's what we were, three blond boys with magnificent bodies, displayed in brief trunks, tossing a 95-pound girl around. People ate it up. We did a Command Performance for England's King and Queen, and they autographed a parchment for me."

War broke up the act. Because Bill had injured his back in a fall from a horse during his European sojourn, he couldn't walk or stand for long at a time. When he realized we were going to fight, he studied navigation and radio, hoping to be of use, and early in 1943 took a job as shuttle pilot for Consolidated, going back and forth to Pearl Harbor.

"Sometimes I made as much as $1300 a month," remembered Bill. "Then they reduced our planes from nine to six, and dismissed three crews, mine among them. I joined the Army, but couldn't get through boot camp on account of my back, and after ninety days I had a medical discharge.

"I felt pretty low because they wouldn't let me teach navigation, which I thought I could do, and I couldn't reassemble my act because the girl had married one of the men; they'd bought a ranch and settled down. A girl I met suggested pictures. I didn't think I'd like them much, but it wouldn't hurt to see. An agent got me a few parts, and a year ago I signed with RKO. I worked in everything on the lot, and finally my big chance came. I was lucky. Ann Harding, Laraine Day and Bob Young helped me. I kept my eyes and ears open and my mouth shut and I learned a lot."

As for advice to young actors, Bill thinks first of all you must be sincere. "Gladhanding around with everyone on the lot gets you nowhere, unless you mean it. You must really like people and cooperate. They'll know if you're faking."

Audrey Totter, MGM's promising daughter, was a "Who's that?" girl, her first day on the lot. This was due to her red-blonde, blue-eyed beauty, radiant health and bubbling vitality, rather than anything she did. In the year she has been under contract, she's done seven characterizations in the same number of pictures, and is now essaying a Rumanian siren in "For Better, For Worse."

Born in Joliet, Illinois, it was natural that stage-struck Audrey, after high-school and stock company triumphs in Ibsen and Shakespeare, gravitated to Chicago. Here she played with Ian Keith in "The Copperhead," and went on tour with "My Sister Eileen." Touring is the ideal experience, she believes, because you face new audiences and must adjust your performance to each one. If you can't get to New York, worm your way into a show on tour. Or try for radio.

Chicago is a great radio city. If you want an audition, you apply for one, and sooner or later, get it. One audition is enough, for once you pass you're automatically entered on lists of NBC, CBS and all agencies. Elsewhere, you audition separately each time.

Audrey, coming up for her first audition, decided to make an impression. She wrote her own material. She came out dressed as an ingenue, red-blonde hair flowing, and began by doing an old hag. This startled her audience. Quickly she switched to a very young girl, then spoke in dialects, winding up with a tragic tale of old Vienna, borrowing her father's accent. She was an instant success.

After a career in soap operas, she repeated her success in New York. Her throaty voice intrigued an MGM talent scout, whose job it was to listen to programs. He sent a representative to watch her from the control room one day, and presently Audrey had an offer.

"I went for a reading, took a screen test; but when I saw it, was sure I'd never do. I forgot the whole thing and concentrated on radio. It usually takes thirty days to approve a test, upon which you go to Hollywood, and I wasn't surprised when I heard nothing. The last day, a Friday, I lunched with a radio producer who wanted me for a role in a new serial.

"'Stop in my office and sign for the part,' he told me. His office was in the same building as my agent's and I stopped there on my way, to be met by three frantic people crying: 'Where were you? We've tried every place! You're going to Hollywood!'"

And she did.

The first five promising young people earnestly assured me that never, never must a screen aspirant come to Hollywood until sent for. The sixth one came.

Janis Paige, who doffed the name Donna Mae Jaden in tribute to Elsie Janis, was born in Tacoma, Washington, a real home town where nobody dreams of getting into pictures.

"People's lives are laid out for them; they grow up, marry, settle down and raise families," said Janis. "Mother had a nice voice and wanted to be a singer, but her rut was too deep; she married, settled down, raised my sister and me. When it seemed I had a voice, and encouraging things were said of it at two high school operettes, she agreed with me that I must study for grand opera. ,

"I studied in Tacoma, but as soon as I was graduated, we knew I was wasting time there. New York was too far and too expensive, so we packed our stuff into the car, and the three of us came to Hollywood where there are excellent voice teachers and living is cheap. My father had died some years earlier. My mother got a job in a bank and I went to work in a department store to pay for my voice lessons."

It's hooey that you knock in vain in Hollywood, thinks Janis, for a talent scout stopped at the store and begged her to take a screen test. "I'd been taught to pay no attention to such things, thought he meant no good, and refused. But it just shows!"

Her teacher sent her to sing at Hollywood Canteen one night, and before she sang her second number a talent scout had asked her to report to MGM next day. She remained there a year, doing nothing, not even a screen test, just drawing her weekly check and suffering. No sooner had she left MGM than Warners' signed her, and next day she got her role in "Hollywood Canteen."

"After my first false start, I was always the little girl who was right there," glowed Janis. "Another girl was to have played in 'Canteen,' but she couldn't finish her picture in time; they needed someone and there I was. Then the girl who was to have done my role in 'Of Human Bondage' was stuck in New York when cameras were ready to roll, and I was on hand. So I got that. Jane Wyman was ill when 'The Time, The Place and The Girl' came along, and I was right under their noses."

If you have talent and cultivate it, it's bound to be recognized, Janis is convinced. Go to New York or to Hollywood, but they'll find you. Only bring enough money to live on, or take a job while you wait.

There they are—six promising young people.

How many of them will be big names in Hollywood in the next three years?

ROSALIND IVAN

While Rosalind is new to pictures, she's far from new to acting, and she got her training and experience with some of the finest playwrights and actors the theater has ever produced. Names that are only remote celebrities to most of us—such as George Bernard Shaw, John Masefield, John Drinkwater, John and Ethel Barrymore, and Ina Claire—have been Rosalind's friends, teachers, and coworkers. Which partially explains that sure touch with which she makes her characters come alive and stay in our memories like people we have known.

So completely did she become Cora in that first picture that when she turned up in "The Corn Is Green" as Bette Davis' Cockney housekeeper, looking so hale and hearty and jovial, it was downright confusing, since we had a distinct feeling that Cora was dead and buried—and good riddance! That, we think, is a high, if slightly grim compliment to Rosalind's art.

Remembering Cora, and still wincing from her sharpness, you might expect to meet a sharp-faced female who would keep you constantly dodging verbal darts and shafts. A rather unpleasant experience you'd be looking forward to. Or, remembering Mrs. Watty, that loyal, honest soul, so staunchly devoted to the Militant Righteous Corps (and no fancy French pronunciation, please!) which had reformed her "light fingers," you might expect—oh, practically anything.

Well, what you find when you meet Miss Ivan is a charming, intelligent, smartly dressed lady, whose bright, expressive eyes are quick to note the minutest details of human behavior. Her keen observation and humorous slant on life make her an unusually interested and animated talker. She finds endless subjects for her imitative powers in daily life. Everybody who crosses her path is grist for her mill, and her conversation is highlighted with the most amusing impersonations of every character she mentions.

Asked how she goes about making her roles so intensely convincing, she says, "I'm quite mediumistic about a part. I think myself into it until I am that person. I'm not a quick study—I have to do an awful lot of studying, getting lines, positions, and so forth. When I'm doing a serious part, for the time being, it does absorb me. I can't talk to people or think of other things. It really takes an awful lot out of me. It's like being possessed by another person.

"And after I'm out of character, I can't do the same things that go with that character—such as shrieking or loud laughter. When I see myself on the screen, I can't possibly imagine how I ever did such things!

"Charles Laughton works much the same way, getting into a character. Before shooting started on 'The Suspect,' I went to his house and we worked those scenes over and over, until by the time we went to work, we actually were that married couple, living at swords' points, and having a most terrible row.

Incidentally, Laughton tells about going on the set one morning when one of the electricians stopped him and asked, "Mr. Laughton, are you going to work with Miss Ivan today?"

"Yes," replied Laughton. "Why?"

"Oh, brother!" groaned the man. "That's tough on us! We catch it at home ourselves, and then we come to work and have to listen to you catching it!"

But to get back to Rosalind, she admits it's no snap to get that way. "I'm often very bad at rehearsals," says she. When we did 'The Suspect' on the radio, I didn't do at all well at rehearsals—I couldn't seem to get into it. And I could see them giving each other a look as if to say, 'What's the matter? She's not going to be as good as we thought!' But always, at a certain point, comes that click, and suddenly I become the person I'm trying to be, and everything's all right."

Until she played Mrs. Watty on the New York stage, Rosalind had never considered herself a dialect actress. The only other Cockney role she'd ever had was in the west coast production of "Kind Lady," with May Robson.

"I got my Cockney accent," says she, "by shutting my ears to every other intonation and thinking back to Cockney women I had known. It's perfectly true that as a child I used to imitate the Cockney servants in my mother's home, for which I used to be greatly scolded! But it's stood me in good stead since.

"I don't care what type of part I play, just so it's a good part. That's the whole thing. I don't want to be typed. I've had quite a nice variety on the screen so far—melodrama, in 'Pillow of Death' with Lon Chaney; low comedy in 'Corn Is Green,' and high comedy in 'Three Strangers.'

"In 'Pillow of Death'—no, I'm not the pillow! I'm the poor relation: a grasping, proud woman. I try to asphyxiate people (but I don't succeed!). I go into trances, and all that sort of thing.

"It was in smart comedy parts that I made my reputation in New York; plays like Gilbert Miller's production of 'Tovarich' and 'Once Is Enough' with Ina Claire. That's a type of comedy I greatly prefer. I'm not crazy about kitchen parts: Give me anything but the kitchen! But I do like variety, and I've played everything from queens to tramps."

Her gift for acting was strictly her own, for Rosalind did not come from a theatrical family. Her father had his own firm of chartered accountants, an uncle was British Consul-General in China, a cousin was master at Harrow, another a Don at Cambridge. Still others held commissions in the Army and Navy, all very conventional and respectable.

But she can't remember when she didn't want to act.

"My first encounters with the theater came at the age of four, when I saw the lovely children's plays—'Snowdrop,' 'Alice in Wonderland,' and Kingsley's 'Water Babies'—which were done at Christmas time. Then when I was a little older, they began taking me to see all the best things in the theater, including foreign stars like Lucien Guitry, Rejane, and Duse."

All this, however, was intended as a purely cultural activity, for Rosalind's education as a child was in music. At ten years of age, she gave a piano recital in London, at which she played Chopin's "Scherzo in B Minor," and the "Moonlight Sonata." Today she is a pianist of concert calibre, though she denies it herself, not having time to keep up regular practice. But friends who can persuade her to play in their homes will tell you that Rosalind out of practice is better at the piano than most industrious students at their best.

At fourteen, she was sent to boarding school in Germany to continue her musical studies. Then, due to financial reverses, and the sudden death of her father, she found herself completely on her own at sixteen. With characteristic directness, she decided then and there to become an actress.

She got an introduction to George Grossmith, and entertained him for two hours with scenes from Shakespeare. He was so impressed with the young girl's ability that he sent her to Sir George Alexander, who gave her her first engagement.

After a few parts in London, she joined Miss Horniman's repertory company at Manchester, where one of her roles was "Candida" in the play by George Bernard Shaw, of whom she says:

"Bernard Shaw was kindness itself to me always. Where do people get the idea that he's cruel? At rehearsals, if he had any criticism to make, he would take the actor or actress aside and talk it over quietly. My acquaintance with the Shaws covered several years. His cousin, who was his secretary, was a friend of mine, and we went often to the Shaw home in London." (Which slant on the great G. B. S. might come as a surprise to some who are still smarting from the memory of his visit to Hollywood some years back, when he left wounded egos all over the place.)

While still fairly new to the theater, she went with an English-speaking company to Berlin, where she starred in Masefield's tragedy, "Nan," creating an immensely favorable impression among the critics there. For her success in this one, she credits John Masefield. "He worked with me on the part. He knew all Nan's moods, and that was what helped me. But he couldn't read the lines, even though he had written them."

After that, Rosalind went into Ibsen and other Scandinavian plays which finally brought her to New York in Strindberg's play, "The Father," with Warner Oland. "The critics said a lot of nice things about me," she says. "It was wonderful, or so I thought, till I found the catch to it. My part was the wife—a wicked, cruel creature—and the better the job I did, the surer directors were that I couldn't do anything else. That surprised me, for it was the only unpleasant part I had ever played. I just had to keep on being a menace, and my next part was a rag, a bone, and a hank of hair in 'A Fool There Was,' also with Warner Oland."

They went on tour with that, playing to packed houses. After this play Warner Oland left for Hollywood to become Charlie Chan on the screen, and Rosalind returned to New York where she did Gorky's "A Night's Lodging," and played Queen Margaret in "Richard III" opposite John Barrymore. She returned to England then to play the Chronicler in John Drinkwater's "Abraham Lincoln."

"And that was the last play I did in my first career, before I retired from the stage," she says.

A little inquiry into that surprising statement brings out the fact that following "Abraham Lincoln," she came back to the United States and spent a few years translating foreign plays and writing book reviews for The New York Times. One of her biggest jobs at this time was working with Jacques Copeau on his French adaptation of the Dostoievski novel "Brothers Karamazov," which she then translated and sold to the Theater Guild. It was produced with an all-star cast including the Lunts, Edward G. Robinson, Dudley Digges, Henry Travers, and Morris Carnovsky.

In 1939 Rosalind returned to the stage as guest star at the Mohawk Drama Festival to star opposite Charles Coburn in "The Bourgeois Gentleman." Then came a series of lighter roles in New York, and finally Mrs. Watty in "The Corn Is Green," which proved to be her springboard to Hollywood.

Unlike so many stage actors, Rosalind Ivan has no patronizing attitude toward movies. She says she's always enjoyed seeing pictures, and now she frankly enjoys making them.

"And I have found the motion picture directors much easier and pleasanter to work with than stage directors. "The exception to that rule, in my experience, however, was Oscar Hammerstein. We had a failure in 'Knights of Song,' but nothing ruffled him. He was kindness and good temper to the end. He is the great exception on Broadway. There is nobody in the theater, or out of it, as charming as he."

Rosalind's favorite diversion is attending symphony concerts, and she seldom misses one when not working. But music isn't all she gets out of a concert, by any means. And if some eccentric people in the audience knew they were being watched by someone who is a regular blotter for picking up impressions of human foibles, they would be more careful how they act. She can give you the most hilarious imitations of her neighbors in the audience.

And without taking anything away from her love of music, this proves that the actress is dominant in her at all times and in all places. It's clear then why, with all her talents, it was acting that won out. For Rosalind Ivan can no more help acting than she can help breathing.

The accepted tale of Dennis O'Keefe's break is that Jack Conway, directing Jean Harlow's last picture "Saratoga", needed a husky, good-looking lad in a hurry for a written-in bit. Because Dennis' six feet plus dwarfed the other extras, he is presumed to have caught the directorial eye, been given a chance at the part—and so another potential star was born.

The fable is generally believed, because anything can happen in Hollywood.

But the facts are far more dramatic than the fiction.

Dennis, then known as Bud Flanagan, answered a call for extras at Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer Studios. The picture for which he was scheduled was suspended due to the illness of the star, and he was sent over to the Conway set.

Crowd scenes at a horse auction were scheduled for the cameras that day. A pivotal bit of action was the spirited bidding for a certain horse between Clark Gable and Walter Pidgeon, co-starring with Harlow. It was essential that audiences realize that the price bid was out of all proportion to the value of the horse. The director, the stars, the writers went into a huddle, and decided that a few lines of dialogue by someone in the crowd would clarify the story. The writers went off to their typewriters.

Perhaps it was intuition. Perhaps it was the fated hour. Bud suddenly went over to Tommy Andre, the assistant director, and said:

"Will you ask Conway if he'll let me do that bit? I know I can play it."

Conway was dubious. Dennis would have to play the scene opposite Pidgeon, and the director felt the part called for someone more mature.

But Gable and Harlow, who also had come up the hard way, urged Conway to give the boy a chance.

Pidgeon did even more. He lied. "Oh, he's not too young," he assured Conway. "I've done lots of bits with him in other pictures, and he can do this in a romp."

The most persuasive argument of all was that giving the bit to Dennis would save production delay, since no suitable bit player was immediately available. Still skeptical, Conway gave in to the pressure.

Walter Pidgeon pulled Dennis aside. Carefully he explained the story and the special sequence.

Within ten minutes they had improvised dialogue and action. The writers in their offices were forgotten. The cameras turned.

Twice the scene was shot. Conway's eyes gleamed with satisfaction.

Dennis was paid fifty dollars and as an additional bonus was given an extra day of work, although his acting stint was completed.

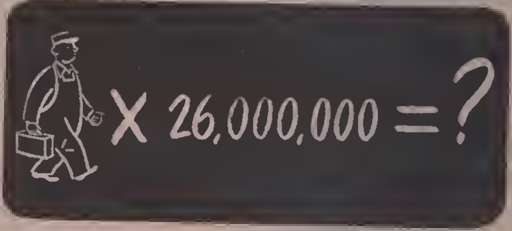
The events of the following day are sharp and clear in Dennis' mind, and the years will probably never dim their luster or importance.

He was sitting on a trunk shortly after lunch when Conway strolled over to him.

"Whathahell are you doing playing extra?" he asked bluntly.

Dennis made the obvious answer. "I can't get anything else and I have to eat," he said.

A Problem in Multiplication



Take the case of John Smith, average American:

For over three years now, he's been buying War Bonds through the Payroll Savings Plan. He's been putting away a good chunk of his earnings regularly—week in, week out.

He's accumulating money—maybe for the first time in his life. He's building up a reserve. He's taking advantage of higher wages to put himself in a solid financial position.

Now suppose everybody in the Payroll Plan—everybody who's earning more than he or she needs to live on—does what John Smith is doing. In other words, suppose you multiply John Smith by 26 million.

What do you get?

Why—you get a whole country that's just like John Smith! A solid, strong, healthy, prosperous America where everybody can work and earn and live in peace and comfort when this war is done.

For a country can't help being, as a whole, just what its people are individually!

If enough John Smiths are sound—their country's got to be!

The kind of future that America will have—that you and your family will have—is in your hands.

Right now, you have a grip on a wonderful future. Don't let loose of it for a second.

Hang onto your War Bonds!

BUY ALL THE BONDS YOU CAN

KEEP ALL THE BONDS YOU BUY

MOVIELAND

This is an official U. S. Treasury advertisement—prepared under auspices of Treasury Department and War Advertising Council

Conway is astute, discerning. He has a sixth sense for latent talent. In his mind there had been no question about this lad the moment he saw the rushes the night before.

Currently Metro was engaged in one of those periodical drives for new talent, which is part of every studio program. The next noon, with Dennis in tow, Conway marched into the private studio dining room where all the executives were lunching. He introduced him. Dennis was asked a few casual questions.

Forty-eight hours later there was no longer a Bud Flanagan on the extra lists. There was a young player, renamed Dennis O'Keefe, under contract to MGM.

Dennis' first picture on the lot was as the romantic lead in a Wallace Beery picture. He jogged along for three years, but no part and no incident individualized him. He did establish a flattering reputation as a one-take actor, which means that he never blew his lines or muffed the accompanying action.

However, in the first five years he was Dennis O'Keefe, he did not appear in a single hit picture. It was not until he was cast opposite Martha Scott in "Hi Diddle Diddle" that he attracted any attention on which he could capitalize.

From here on the sledding was smooth. Good pictures followed rapidly. He was starred in "Up In Mabel's Room" in which he revealed his aptitude for farce comedy. This finally achieved stardom was the payoff for his patience and self-confidence.

Dennis has authority in his acting because his background is rich and varied. His adventures in living have given him the emotional maturity necessary for vivid and vital and believable interpretation of his roles.

Dennis was born into show business. His father was James Edward Flanagan, half of that famous "On again, Off again" Flanagan and Edwards vaudeville team. But the steadiness and purpose which is an integral part of his personality may be traced to his early boyhood in Ft. Madison, Iowa, his birthplace. There he acquired his sense of values. And there, from the men of the soil, the virtue of patience.

While Dennis was still in grammar school, his family moved East, and along with his credits from school, the boy took along his spirit of hustle. He peddled newspapers, ran errands for the neighborhood grocery store and did odd jobs to earn spending change.

Then Bud's father was called to Hollywood to appear in the original

BEAUTIFUL DREAMER:

Selznick Studio was recently in receipt of a letter from a nun who had been one of Jennifer Jones' teachers when Jennifer was a convent student. The letter said, "I have read about the preparations being made for the filming of a picture to be called 'Duel In The Sun' and I understand that Miss Jennifer Jones, the star, is to ride a horse. Will you please guard her very carefully, as she is a dreamer, forgets what precautions should be taken, and may easily injure herself. When she was a student with us, we teachers kept a constant eye on her—especially when she was crossing a busy street—because her powers of concentration on some mental object were so great that she became oblivious to her surroundings."

Small-Town Girl Captivates New York

Remodels her figure, wins national achievement award and praises of beauty experts.

Such thrilling days and nights in the magic city might well have turned the head of any 24-year-old girl. But not Lodema Peninger's. She came up from her home town of Salisbury, North Carolina, and took New York in her stride . . . posing before the color camera of a famous photographer, telling her own success story on a radio broadcast. It was all the result of a small-town girl's decision to regain her slender figure, make the most of herself. Following the DuBarry Success Course at home, she lost 26 pounds, became expert in skin care, hair styling and make-up, emerged a petite blonde beauty. For her improvement in face, figure and fascination, she won the coveted award—an exciting week in New York, where beauty experts hailed her achievement.

The Story Behind the Story

Mrs. Peninger, only 5 feet 1½ inches tall, had worn a size 9 when she was married. After her baby was born she went to 138 pounds! Heavy hips and thick waist above slim legs made her look all out of proportion. One day her husband reminded her how slim she used to be. That decided her. She enrolled for the DuBarry Success Course, lost 7 pounds the first week, kept on until she lost 26. Now with 6 inches gone from her waist, 8 from her abdomen, 7 from her hips, she wears size 9 again. Her skin and hair are lovelier than ever before. "I cannot praise the DuBarry Success Course enough," says Mrs. Peninger. "It has shown me how to be healthier and happier than I had thought it possible to be."

Hallroom Boys Comedies. Bud entered Hollywood High School, and later went to the University of Southern California.

But a formal education wasn't all Bud was acquiring during these years. He tried his hand at various studio chores. He was only seventeen when he was hired by Hal Roach to write Our Gang comedies. In turn he was film processor, assistant director on Poverty Row pictures, laborer and occasional actor.

He even doubled for beautiful heroines who were thrown over cliffs.

When his father died suddenly, Bud left school and started hunting a job. But jobs were scarce. He managed to pick up a few dollars writing blood-and-thunder stories for pulp magazines, and he sold three originals to the studios. But all of this still didn't add up to a job nor enough money for regular rent payments.

He finally contrived a vaudeville act called "Lesson in Golf," and appeared in it on the Orpheum circuit for several months. But Hollywood was a magnet and vaudeville was on its last legs—so he headed West.

On arrival he found nothing quickly available, and registered for extra work. His break came 7 years later.

Dennis is an easy-going lad with everyone except himself. He sets goals for himself. His final ambition is to become a director.

"Then you have a chance to really capitalize on what you've learned," he declares.

Because of his ambition he interests himself in every phase of picture-making. He discusses sets with the art director; shooting angles with the camera-man; tone reproduction with the sound man.

He is infallible in his evaluation of dialogue and action. Frequently I have seen him knotting his forehead over a scene, trying to figure out why it seemed false to him, why he felt emotionally uncertain in it.

Directors take kindly to his suggestions, for they are invariably the result of long and processed thinking.

His is a three-pronged talent. He writes fluently—and of recent years writers have been singularly successful as motion picture directors. He understands the mechanics of picture-making. And he has the emotional flexibility essential in directing actors.

Dennis is married to Steffi Duna and has two children.

Remember this name — Dennis O'Keefe. You will undoubtedly see it on theater marquees for a long time.

THE END

JUMBLED GENERATION:

News was recently received in Hollywood of the marriage of Pamela Hambro, daughter of one of the directors of the Bank of England, to Lieutenant Robin Loew, of the Royal Grenadier Guards, and son of John Loder. As the wedding took place in the spring, Hedy Lamarr became a mother-in-law before she became a mother.

ANGEL TAKES A HOLIDAY:

Remember Michael St. Angel, the leading man who outwitted John Loder in "The Brighton Strangler"? He recently married Marjorie Holliday, who is under contract to 20th Century-Fox. Mike and Marjorie were introduced by Walter Winchell, who served as best man at the wedding performed by Superior Judge Edward R. Brand.

BELLS OF ST. MARY'S

to be the new portion of the school, the floors ring with the satisfyingly solid sound of granite.

For this elegant bit of verisimilitude, and many others, Art Director Bill Flannery was responsible.

The walks, eloquent of generations of eroding feet, were cracked concrete; the playground (and this is all within a concrete and frame sound stage, remember) was made of 6 inch deep gravel. The fences around the school were real grilled iron, in case one of the youngsters should take it into his head to kick same in the attentive presence of the sound track.

And, morning and night, for the 64 days of actual production (not including Sundays, holidays, and days taken off because of the commitments to radio of various members of the cast) a choir of canaries sang lustily from the prop department trees, leafed by prop department branches.

Into this masterpiece of architectural make-believe, an equally brilliant Dudley Nichols script was introduced. Because every picture must have conflict, hence a villain, the heavy in "Bells of St. Mary's" is a modern office building owned by Henry Travers who enacts the role of a greedy, childhating, old grubbichops. He covets the school's athletic field for a parking lot to be used by the vehicles of his 300 employees. At this point he collides headon with Father O'Malley, Sister Ingrid Bergman, and 85 resourceful pupils enrolled in the the school.

During the development of the plot, Bing sings no new songs, but turns out four oldies in the unimpeachable Crosby style: "Bells Of St. Mary's," "Adeste Fidelis," "In The Land Of Beginning Again," and "O, Sanctissima." Even Miss Bergman bursts into a merry little folk song, sung in Swedish.

Someone on the set, hearing the number recorded, observed: "If 'Bie Mir Bist Du Schon' and 'Mairzy Doats' can make the Hit Parade, I don't see why that ditty in Swedish couldn't become the 'Swingin' On A Star' of this picture." No one paid any attention.

But it was a good idea for anyone on the "Bells" set to keep a sharp eye on operations, because there was always something doing. Right in the midst of production, the Academy Award banquet was held, with results of which you are already well aware.

For weeks before that Oscarized night, however, the Crosby boys—having taken Leo McCarey into their confidence—were very busy indeed. They didn't think Bing had much chance to get the award; they had seen "Wilson" as well as "Going My Way," and their conviction was that Alexander Knox was likely to show their dad a clean pair of heels in the stretch. So, borrowing a picture of an Oscar from the studio, they got busy with clay. It was a fair reproduction of the gleaming statuette; although perhaps the tummy was a trifle too contented and the arms were distinguished more by baseball biceps than by an airy reaching into ozone for inspiration.

On the afternoon before the Academy Award affair, the quartet presented their father with the "Crosby Award" in a brief, but hilarious ceremony. As soon as the modeling clay is thoroughly dry, Bing is going to have it baked. Chances are four to one that it will blow up in the process, but he figures it's worth a try. If it remains intact, he will stand it honorably beside the real Award. On the ground that it is easier to be a hero to the distant multitude than to those who see you stymied by a leaky faucet, Bing probably holds his Crosby Award in equal esteem with his Oscar.

The morning following the Award presentation, Leo McCarey was the first to arrive on the set. As he came through the double doors, he stepped onto a red velvet carpet that automatically unrolled in flattering grandeur all the way to his throne set up by joyous co-workers on a hastily prepared dais. When Mr. McCarey was seated in the grand and golden chair (prop department, castle division) he noted that there was a similar chair to right and left. Within a few moments, Bing was seated in one, Ingrid in the other, at which point the cast and crew of "Bells" gave them an ovation.

One member of this cast was Eva Novak, who enacts the part of one of the nuns. Twenty-one years ago, she played the lead in the first picture Leo McCarey directed, a delicious little number entitled, "Society Secrets." When he was casting "Bells," he mulled over the part of one nun, finally came up with the idea that Eva Novak would be just right for it. He telephoned her; said in a peremptory manner, "Eva, this is Leo. I've just gone over the rushes and come to the conclusion that we are going to have to do some retakes on 'Society Secrets.' How soon could you get to the studio?"

Another member of the cast is Bill Gargan, who enacts the role of Joan Carroll's father. It has been one of Bill's prime ambitions for years to work in a Leo McCarey picture. In Hollywood, working with Leo is tantamount to working under the supervision of Toscanini, if one is a musician; or under the tutelage of Grant Wood, if one is an artist. Bill said to Leo, when he met him in a local restaurant one night, "I want to work for you, Leo, if I only get to cross the stage once, carrying a spear."

When he answered Leo's call to come to work, he demanded eagerly, "Shall I bring my own spear?"

Whenever there was a spare moment on the set (while lights were being adjusted or a new camera angle being set up) Leo McCarey settled himself before the piano and knuckled out some fine old tunes. Incidentally, Mr. McCarey is the perennial bridesmaid of the song writing business: he has turned out many a runner-up tune, but has yet to be the bride with a sensational hit.

The instant he set himself before the black and whites, he would be surrounded by the ten actresses garbed as nuns, and everybody would limber the larynx. One afternoon Leo rattled into an old minstrel number, "Roll Dem Bones," that enchanted Miss Bergman. She wanted to learn the melody, and that accomplished, Leo had to write out the lyrics for her. Fascinated, she leaned over his shoulder, watching the pencil shape each letter. When the words were finished she carefully folded the paper, then looked for a place in her nun's habit that would serve as a pocket. With a little shrug, she tucked the

Do you have that constant urge to write but the fear that a beginner hasn't a chance? Then listen to what the editor of Liberty said on this subject:

> "There is more room for newcomers in the writing field today than ever before. Some of the greatest of writing men and women have passed from the scene in recent years. Who will take their places? Who will be the new Robert W. Chambers, Edgar Wallace, Rudyard Kipling? Fame, riches and the happiness of achievement await the new men and women of power."

Writing Aptitude Test—FREE!

NEWSPAPER Institute of America offers a free Writing Aptitude Test. Its object is to discover new recruits for the army of men and women who add to their income by fiction and article writing. The Writing Aptitude Test is a simple but expert analysis of your latent ability, your powers of imagination, logic, etc. Not all applicants pass this test. Those who do are qualified to take the famous N. I. A. course based on the practical training given by big metropolitan dailies.

This is the New York Copy Desk Method which teaches you to write by writing! You develop your individual style instead of trying to copy that of others. You "cover" actual assignments such as metropolitan reporters get. Although you work at home, on your own time, you are constantly guided by experienced writers. It is really fascinating work. Each week you see new progress. In a matter of months you can acquire the coveted "professional" touch. Then you're ready for market with greatly improved chances of making sales.

One afternoon, during the Santa Anita Race Meet, a group of girls were getting up a solid financial proposition in the Sixth Race (the San Pasqual Handicap). Louis B. Mayer had entered Thumbs Up with Jockey J. Longden at the reins, and Fred Astaire had entered Triplicate under Jockey Turk. The girls, pooling their bets, had decided to take a $2.00 show ticket on Thumbs Up, and were confronted with the quandary: to bet or not to bet on Triplicate. "If he's as nimble-footed as Fred" . . . one of the girls was saying tentatively, just as Mr. Astaire passed the group.

Fred was wearing a pair of tired brown shoes, grey wool sox, his blue trousers rolled up to a spot known in haberdashery circles as the high water mark, his blue shirt somewhat faded, his grey fedora eloquent of many nervous altercations of brim and crown.

The eyes of the girls turned from Mr. Astaire to one another. Slowly they shook their heads. "He doesn't look very prosperous," one summed up their attitude. "I don't think his horse has been doing much for him. Let's skip Triplicate."

P.S. Thumbs Up won the race, paying the girls $2.80 for their $2.00 ticket. Triplicate ran a good remote fifth.

note into her sleeve, an action that brought forth from Leo the delightful comment, "Never in my life did I expect to see a nun secrete the words to 'Roll Dem Bones' in the recesses of her sleeve!"

One afternoon the camera was taking in only the forward part of the chapel and the altar at which Miss Bergman as the Sister Superior was making her devotions. The pews of the church gradually filled with unoccupied craftsmen, people from the publicity department, and several dozen service men and miscellaneous other visitors. When the assistant called "Cut," Sister Superior, retaining her solemn air of gentle aloofness and piety, picked up the nearby collection plate and moved into the church. There she handed the plate to the person in the first pew, and with a sweetly serious gesture indicated that she expected him to contribute, then pass the plate to his seat-mate.

Ingrid passed that tray to everyone in the pews and lounging on the set, and, at completion of her mission, had accumulated $6.55, which she turned over to Father Devlin for his charity fund. It was all done so beautifully, with such obvious sincerity of purpose, that there were few people in the chapel who realized that the action was not a part of the picture.

Studio employees and extra talent look upon assignment to a Bergman picture with anticipatory delight. During the shooting period, Missy Ingrid gave about a dozen ice cream and cake parties: she employed every possible excuse. One day the party honored the birthday of an electrician; on another occasion the Saturday before Easter was celebrated; and naturally she had to give a party in honor of her distinguished co-workers who had won Academy awards. One afternoon a member of RKO's publicity department came on the set only to be hailed into an ice cream and cake circle. Quick-fast he went over a list of holidays, birthdays, and other possible reasons for the festivity, but offhand could think of none, so he said, "Well, what's the big occasion this time?"

Miss Bergman looked up at him with wide, amazed eyes. "We had to have a party today," she said. "After all, it's TUESDAY!"

No further excuse needed.

There was plenty of excitement on the set a week before Mother's Day when Bing's four boys, Gary aged 12, the twins Dennis and Philip, aged 11, and Lindsey, aged 7, arrived to pose for portraits. Shots were made of the boys separately and together, and with their Bursting-With-Pride Pop—all to be given to Dixie and Grandmother Crosby. The pictures were made by John Miehle, one of the most brilliant still photographers in the business.

Speaking of moppets, one of the best scenes in the picture is that in which the youngsters stage their own Nativity play. "Joseph" is a solemn character with his sweater tied around his waist; a local stable horse was assembled by means of a saw horse, a long thin bucket for a head, and a mop for a tail; the Bambino created a good deal of havoc by insisting upon setting up a loud wail of protest every time he was stashed away in the improvised crib. Some of the dialogue is priceless as prepared by the kids. Joseph and Mary arrive at the Inn, knock, ask, "Have you got a room?" Innkeeper: "You got a reservation?" J. & M.: "No." Innkeeper: "Then we don't have any place for you." Slam goes the door, with dramatic finality..

You will see this in, perhaps, a modified form, as several versions were shot. At no time during this episode were the children (none of them professionals) given a script to memorize. The full story was told to them, then they were allowed to enact the drama in their own words. The result is both moving and instrinsically reverent.

On the last day of the picture's shooting, the crew gave Bing a three-fold, pocket-size, silver picture frame in which he can carry snaps of his family when he goes overseas on entertainment tours.

When the picture started, Bing and Leo gave Ingrid a gold charm bracelet on which there were 5 golden Bells of St. Mary's. The crew added a sixth golden bell to this collection. (Someday this will belong to Pia, the lucky little girl.)

Then a large, square, very important box was handed to Leo McCarey. He grinned, began to tear off wrappings, remove covers, and toss aside excelsior packing. When he had peeled the parcel he found a highly polished oblong box. "Oh—for cigarettes!" he said. Someone said this was scarcely a time for a present like that, considering the fact that cigarettes are now worth about 4 pairs of nylons. But Leo wagged his head and looked pleased.

Then he lifted the lid and a concealed music box began to tinkle out the tender tune, "Bells of St. Mary's." Leo McCarey, the man who has been everywhere and seen everything, looked at his musical cigarette box and slowly tears suffused his eyes and coursed down his cheeks. There was nothing he could say.

Everyone who has seen the early version, says that the picture "Bells of St. Mary's" is just such a prize surprise package for audiences as Leo's cigarette box was for him.

LOCAL BEARD:

Orson Welles grew a luxuriant Volga Boatman beard for certain scenes in his forthcoming picture with Claudette Colbert and George Brent, "Tomorrow Is Forever," and was stalking around behind this elegant foliage when he went to San Francisco to attend portions of the Conference.

One noon, when he was having luncheon with Rita Hayworth and some friends, he was talking loudly and earnestly about Russia, only to be interrupted by a rosy-cheeked sailor who asked for an autograph.

While Orson was signing, the sailor said to Rita, "Are you Russian, too?"

Rita was so stunned that she simply stared at the boy, trying to make out whether he was ribbing her or not. The sailor repeated his question, forming each syllable, each word very clearly, "Are you Russian, too?"

"No," Rita managed to say, "I'm Spanish."

The sailor nodded, handed her the paper already signed by her husband.

A few moments later the flabbergasted seaman came back and peered into the faces of his ersatz Russian and Spaniard. "Gosh, you sure are!" he breathed. "You're not kidding—you're really Orson Welles and Rita Hayworth . . . all the way up here from Hollywood."

RUMORS FROM ROBERTS:

Two gentlemen from Hollywood are currently stationed at Camp Roberts in northern California. One, private Turhan Selahettin (billed on marquees as Turhan Bey), appears to be very well liked. This writer recently picked up two G.I.s who had come south on weekend pass, so secured some first-hand information. Turhan has been quiet, unassuming, serious about his training. When someone saw him clomping around in army shoes, dressed in a weary pair of G.I. fatigues, and asked him how things went, he said with a grin, "I hope I can make the grade as a good soldier."

However, what my two G.I.s said about the other man from Hollywood Jon Hall, cannot be repeated in a family magazine. .

LEAVE HER TO HEAVEN is the picturization of Ben Ames Williams' brilliant story of a woman so jealous that she reached back from the grave to destroy the man she loved. Gene Tierney has this plum part, Jeanne Crain is the sister, Cornel Wilde the man, Vincent Price a vindictive district attorney, and others in the cast are Ray Collins, Ruth Nelson, Darryl Hickman, Mary Philips and Reed Hadley. Don't miss this one.

AT WARNER BROTHERS:

CONFIDENTIAL AGENT is an ICE PIE special. (Okay, make it I Spy, if you wish.) With Charles Boyer, Lauren Bacall, Katina Paxinou, Peter Lorre, Dan Seymour and Victor Francen.

NIGHT AND DAY is the Cole Porter story with Cary Grant, Alexis Smith, Jane Wyman, Monty Woolley, Henry Stephenson, Donald Woods and Selena Royale (who is well known at all nearby government hospitals because of her extensive Red Cross work).

AT UNIVERSAL:

ALIBI IN ERMINE is a wonderful comedy (check it on your calendar for future reference) with Charles Coburn, Ginny Simms, Robert Paige, Jess Barker (who has been one of the most faithful stars in town to work at the Hollywood Canteen), Martha O'Driscoll, Kathleen Howard, and Billy Green.

ONCE UPON A DREAM is a romantic and tuneful comedy with Franchot Tone, Susanna Foster, Louise Allbritton, David Bruce, Buster Keaton, Irene Ryan, Jaqueline deWit, and Barbara Sears.

AS IT WAS BEFORE is the picturization of a novel by Lucien Ballard, who will marry the star of the picture, Merle Oberon, as soon as the film is completed. Working with Miss Oberon are Charles Korvin and Jess Barker.

AT PARAMOUNT:

THE TROUBLE WITH WOMEN is Ray Milland's new picture. Local wags, pointing out Ray's recent separation from his lovely wife, have a good deal to say about the title of this cinematic venture. Also at work with the troublesome women are Teresa Wright and Brian Donlevy.

AT REPUBLIC:

MEXICANA is being made by Constance Moore, Tito Guizar, Leo Carrilo, Jean Stevens, Estrelita, Steve Geray and Guy Zannette.

SUNSET IN EL DORADO is the latest Roy Rogers picture with Dale Evans, Gabby Hayes, sedate Margaret DuMont and the Sons of the Pioneers.

AT MONOGRAM:

GREGORY is the picture that is causing Monogramed headaches. So far, three endings have been shot, each of which resulted in the death of Edmund Lowe, but he is a man who takes a lot of killing so someone is trying to think up a fourth finale. Also involved in this triple termination are Jean Rogers, Don Douglas and Marjorie Hoshelle.

AT COLUMBIA:

SHE WOULDN'T SAY YES is now in its second month of production with Rosalind Russell, Lee Bowman, Charles Winninger, Adele Jergens and Lewis Russell. Incidentally, Adele Jergens' fan mail has begun to work the Columbia mail clerks round-shouldered.

THE KANSAN, in Technicolor, is Columbia's new western with Evelyn Keyes (how about her work in 1001 NIGHTS????), Willard Parker (his first picture after his discharge from the army), Larry Parks, Edgar Buchanan, Jim Bannon, and Forest Tucker.

SNAFU is a harmless little comedy with Nanette Parks, Jimmy Lloyd, Conrad Janis, Robert Benchley, and Enid Markey. The title, incidentally is derived from the army term "Situation Normal—All Fouled Up." Those who have seen the rushes say that Mr. Benchley, the gentleman with the Cointreau voice, is even better than usual.

THE PAPER DOLL MURDERS has gone into its first week of production with Warner Baxter (his first picture in a long, long time), Dusty Anderson, John Litel, and John Abbott. As this goes to press, Mr. Baxter's huge Palm Springs holding is for sale at a nice fat figure. A land boom was recently touched off in the desert by an announcement that certain parcels of land were available at $5.00 per acre. Wisenheimers, instantly calculating upon the thousands of dollars to be made by buying up some of this space, constructing motels and other resort buildings thereon, stood four deep for hours in the Los Angeles Federal Building in an effort to sign up for purchase. Not until the clerk explained, after the hours of waiting, that the land was entirely without improvement (the piping charges for sewer connections and water connections would have been staggering) did the fast thinkers become discouraged. However, a good many sincere people who actually want to live on the desert for two or three months each year, bought up the land anyhow.

For coffee flavor, place one-half cup of coffee grounds in a cheesecloth bag and bring to boil in one half of milk called for in recipe. Press liquid out and combine with rest of ingredients.

"It is really the Au Rhum sauce which lends the maitre de touch to the ice cream at the table, however," says Gail Patrick. Here she shares her recipe with you.

½ oz. heavy dark rum for each person
½ lb. jam to each quart of ice cream

Heat rum and jam together in chafing dish until thoroughly blended. Gail adds Peach Conserve, her favorite, to the flaming sauce for ice cream. Just before serving, she lights the sauce atop each dish and it burns with the blue flame so dear to the hearts of French maitres de cuisine.

TO MARTHA WITH LOVE AND HISSES

word and you'll get what we mean) of "Little Women," a series of skits in grammar and junior high schools throughout the U. S., and finally, a fling at betinselled Hollywood itself.

The great trek began back in Ann Arbor, Michigan, on May 28th of 1925 when the MacVicars' family doctor delivered the first official smack to her three-cornered-pants area, and Martha read her first official line—"Yeeeow!" She continued to squawk for the next five years in and around Evanston and Chicago, until that same family medico told father Ted MacVicars to go South, young man—for your health! The company for which he worked thoughtfully transferred him to Fort Lauderdale, Florida, and the entire family, including Martha's younger brother and two gravel-throated Persian cats, chugged down to the land of sunshine, Steve Hannagan, and California mudslingers.

It was here that Martha started school and became aware of the social graces. After experimenting a little she decided the graces were fine, in their place, but that football and baseball were much more exciting.

Then Mr. MacV. packed the car again and they moved to Miami, then on to St. Petersburg (where Martha appeared as an angel in her first theatrical encounter and scandalized the family by appearing on the school stage complete with halo, wings, and an obviously football-battered nose), and still on—to Detroit.

Martha was ten, and life was full of a lot of wonderful things. Books, for instance. She'd never gone to one school for more than a year, and she'd made few friends her own age, so she buried her impudent nose (healed now, but still freckled) in Shakespeare and lesser playwrights' efforts. In odd moments she fought with her brother Jimmy until he let her play quarterback on the corner football team.

In Dallas, when she was fourteen, she outgrew the grossness of physical endeavor for a while, and landed her first date. It was a giddy and sensational thing. Her escort arrived in a c-a-r! Nondescript, perhaps, but rolling. And it upped her prestige tremendously with Jimmy and the neighbor kids.

"It was a swimming party," Martha recalls, "and I was awfully done-up about it. I was so afraid I'd dampen my glamor that I refused to go in the water, and turned out to be the wet blanket of the day. I never had another date with that boy. And, gee, he was cute!"

By the time Martha had managed to assimilate that provocative Texas drawl, father MacVickers was transferred to Long Beach, California, and the Persian cats got another free ride.

Long Beach was different. It was a half hour trip from Hollywood. The studios and the weather were things Florida people dreamed about but seldom encountered at home. Martha went to school again and began to make friends.

"And then I was sixteen," she says. "You know the way kids are, awfully grown up. And I remember sitting in Daddy's car in a drive-in with a mouthful of hamburger when IT happened."

"It" was the thing that all of us wait for—some of us until we're too old to really care anymore. But to Martha it came early, and we hope it sticks around a long time.

"It" came in the form of photographer Mary Meade, who popped the question not too subtly with a breathless, "How would you like a job?"

Martha's eyebrows merged with her hairline and Mrs. Meade clinched the deal. "Of course, you've got freckles," she observed, "and we'll have to cap your teeth, and change your hair-do, but you're the girl!"

So Martha went to work for Mary Meade and her husband, and became—as her first gesture of relief to an eye-weary public— a Valentine cover for a national magazine.

She was so successful in this first venture that her calls became more and more frequent. In desperation her mother and brother rented a house in Laguna Beach where the photographer's studio was flourishing, just so Martha could get a home-cooked meal and a little rest.

Not content with posing swoonily before just one portrait camera, Martha broadened her talent to pose for more photographers. Things went along quietly until one of these shutter-clickers wrote an article for a Los Angeles paper, and one of Martha's pictures was used to illustrate it.

The all-seeing eye of producer David O. Selznick got one gander at the delectable Vickers' pan and promptly called the photog for information as to the little lady's identity. But the still-man got fussed, thought he was talking to Myron Selznick, and shrieked into the phone: "But she's just a child! She doesn't want an agent!" And promptly hung up.

However, he reckoned without the bloodhound instinct of all movie producers. Selznick wangled Martha's home number from somewhere, and it was just the next day that the family chariot toted Mama and Papa and Martha up to his residence, where they all solemnly affixed their signatures to a nice, new contract.

"Imagine!" Martha says, "I was a movie actress, and I'd never even been inside a studio!"

She remained in that outside-looking-in condition for a couple of months until they finally hauled her in and gave her diction lessons. "But," ordered the order, "don't direct her reading! Let her read her lines the way she wants to!"

So Martha continued with voice and diction, and remained Selznick chattel for twelve months. On the first day of the thirteenth month the contract was terminated. Our gal began decorating magazine covers again, and was quite happy about the whole thing, thank you.

But fortune reared its tantalizing head again when an agent took her by the hand and trotted her over to RKO Studios, where the big hunt was on for a girl for "Marine Raiders." Martha sat in producer Bill Sisk's office and read for him—cold. Ten minutes later she scrawled her name below that of her mother's, and the contract became legal.

"For the second time," says Martha, "I was an actress who had never seen a movie camera, much less acted in front of one. You see, I'd never even had a test!"

The part she won was a goodly hunk of script pages. But on the screen it came out just one brief but potent scene in a telephone booth! LOST: Somewhere between the sound stage and the theater, one promising career!

"And me with eleven friends at the preview!" Martha moans. "I could have cried for a week, except that it struck me so darned funny!"

Next came a minor whodunit called "The Falcon In Mexico." Before the murder would out at the preview, the studio let Martha's option drop gently but definitely, with that all-too-familiar thud. But she was young and bounce-proof, and was back smiling into the portrait lens again, when the reviews of the epic came out making fools of the studio heads, and handing Martha a big red apple for her performance.

During photographic lulls, Martha pursued her water colors via seascapes of every inch of Pacific between Laguna Beach and Santa Monica. She played desultory scales on the piano, but interest in music had waned. She rode horseback twice a week and gave her leggy brother rhumba lessons. She played ping-pong with friends, and had Saturday night dancing dates at Mocambo.

Then producer-director Howard Hawks gave his good friend, Movieland's photographer, Tom Kelley, a phone call and Kelley gave his model a wink, and the next day Hawks was interviewing Martha for "The Big Sleep."

"I don't quite know how it happened," Martha says. "But I guess Mr. Hawks had such good luck with Lauren Bacall that he figured he'd take a chance on another photographer's model."

Martha had her name changed to just plain Vickers, worked and studied like a gal possessed, and then played the fiendish "Carm" to the hilt. But she kept her fingers crossed and kept muttering, "I hope I'll be hated! Because if the audience gets up when the picture is released and says, 'My, what a sweet girl!' I'm a dead duck!"

But her performance did click and Warners promptly handed her another lead, surrounding her with Dennis Morgan, Jane Wyman, and Jack Carson. This is a pretty reliable team to lean on when a young actress gets weary.

She was elated about the whole thing until she read the script and found out she had to sing and dance. "And me without a time step up my sleeve!" she yelped.

Having no sense of rhythm at all, Martha sat down and listened to the score for "The Time, The Place, and The Girl," and beat out the rhythm painstakingly with her hands on the top of the piano. After two days she got it down pat. Then came her big test. She had to strut her stuff along with thirty chorus girls who were weaned on a "one, two, three, kick!" Her knees shook and she got out of step. But LeRoy Prinz, the dance director, said he thought she could do it, and she's been doing it ever since!

Martha's rolling along merrily now, with a full-fledged lead in her fourth picture. She doesn't have to practice her hand exercises in front of the mirror any more, she does them naturally, like they just grew on her.

Actually, her success hasn't changed her or her modus operandi in the slightest. She still lives at home, collects glass cat figurines, keeps up her Tyrone Power scrapbooks, cleans her own room, washes the dishes, battles with Jimmy to get him to wield the dish towel, and makes her own hats.

As a matter of record, she is wildly proud of the fact that she can whip up chic chapeaux out of a handful of thumbtacks, a couple of phony posies, a strip of veiling, and a bit of Scotch tape. They're elaborate and awesome creations.

"The only catch," Martha says, "is that I haven't the nerve to wear them."

She wasn't wearing any hat the night she was General "Hap" Arnold's dinner partner at Howard Hawks' house. She maintains it was the biggest thrill of her life when he dismissed his Army car and let her drive him back to his hotel.

Really the biggest thrill is yet to come. And that is her planned (but still fairly nebulous) trip to New York City. Then she wants to settle down on her own ranch (not too far from Hollywood) and raise horses and Persian cats, to do one picture after another, to marry a guy she hasn't yet met, and to raise a modest family of two boys and a girl.

Love and hisses to Martha? You're kidding, of course!

sumes to be many years wed . . . with the homesick sailor getting lovesick, and his fiance whom he wishes wasn't his fiancee arriving unexpectedly on the scene, to explain that she can't keep her nuptial promise after all, because she's a beaming bride but he's not the bridegroom. It all sounds crazy, and it is . . . only it isn't. (See how easy it is to catch doubletalk trouble? This "Christmas in Connecticut nonsense . . . it's contagious!)

Add Christmas carols sung by Morgan, and a horse-drawn sleigh scene that's guaranteed, genuine sentimental . . . and it all adds up to being "good for the whole family." (What's too adult, the kiddies won't catch.)

CAPTAIN EDDIE (20th Century-Fox)—Now comes to the screen another inspiring true-life tale—the story of Captain Eddie Rickenbacker, World War I ace and World War II survivor of 22 days on an open lifeboat without food or water. You'll probably recall the almost miraculous survival of Captain Rickenbacker and most of the members of the crew, when they were forced down into the Pacific ocean several years ago.

Our story begins with that crash, takes us back to Eddie's first flight through the air off the barn roof, on a home-made buggy and borrowed umbrella. It takes us through his courtship and marriage, his automobile racing days, into World War I, and finally to World War II, all the while cutting back to the scene on the three lifeboats listlessly drifting at sea. Through it all, we are given a liberal dose of the Rickenbacker philosophy which has carried him through an eventful and dangerous life.

Fred MacMurray, as Captain Rickenbacker, gives a fine and sensitive performance. Lynn Bari plays his wife, Adelaide. Others in the cast are Charles Bickford, Thomas Mitchell, Lloyd Nolan, James Gleason, Mary Phillips, and Darryl Hickman.

WEST OF THE PECOS (RKO) is a dry and dusty picture of the great outdoors. When Colonel Lambeth (Thurston Hall) is informed by Dr. Howard (Bryant Washburn) that his health would improve considerably if he moved from Chicago to his ranch in Texas, he rebels. His beautiful and outspoken daughter, Rill (Barbara Hale) prevails, and the Lambeth family and their French maid Suzanne (Rita Corday) venture into the great wilderness—alone and afraid.

Their fears are not in vain, because their stagecoach is held up by a lawless mob led by Sam Sawtelle (Perc Launders). To the rescue come Chito Rafferty (Richard Martin) and his friend Pecos (Robert Mitchum). The boys are given jobs on the Lambeth ranch and Rill takes to and is taken up by Pecos.

Richard Martin suffers under and from a Spanish accent. Bill Williams' part is small as he is killed off at the outset of the picture. The honors belong exclusively to Barbara Hale, who gives the only credible and competent performance. She plays a tomboy with lots of verve and kick. But don't let us stop you—if sagebrush is your dish!

BEWITCHED (M-G-M), taken from Arch Oboler's original radio script, "Alter Ego," is based on the idea that a person can be born with two different mind systems. In this case, two entirely different personalities inhabit the body of one girl. One is a nice-type, quiet girl, the other a lustful, wicked creature who strives to take possession of the one body. A murder, a trial, and the discovery (by hypnosis) of the two personalities in one make for an intriguing plot, but the scenes drag and much of the original power of the script is lost by a switch in the ending to the more usual movie formula.

Highlight of the picture is Phyllis Thaxter's excellent portrayal of the girl with the two personalities. Others in the cast are Hank Daniels, Horace McNally, and Edmund Gwenn.

GUEST WIFE (Jack Skirball Production, released through U.A.)—When Chris Price (Dick Foran) and Joe Parker (Don Ameche) were on the college football team, Chris ran interference while Joe carried the ball. And after graduation, it's the same story, with the "interference" taking the form of money orders dispatched to far-distant corners of the earth, where Joe was brilliantly carrying the ball as a newspaper man.

Claudette Colbert is the third principle, married to Chris and contriving a scheme whereby he will snatch the ball from Joe, for once in his life, and emerge the hero of the game. She succeeds, and Chris comes through triumphant.

OVER 21 (Columbia), from the Broadway comedy of the same name, brought to the screen with even more laughs. With Alexander (Wilson) Knox as Max Wharton, the 30-year-old editor who resigns from his newspaper to join the Army and get the serviceman's views on the post-war world; with Irene Dunne as his wife, Polly, Hollywood novelist turned ghost-writer for editorials promised her husband's old boss (Charles Coburn). She writes 'em and delivers 'em, that is . . . but signs 'em Max Wharton. And that's when complications begin to set in. Polly's good intentions seem gone very much wrong, when hubby suspects intrigue—but in terms of another man!

NIGHT IN PARADISE (Universal) reaches back to the year 580. B.C., and travels to Greece for a costume piece in Technicolor. Aesop (Turhan Bey) is a lad of no small fame as a sage in his native Samos—and that's no fable! When money-bags Croesus (Thomas Gomez), King of Lydia, theatens war on little Samos, all the boys in town get together and elect Aesop as their emissary to soft-soap the money-mad King into accepting wisdom instead of tribute, so that he wouldn't make no war on 'em. Croesus has a girl friend, Princess Delarai (Merle Oberon)—but not for long. Not only does the disguised, bearded Bey get by the bon mots he buzzes in the King's ear—but he manages to talk his way into the Princess' chamber, minus the false whiskers, and makes her realize what a smart, and handsome, boy he is.

It's a tongue-in-cheek extravaganza—and among the Greeks wearing their talents in technicolor are: Ray Collins, Gale Sondergaard, Pedro De Cordova and George Dolenz.

PRIDE OF THE MARINES (Warner Bros.) is the true story of Marine hero, Al Schmid, who lost his sight on Guadalcanal; and of the tender understanding of "the girl back home" whose love was able to light up a life destined for darkness.

While defending a salient against a Jap onslaught on Guadalcanal, Al Schmid (John Garfield) is left to operate his battle station alone when Johnny Rivers (Tony Caruso) is killed and Lee Diamond (Dane Clark) is wounded. This he manages to do, until a Jap sneaks into the barricade and hurls a grenade into the nest. Al is blinded.

His struggles against despair and bitterness, and how they were overcome by the courage and love of fiancee Ruth Hartley (Eleanor Parker) and gentle Red Cross Medical Corps worker Virginia Pfeiffer (Rosemary DeCamp), are told understandingly.

This sensitive and timely story doesn't belong entirely to Al Schmid and Ruth Hartley (now Mrs. Al Schmid). It could well be a portrayal of events in general that will confront many families when their wounded come back home.

PARIS UNDERGROUND (United Artists) adds Constance Bennett's name to the increasing list of women producers. Directed by Gregory Ratoff, and based on Etta Shiber's best-selling novel, the story goes back to 1940, the time of the German occupation of Paris.

Kitty de Mornay (Constance Bennett) is a seemingly scatter-brained American woman married to Frenchman Andre de Mornay (George Rigaud). Her constant companion and helper-outer is English Emmy Quayle (Gracie Fields). Unable to escape from Paris before the Germans arrive, they manage to evade arrest, but are burdened with an RAF flier who had been shot down, was in hiding, and trying to get back to England. When Kitty contacts the French underground and is able to get the flier safely back to his home base, she hits on the idea of helping other Allied men who are in hiding all over Paris. Before she and Emmy are caught, and imprisoned in a concentration camp, they manage the escape of 200 men from Occupied Paris.

Kurt Kreuger makes a fine Nazi menace—he has an authentic German accent, and is in turn gracious and gallant to the pretty Kitty. When her true identity is revealed, he gives her several good wallops across the jaw in true Nazi style.

For all that the plot misses doing full justice to the cause portrayed, the movie deserves special comment—if only by reason of the fact that it pitched Kurt Kreuger directly into a good 20th Century-Fox contract. And we say 'tis high time somebody launched this lad on the high road—he's ready and rating it!

HITCHHIKE TO HAPPINESS (Republic) marks return of Al Pearce, better known as radio's lovable jerk, Elmer Blurp of "I hope, I hope, I hope" fame—along with more airways personalities: canary Dale Evans, Arlene Frances (Radio Chatterbox) and Brad Taylor.

"Kippy" (Al Pearce) is a waiter in a Broadway restaurant patronized by theatre folks. Within him burns an ambition to be part of the drama scene; so he writes the great American play (he thinks!). Being of good na-

Don't Stop Saving Paper NOW!

IN PAPER SALVAGE DRIVE FOR DURATION—These Paper Troopers won't stop collecting waste paper till the last Jap surrenders. Huge quantities of waste paper are still required to make or pack the thousands of items our Armed Forces must have! Send every scrap of paper to war!

HELP WOUNDED VETERANS, TOO!—Many local organizations collecting waste paper are channeling part of their waste paper funds to buy extra comforts for wounded, sick and disabled veterans. Such things as radios, head sets, cameras, photographic supplies, small tool work sets and free phone calls home are always welcome, and provide another big reason for saving waste paper.

Separate and tie in bundles: 1. Wastebasket scraps. 2. Corrugated boxes, brown paper and bags. 3. Magazines and books. 4. Newspapers.

ture with a corny sense of humor, "Kippy" doesn't realize he's being taken on a theatrical buggy ride, when Sandy Hill (Wm. Frawley) and Dennis Colby (Irving Bacon) persuade the Hungarian producer, Prenska (Willy Trenck) to buy Kippy's brain-child. Prenska buys, all right . . . and then it's either Kippy's shirt or neck, until songstress Mary Kelly (Dale Evans) and not-yet-successful songwriter Joe Mitchell (Brad Taylor) put the show across.

Misunderstandings occur all over the place when it turns out that Mary Kelly really is famous singer Alice Chase . . . but difficulties are ironed out in true musical comedy style, with Joe's song writing talents emerging from under the proverbial bushel and true love conquering all.

THE GAY SENORITA (Columbia) is Jinx Falkenburg (now Mrs. Tex McCrary in real life) as the granddaughter of Senora Dona Maria Sandoval (Marguerita Sylva), leader of the Mexican people in a district known as Sandoval Lane. It has always been the Senora's wish that this section of the Mexican quarter be rebuilt with shops and cafes, gay music and dancing. However, J. J. Prentis (Thurston Hall), a wealthy contractor, plans to tear down the houses on the block and build a warehouse. He enlists the aid of his architect nephew, Phil (Jim Bannon) to see if he can get the ladies to sell. Instead, they get him to rebuild the block as they planned it. Amid the merriment that ensues at the fiesta in celebration of the event, Jim gets Jinx and the Senora gets her Sandoval Lane.

EASY TO LOOK AT (Universal)—A pleasant little film embracing the talents of Gloria Jean. Art student Judith Dawson (Gloria Jean) arrives in New York from her New England home seeking a job as a dress designer. When wealthy Bruce Tyler (Kirby Grant) hires her as a stock clerk in his organization, she works (on sketches) after hours with the nightwatchman (J. Edward Bromberg), who used to be a designer himself. Of course, her ideas are accepted by an important client (Eric Blore), instead of those of Tyler's head designer, Antonio (George Dolenz). The boss falls prey to the "designs" of his pretty little employee, and all the threads are tied together in one large love knot.

STEPPIN' IN SOCIETY (Republic) seems to infer the Blue Book . . . so conscientious Judge Avery Webster (Edward Everett Horton) would have said. But that was before he and hare-brained Mrs. Webster (Gladys George), seeking shelter from a storm, find refuge in that den of iniquity, the Jungle Club!

The Gang, a whimsical group of petty lawbreakers, decide the Judge is a big-shot racketeer and invite his guidance, as head of their group! He's willing . . . but wait! . . . only as a reform measure. (This they don't know). And from then on there is mad confusion.

The riotous antics will have you wondering which side will win. Enough to say that the Gang—Lola Forrest (Ruth Terry), Montana (Robert Livingston), Bow Tie (Jack LaRue), the Duchess (Lola Lane) and Jenny the Juke (Isabel Jewell)—are good guys . . . even when they take you for a ride!

Now She Shops "Cash And Carry" Without Painful Backache

Many sufferers relieve nagging backache quickly, once they discover that the real cause of their trouble may be tired kidneys.

The kidneys are Nature's chief way of taking the excess acids and waste out of the blood. They help most people pass about 3 pints a day.

When disorder of kidney function permits poisonous matter to remain in your blood, it may cause nagging backache, rheumatic pains, leg pains, loss of pep and energy, getting up nights, swelling, puffiness under the eyes, headaches and dizziness. Frequent or scanty passages with smarting and burning sometimes shows there is something wrong with your kidneys or bladder.

Don't wait! Ask your druggist for Doan's Pills, used successfully by millions for over 40 years. They give happy relief and will help the 15 miles of kidney tubes flush out poisonous waste from your blood. Get Doan's Pills.

stayed relaxed and waited for the inescapable day when he would be put into somthing like "It's a Date," and thousands of frenzied femme fans would scream, "Well, okay—let's get going!"

Another truth about Pidgeon is that he is one of the few true sophisticates of the film town—a true sophisticate being a fellow who doesn't go around knocking himself out to prove he is one. He's wise to all the worldly pleasures, and in favor of them, but prefers to reduce them to their simplest forms—good food, good music, good friends, good conversation. Lazy maybe, but a guy with a great energy for enjoyment, and one who sees no reason to spend his time trying, as some souls do, to find a counter-irritant for Life.

Like most big men, he is easily touched by small bits of beauty—eloquent wordage, patient emotions, elusive fragrances. One thing could really give him a feeling of futility, to have to work with a badly written script. Looking back for one of those brush-strokes which unconsciously color our characters, he remembers being bedded alongside a professorish Major in a military hospital, long before his acting days:

"I'd lied about my age to get into the Canadian army, and I was a pretty bitter kid when just as we were to sail for France, I was caught between two gun-carriages and almost crushed to death. I laid in the hospital for 17 months, until after the Armistice, and the Major was there almost as long."

"He used to recite Shakespeare out loud, great long passages of it. He'd read most of the old Bard's plays over and over, and found the lines so entrancing he couldn't remember a single plot. I think it was then I became sensitive to the power and movement of words."

The bit of real-life emotion he will never forget came to him when, as one of a party of celebrities, he was being escorted through the famous floating gardens of Acapulco:

"It was an experience 'out of this world,' anyhow. The gardens are eerily beautiful, the party was a distinguished one, the boats were decorated with colored lights and flowers. We leaned back on our cushions, replete with fine food and wine, listening to the guitars and songs of the musicians standing in the prows."

"Then I happened to look up and see an Indian family on the bank. The mother, a perfect Madonna of a woman, had one child at her breast and nine others grouped around her. Her giant of a husband stood in back of them and the setting sun gave their dark skins a kind of bronze glow. Their feet, and the man's hat, were gray with dust. They had trudged miles through the heat, all day probably, to stand stolidly on the bank, silently appreciating as much of our music and flowers and richness as they could get. I've never forgotten them."

A fragrance that moved him mightily came as he was standing, several years ago, on a busy Boston street corner:

"I stood there, disturbed by a sudden inexplainable nostalgia, until I realized it was caused by a whiff I had caught from a flower-woman's basket as she passed me by. I followed her to her stand and sure enough—Mayflowers, the kind that grew in pale pink blankets in the New Brunswick woods when I was a kid. I bought all she had left. Hours later, people were looking askance at a big lunk wandering around with a bunch of fading pink posies in his fist, but I still couldn't bear to throw them away. I finally got on a train and took them out to an aunt in the suburbs."

The lady who rules the Pidgeon-cote, his wife Ruth, fits well into his preference for quiet loveliness. He doesn't remember what particular quality first caught his heart, or moved him to the proposal stage:

"Just fell head over heels for the whole ensemble, I guess."

The whole ensemble still pleases him—although he "never would be crazy enough to tell a woman what she can or can't do." Mrs. Pidgeon doesn't like slacks either, which makes it fine. On the whole, however, feminine foibles tickle him, being "a part of the charming difference between the sexes."

Among friends, Pidge likes to tell dialect stories, enjoying them as much as the listeners. He is not, he says, "a belly laugher."

"I'd feel sorry for comedians if they had to depend on me as an audience. I only remember laughing out loud in a theater twice in my life—once at Mickey Rooney's cigar-smoking scene in one of the early Hardys, and recently, in 'Miracle of Morgan's Creek,' when Demarest missed a kick at Eddie Bracken, and fell on his pants-seat. If you want me to laugh, you'll have to make it pretty unsubtle."

He smoked a pipe, even before photogs discovered his profile was built for it, but likes cigarettes as well. He'll eat anything well-prepared, with the exception of liver and other "organs."

Some day, when he's "well-heeled enough," he will do "a dab of gardening, a dab of golfing, a dab of horseback riding—and a large portion of nothing."

Meantime, he has one hidden impulse:

"I'd love to get me one of those half-a-top limousines with chauffeur, lean back on the cushions, and be driven all over town."

His friends say that this impulse will remain in hiding, because he is one person in the Hollywood scene who hates swank!

THE BRAIN

to the infuriating. However, his friends and the erudite men with whom he has worked insist that George has been—and he may have used this excuse himself for more exotic reasons—misunderstood.

Basically George is not an actor. That he has great talent, a magnificent physique, superb diction, and complete mastery of any plot idea yet contained in a script, cannot be denied. But he has none of the "side" of the true harlequin.

For years, uncomfortable over the possibility that he might be asked for a "home" story, Mr. Sanders refused to say whether he was married or not. Finally, when the income tax deduction plan went into effect, he was forced to fill out a form making explicit his marital status. He admitted to a wife. When queried about her he said, with as much of a grin as a man of so sedate a mind can allow himself, that her eyes were medium blue, her hair was medium brown, she was medium tall, and she excelled in all the truly feminine virtues. He declined to go into further detail about his domestic affairs.

When he was talking to a group of actors on the Universal set of "Uncle Harry," one day, one of them said, "Since you shrink from being interviewed, you never allow a studio to make a home photographic sitting, you never attend first nights, nor frequent smart night clubs, and in general you hate the off-hour activity of most theatrical people, how come you're an actor instead of a professor of mathematics or astronomy in some university?"

"Because I like the things money will buy," said Mr. Sanders without hesitation. "University faculties are notoriously underpaid. As I have planned it, I imagine that the motion picture public will be thoroughly sick of my face in another five years or so, at which time I will retire. Then I will be able to devote myself to the things that really interest me."

Whereas other men carry around in their wallets snapshots of pin-up girls, papooses or pretty relatives, George Sanders carries around two excellent views of a small telescope he has made. His enthusiasm over this architectural triumph is roughly equal to the gratification of a Marine sergeant dated for six successive days with Ann Sheridan, Deanna Durbin, Peggy Ryan, Ann Blythe, June Haver and Helen of Troy.

Not only did George build his telescope, which is constructed on the same principle as the stupendous telescope being built on Mt. Palomar, but he accumulated the necessary material from friends. "Sometimes the friends were there at the time," is his description of his methods.

The following sentence is not going to mean much to you, but if you are to respect George Sanders to the fullest, and make an attempt to understand him, you will have to read it, to wit: "All the non-trivial zeros of the zeta function of s, a complex variable, lie on the line where sigma is ½ (sigma being the real part of s)."

This gem is known as the Riemann hypothesis, and it lies at the very foundation of Einstein's theory of relativity.

This is the sort of reading that engages George's spare moments. He studies mathematics hour upon hour, pencil and paper at hand. When his mind wearies with the complexity of such material, he relaxes with a few quick volumes of astronomy.

A man with an intellect like that is not likely to want to tell Sidney Skolsky—one of Hollywood's more humorous journalists—whether he sleeps in the top or the lower echelon of his pajamas. Nor will such a man remember his wife's birthday, or their wedding anniversary. Nor will he ever be known to romp home behind a bunch of begonias, bearing a beribboned box of candy. Because he is of British blood, and the British regard Christmas as the supreme holiday, he usually rushes around on the 23rd or 24th—having held frenzied consultation with his calendar—and buys some magnificent bit of jewelry. Last year he gave his wife a wrist watch set with rubies and diamonds.

In one respect, he himself is sentimental. Several months ago, a fan sent George an impressive gold cigarette case on the back of which were engraved a motto and the titles and ratings of eleven of his pictures. George carries this and shows it reluctantly to those who note that it is unusual and make inquiry.

The engraving reads: "Give full growth to that which still doth grow."

Intellectual as George Sanders' approach is to life in general, he has an impressive sense of humor. Whereas a good deal of his time is taken up in a cerebral, as contrasted to the more ordinary emotional, attempt to grow more familiar with the universe in which we live, there also is going on at the same time, a drama that might be called "George Sanders' Combat Against The Unscientific."

The first time he saw a man coming down a hillside on a pair of skis, George decided that the antic was not very bright, considering the equipment used. He went out to buy a pair of skis and was further horrified to learn the manner in which the flying bed slats are fitted: one stands as erect as possible, extending one's arms in the air. A ski the proper length should reach from floor to the tip of one's upraised fingers. George is well over six feet and he has generous arms, so his skis were longer than a stuttering deacon's lenten prayer.

However tall a man, his ankle bones are no more rugged than those of a moderately small man, but every added inch of seasoned ash (traditional ski wood) adds weight. George also busied himself with the problem of center of gravity, as presented by a human body boring holes in the air with a pair of horizontal pogo sticks, and decided that the odds against a tall guy sustaining multiple fractures were such that Lloyd's would have preferred a good bet against the thermometer registering zero in the Yukon in January.

His problem was clear: he desired to design a bit of equipment that would, with minimum length and weight, transport a man scientifically down a snow covered slope, with enjoyment if possible.

George has set up in the garage, behind his Beverly Hills house, a fairly comprehensive workshop. He and his older brother, Tom Conway, made sketches and perfected a new type of ski. The theory and design is still secret . . . and may remain so.

Came at last the day when the invention was ready to be tried. The Conway and the Sanders clan went to Yosemite, where a magnificent early fall of snow made a scientific test feasible. Tom Conway rubbed his hands together in the blue air and beamed at his brother. "Okay, George. Get set. Let's check results."

The crimson that flooded Inventor Sanders' face had little to do with the weather. "I—er—apparently I forgot to bring the device that fastens the ski to the boot."

So he rented a pair of skis and careened unscientifically down the chuckling hills.

Discussing it later with friends, he was persuaded by conservative old ski enthusiasts, that the whole point of the procedure was to use equipment of dazzling impracticality, so that the feat of keeping one's balance at all, represented a major triumph over gravity.

Another collision between George and natural forces is represented by the fact that, although he doesn't believe in them, he has a ghost in his house. "After having lived in Russia, in England, and in several other countries, I had to come to Hollywood to be plagued by the supernatural," he grinned in describing the phenomenon to a friend.

Seems that this is an impish, friendly spook with no bad habits ex-

REAL STORIES FROM REAL LIFE

Fifteen minutes of gripping radio drama is yours for the flick of a dial every evening, Monday through Friday, from 9:15 to 9:30 P.M., EWT, over WOR or your Mutual Network when "Real Stories from Real Life" bring to the air thrilling, true experiences of people just like you, your family, friends and neighbors.

cepting the gradual opening of firmly closed doors. George has never met this representative of the Department of Eternal Revenants, but the cook has. She hurried into the darkened dining room one night and caught the old boy stealthily opening the opposite door. She let out a shriek that opened all the rest of the doors in the house by natural means—everyone came running.

Several nights later the Sanders' were having a dinner party. As the dessert was being served, the huge, heavy dining room door slowly opened. "There's your ghost," laughed one of the guests.

The cook, who was serving, set down a dish emphatically. "No, I think not," she said. "This is somebody else, because it's too early in the evening for our regular."

In the evening, after one of those pleasantly haunted dinner parties, George sometimes plays the piano—by ear.

If he could have one wish granted, toute de suite, and no questions asked, he would wish to be more acute mentally, with the subsidiary wish that he wouldn't ever need sleep. In days gone by one of the most astounding facts about George was his predelection for slumber; he admitted to a weakness for 48 hours of Van Winkle without interruption. During the past two years, however, he has become acclimated to the somnolent California weather and gets along fairly well on seven to eight hours per night.

Aside from being distressed by an inability to work around the clock, he has one additional problem: his closest friends occasionally accuse him of rudeness, a rudeness not so much of what he does do, as of what he fails to do.

He passed a very important man on the street in Beverly Hills one day, and failed to speak. Well, it wasn't quite as blunt as that. George saw this man coming, decided that he couldn't think of anything particularly interesting or important to discuss with the gentleman rapidly bearing down from the south, so George stopped before a store window and stared fixedly.

He made only one mistake; the display into which he gazed happened to be that of a knit shop and the Very Important Man had a sneaking suspicion that George wasn't really interested in yarn.

When this man cited the incident brusquely to a friend of George's, and the friend carried the message, George undertook to explain. "In England, if a fellow sees a man whom he knows, but with whom he has no particular reason for talking, he simply dodges the issue by pretending not to see the chap. Now the other chap knows exactly what is going on, but nine times out of ten, he shares the sensation of there being a temporary vacuum between them, so he, too, pretends to be fascinated by something in the opposite direction from his friend. Now, in America, if you see a man you know, you have to hail him like a long lost brother and carry on some sort of stupid conversation, even if you have had dinner with him the night before, and said everything to one another at that time that you will want to say for a year. If you try the window scheme, you're going to hurt someone's feelings. So lately I've made it a practice to go around, grinning like an idiot, and waving madly at everyone I know."

THIS IS MYSELF—ESTHER WILLIAMS

I HATE

Hooks and eyes; getting up early—but once I'm up, I love it! Going to bed—but once there it's so wonderful I can't think why I didn't want to go!

I ENJOY

Inventing one-dish dinners;

Edgar Allan Poe; Rupert Brooke . . . I think I enjoy these two because I know about their lives—as I read their stories or poems I could appreciate what life had done to them up to the time they wrote a particular thing; how they felt when they began to write, how they developed, why a certain Poe tale is so morbid or a certain piece of Brooke poetry so moving. I feel the same way about composers. How can you enjoy a man's music unless you know about the man? Bach, Beethoven, Gershwin, Chopin, Irving Berlin—their music is much more interesting when you've read about their lives.

Big family reunions, holiday gatherings when we're all together.

Traveling.

I'M HAPPY

That the studio is letting me try new things. In "Early To Wed," instead of spectacular swim scenes, I'm doing song and dance numbers. One song is Portuguese.

I DON'T WANT

To live over any day of my life. My mother says I have a pull-to-the-future complex. I'm so interested in what may happen next that I couldn't waste time living over anything that's already happened.

I'M FOND OF

Inglewood, California—where I was born;

All children;

Going to auctions, picking up odd items at junky antique shops;

Fixing up houses—not decorating them, but making a home of a house.

SOME DAY

I'd like to write a book to help children learn to swim. It should be humorous so they'd enjoy reading it, and have lots of pictures so they'll see how simple swimming is, and what fun!

MY FIRST CRUSH

Was a boy in the tenth grade. He's now in the Air Force and I haven't seen him for years. He said only about thirteen words to me in all, but once he cut in on one of my dances and I nearly fainted.

I LIKE

Men who can sing. Sinatra can still "send me."

California houses set on hills; cute, inexpensive ones, bright with flowers.

I ADMIRE

George Sidney, who directed "Bathing Beauty." He's only 28, but I think he's a genius.

Joan Crawford, Clark Gable, Jimmy Stewart—stars who have done good jobs; and young stars like June Allyson who have such tremendous promise.

I HOPE

To stay young in mind, like my mother;

To go on a USO tour overseas, visiting hospitals and boys who sit in the rubble of bombed cities with nothing to do;

To be a good actress some day;

To marry and have a big family.

I'M STILL SURPRISED

To find I'm on the screen. I didn't think I could ever act, but they're giving me really good roles and I'm eager to do a good job.

I'LL NEVER FORGET

The dress I designed for my graduation from grammar school—peach organdy with ruffles. It was a great success, but I wasn't. I recited "Christ of the Andes," and was carried away with the description of how they gathered up and carried in the materials to build the Christ. But when they were ready to build it—I couldn't remember another thing!

MY MOST WONDERFUL DAY

Was at the Women's National Swimming Meet in Des Moines in 1939, when I won all my races and my team won the championship. My cup was full when they told us we could compete in the Olympic Games in Finland the next summer. (The war prevented the Games.) There may be top moments in a picture career, like winning an Oscar, but that would be for myself. When you're swimming, you do it for the love of it and for your team.

MY IDEA OF RECREATION

Is to go to the desert, get up early, take a brisk ride and watch the sun come up; then have a wonderful breakfast, lie in the sun by a pool and bake the kinks out, just falling into the pool when I'm too hot; talking to people who interest me but who can be silent for long spaces without feeling uncomfortable; have a light salad for lunch, play tennis and sun some more. In the evening, dine outdoors on a patio with people I enjoy, go to a movie and see an old movie and a brand new one; then go to bed around ten-thirty and simply melt into the sheets.

MY LIFE

Has been a sort of stairway. When the time comes for me to take the next step. I'm ready to take it. There's always that urge to go forward and up.

leaves your hair so lustrous, yet so easy to manage!

Only Drene Shampoo with Hair Conditioning action gives you this wonderful combination of beauty benefits! ✓ Extra lustre . . . up to 33% more sheen than with any kind of soap or soap shampoo! Because all soaps leave a film on hair which dulls lustre, robs your hair of glamour! Drene leaves no dulling film, brings out all the lovely gleam. ✓ Such manageable hair . . . easy to comb into smooth, shining neatness, right after shampooing . . . due to the fact that the new improved Drene has a wonderful hair conditioning action. ✓ Complete removal of unsightly dandruff, the very first time you use this wonderful improved shampoo. So insist on Drene with Hair Conditioning action, or ask your beauty shop to use it!

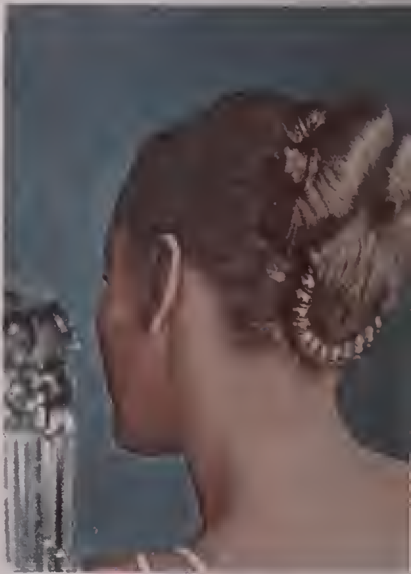
Jewels in your Hair

for After-Dark Glamour

Dramatize the beauty of your hair, focus attention on your smart hair-do! For evening occasions, wear jewels in your hair! Lisa Fonssagrives . . . glamorous New York fashion model, Cover Girl and "Drene Girl" . . . shows you, on this page, three smart hair-dos dramatized with jewels!

This turquoise tiara certainly calls attention to Lisa's shining topknot of puffs! A twisted double strand of pearls or a string of large gold beads would also look lovely encircling the puffs! But you'll not get the maximum combination of lustre and manageability from your shampoos unless you use Dren Shampoo with Hair Conditioning action, as Lisa always does!

A gold bracelet was used by Lisa for this stunning back arrangement. Ends of hair are drawn through bracelet, then pulled upward. That extra shining-smooth look is due to Drene Shampoo with Hair Conditioning action.



Wear large combs set with brilliant stones or pearls, on either side of this double-puff topknot arrangement! But first, wash your hair in Drene Shampoo with Hair Conditioning action. No other shampoo leaves hair so lustrous, yet so easy to manage!

To New Members of "America's Biggest Bargain Book Club"

Your Choice of TWO Of These GREAT BOOKS

This extraordinary offer to new members is the greatest in the entire history of "America's Biggest Bargain Book Club"! YOURS ABSOLUTELY FREE — any one of FOUR sensational modern best-sellers shown at the top of this page . . . and, in addition, any one of FOUR time-tested masterpieces shown at right! TWO FREE BOOKS—Best of the Old and Best of the New—both fine library volumes you'll be eager to read and to own! Choose YOUR two books NOW!

Any One of These Great Best-Sellers

EARTH AND HIGH HEAVEN

By Gwethalyn Graham

THE STORY THEY SAID WAS "DYNAMITE!" Can Love and Religion mix without exploding? If your love was in danger of being wrecked by prejudice, intolerance and pride—what decision would you make?

In this great new best-seller, Erica and Marc give you their answers! And no matter what your faith, or which side you take—his or hers—you will race through this daring novel to the very last page!

STRANGE WOMAN

By Ben Ames Williams

ANGEL OR DEVIL—WHICH WAS SHE? To the New England world, Jenny Hager was a charming, righteous woman. But to the eight men who really knew her—father, husband, sons, lovers—this Maine Cleopatra was a shameless, passionate she-devil.

She caused her father to drown himself in rum—gave one husband new zest for life—despite his seventy years! Nearly 500,000 readers have gasped at this daring story of an utterly amazing character!

The RAZOR'S EDGE

By W. Somerset Maugham

NEITHER WEALTH NOR LOVE COULD LURE HIM! The woman in Larry Darrell's life did everything to bring him happiness. Yet he turned down love, riches, career. But what was he seeking? And why did he become so fascinated by drunken Sophie, plaything of Paris?

Over 1,000,000 copies published! You will thrill to this worldly-wise novel—by the master story-teller who gave you "Rain," "Of Human Bondage," "The Moon and Sixpence."

HUNGRY HILL

By Daphne du Maurier

HER PLAYTHINGS WERE . . . MONEY AND MEN! Fanny-Rosa was only 17—yet her green eyes flashed a challenge no man could resist! Impish, teasing, devil-may-care, she tossed men's fortunes to the winds; robbed them of faith in women!

Here is a gorgeous, turbulent, swift-moving book! Daphne du Maurier, who gave you REBECCA, has surpassed herself in this story of "wild love and wilder killings"!

AND

Also One of These Great Masterpieces

TALES FROM THE DECAMERON

By Boccaccio

TEEMING WITH RIOTOUS LIFE AND LAUGHTER! These roistering tales are as fresh and earthy as the day they were written over six centuries ago. They teem with life, loud laughter, riotous entertainment—of men in love and women who pretend they are, of sinning "saints" and saintly sinners!

Each story is told with all the daring skill that marks Boccaccio as one of the most robust and gleeful taletellers in all literature!

WAR AND PEACE

By Tolstoy

DESIGNED TO BE READ AS A MODERN NOVEL. The book the world has called "the greatest novel ever written!" Here is love at its most passionate, war at its most savage, man in his noblest and basest moments, woman at her tenderest.

Through War and Peace walks every type of humanity, high and low, during one of history's epic hours—the invasion of Russia by Napoleon. Reading this book is a fascinating, life-time experience!

THE DECLINE AND FALL OF THE ROMAN EMPIRE

By Edward Gibbon

THE GREATEST BOOK ABOUT HISTORY'S GREATEST ERA. Great history; great literature!—and designed for modern reading. To read, in these turbulent times, of the fall of Rome is to open your eyes. Because history repeats itself, and the fate of former world conquerors is a warning today. Because again the barbarians are marching. And because this masterpiece best tells, for all time, what happens to a civilization grown fat and foolish and fascist-minded!

SHORT STORIES OF DeMAUPASSANT

50 TALES OF LOVE AND PASSION! Contains over 50 tales of love, hate, intrigue, passion and madness—all complete and unexpurgated, the frankest stories of their kind ever written!

Read, in Ball-of-Fat, of the buxom girl of easy virtue—and what she did! Read Love, Mademoiselle Fifi, Story of a Farm Girl, Bed No. 29—and all the best works that have made De Maupassant "father of the modern short story."

WHICH 2 DO YOU WANT FREE?

NOW is the most opportune moment of all to begin your membership in the Book League of America! Because NOW—New Members are entitled to a FREE COPY of any one of FOUR widely acclaimed best-sellers (at top of page), and at the same time, ALSO A FREE COPY of any one of FOUR recognized world masterpieces (shown directly above). TWO BOOKS FREE—just for joining "America's Biggest Bargain Book Club"!

The Best of the New—AND of the Old

Each month ONE of the Book League's selections is a modern best-seller by a famous author like John Steinbeck, Somerset Maugham, Ernest Hemingway, Ben Ames Williams, or Ilka Chase—a book selling for $2.50 and up in the publisher's edition.

The OTHER book is a masterpiece of immortal literature. These volumes of the world's classics are uniformly bound in durable cloth. They grow into a handsome, lifetime matched library. The great authors in this series include Shakespeare, Poe, Oscar Wilde, etc. (Since they are great classics which you will always cherish in your lifetime library you may prefer the beautiful DeLuxe Edition bound in simulated leather with silver stamping. Just take your choice.)

This is the ONLY club that builds for you a library containing the best of the new best-sellers AND the best of the older masterpieces! The TWO books sent you each month are valued at $3.50 to $4 in the publisher's edition. But you can get BOTH for only $1.39!

5-DAY TRIAL—No Obligation

The greatest star of the screen!

GINGER

How's your tan? Summer working out nicely? We have a suggestion to top it off—a "Week-end At The Waldorf".

★ ★ ★ ★

Forsake the vales and hills, the rills and lakes. Try the Great Indoors. Pleasure guaranteed; good hunting.

Of course the hunting is the Boy-Chases-Girl variety, but that's good too. Especially when it's Walter Pidgeon after Ginger Rogers and Van Johnson after Lana Turner.

★ ★ ★ ★

Ginger plays Irene Malvern, the movie star. Walter plays Chip Collyer, the war correspondent. Lana plays Bunny Smith, the hotel stenog. And Van plays Captain Hollis, who's in a bad way.

VAN

Anything can happen in a big hotel. Well, anything does happen. And it all happens adroitly, amusingly, excitingly.

★ ★ ★ ★

It's a picture charged with intrigue. It excites. It has hearty laughter. There's also music provided by Xavier Cugat. We like all of it.

★ ★ ★ ★

You may go so far as to think "Week-end At The Waldorf" is the best picture of the year. We know it's first class.

Along with those other big stars you meet Edward Arnold, who plays a tycoon; Phyllis Thaxter, a worried bride; Keenan Wynn, a cub reporter; Robert Benchley, a columnist; Leon Ames, a father; Lina Romay, a hot tamale; Samuel Hinds, an oil magnate.

It's a big "Week-end". Thank Robert Z. Leonard, the director. Thank Sam and Bella Spewack, screen playwrights, who took an idea from a play by Vicki Baum. Thank Guy Bolton who made the adaptation. Thank Arthur Hornblow, Jr. who produced it all.

★ ★ ★ ★

—Leo

INSIDE HOLLYWOOD

By FREDDA DUDLEY

Mrs. Edward G. Robinson, Constance Collier and Ethel Barrymore. Miss B. has signed a 4-yr. contract with Vanguard Films. First pic scheduled is mystery "Some Must Watch" (UA release).

SCORE TWO:

Loretta Young, one of the great ladies of Hollywood, is now the mother of two sons: Christopher, born August 1, 1944, and Peter, born July 15, 1945. Loretta and her husband, Colonel Thomas Lewis, plan to have six children—a scheme that delights 9-year-old Judy, Loretta's adopted daughter.

BALL & CHAIN OF CIRCUMSTANCE:

Bob Hutton felt very much like a prisoner of coincidence on the day of the announcement of his "friendly" separation from his wife. The news was in the morning papers; by noon, a widely read and ordinarily accurate national magazine was on the stands containing a story about the blissful Hutton homelife—this compounded the confusion and nearly rang the bell off Bob's telephone. Matters certainly weren't helped materially when Bob had to insist again and again that the newspapers were correct—he was a blitzed benedict. The next thing that occurred was the topper: having been 4F since his first physical, Bob was summoned, regardless of previous record, for induction. Another physical was almost more than the exhausted Mr. Hutton could negotiate.

Diana Lynn and Loren Tindall at the Mocambo. She was piano accompanist—at the age of ten!

HOLLYWOOD HEARTBREAK:

After a foggy morning, the lackadaisical California summer sun came out to glint softly on the hills. A company from Universal was working on THE ROYAL MOUNTED RIDES AGAIN; it was the second day of shooting. The scene being recorded showed Addison Randall, called Jack by his friends, whipping toward the camera at breakneck speed. The first take was not satisfactory. As Jack Randall spurred his horse to a gallop, a brisk breeze caught his hat and twirled it away; Jack leaped toward the hat, lost a stirrup, and was snapped against a tree. He died instantly.

In any circumstance, this would have been a tragic event; when viewed with the realization that Mr. Randall and Barbara Bennett had been married in June, 1941 (after her divorce from Morton Downey became final) in Mexico, then had been married again in February of 1942 because "we wanted to be sure our marriage at Ensenada was legal," it assumes shattering poignancy. The deepest sympathy of everyone in Hollywood went out to stricken Barbara Bennett Randall.

FOUR LANES:

Have you, on occasion, wondered what has ever become of the Lane Sisters, Lola, Priscilla, Rosemary and Leota? Well, Lola has just finished "Deadline At Dawn" at RKO—her first picture in several years. Priscilla is the contented wife of Captain Joseph Howard, Army Air Forces, and is living in Clovis, New Mexico. Rosemary, the wife of Buddy Westmore, will be a mother by the time you read this. Leota is a sergeant in the WAC and is stationed at Colorado Springs. And Gail Paige, who was a Lane sister in the Warner series ("Four Daughters," "Four Mothers," etc.) is the wife of Count de Soliel and the mother of two children. She is very active in radio.

PROPHET WITHOUT HONOR:

The Ray Millands have a gem of a cook, a woman who is intelligent, charming, and capable. In the course of her normal duties around the house she has seen all the famous persons who make up the coterie of Milland friends; at no time has she been impressed.

Recently, however, she decided to brush up on her fancy cooking so enrolled in a widely praised night course. After her first evening of instruction she returned to the Milland home, breathless with impressive news. "You'll never guess whom I saw," she announced. "Right in my class. Learning to cook right along with the rest of us! JOAN BLONDELL."

Brenda Marshall (with husband Lt. Bill Holden) stars in W. Wilder's "You'll Remember Me."

FAN MAN:

Peggy Ann Garner came carolling into the 20th Century-Fox Commissary, hugging a menu. Proudly she displayed her trophy to friends and explained: she had caught sight of Captain Ronald Reagan—on the Fox lot on business—and had approached him in the matter of an autograph. "I was very careful not to be bold nor forward," she confided. "I said, 'Excuse me please, Captain Reagan. I'm Peggy Ann Garner—I work here at the studio. Would it be possible for you to sign my menu?' "

Captain Reagan had obliged by writing, "To Peggy Ann Garner, who gave a terrific performance in 'A Tree Grows In Brooklyn,'—Ronald Reagan."

Incidentally, Peggy Ann will become a big sister in December.

Rum & Brandy FRUIT CAKE

KING ARTHUR:

Arthur, longtime associate of Mickey Rooney, was king for a day recently, and passed out cigars in honor of his happiness. As you know, Mickey Rooney and his wife, the former Betty Jane Rase of Birmingham, became parents of a seven-pound, six-ounce son, to be christened Joe Yule, III. Said Arthur, "Mrs. Rooney and the nipper are coming back to Hollywood soon. Then I'll have my hands full with Young Mickey."

TEALICIOUS:

Glenn Ford, Eleanor Powell Ford, and young Peter Ford now have their first Hollywood home. The house is not new and the furniture is conglomerate, but the Fords feel munificent enough to be Cadillacs anyway. Recently they entertained their first dinner guests and one item on the menu is worth copying: The night before the dinner, Ellie made iced tea, placed it in the refrigerator after having inserted a huge bunch of cleaned mint leaves in the liquid. Just before serving time, she removed the mint, filled very tall glasses half full of the mint-flavored tea, then filled the glass with chilled sparkling water. This brought forth guest raves.

Dana Andrews, Bill Eythe, Mary Anderson. Dana's been in pics since '39—did you know?

RAGE:

If you were working at present as a secretary, messenger girl, or starlet in one of the studios, you would be wearing a long braid, extending to your waistline, down the middle of your back. This pigtail hairdo is achieved by wearing a Lily Dache' net drawn snugly over your own back hair; a thick plait is constructed of yarn in red, yellow, green, black, brown, or whatever color matches your outfit, and fastened inside the net to go schoolgirling down your spine. Little mad, but pretty.

GOOD NEIGHBOR:

The picture "Meet Me In St. Louis" was based on the experiences of author Sally Benson during her childhood. When Judy Garland was selected to star in the play, Hugh Martin and Ralph Blaine wrote the hit song, "The Boy Next Door."

Recently, Judy received a letter from a G.I. in the South Pacific, assuring her that he had actually lived next door to the Benson house in St. Louis, hence he was the person to whom she must be singing. The letter was couched in the elaborately gallant phrases considered proper in the 1900's. "If you will not deem it too bold, may I venture to beg of you the gift of a daguerreotype. Your obedient servant . . ."

The boy next door got his daguerreotype by (anachronistically) air mail.

HANGOUT:

The latest rendezvous for those really in the know in the picture colony is the Madelon, a restaurant distinguished by excellent food at moderate prices in an atmospheric room. In six or eight months it will have been spoiled; people will be standing in line to get in, and the picture crowd will have gone on to some newer hideaway, but right now it is fun. The boothes are small, the tables are placed close together; at one end of the room there is a minute dance square, and on a slightly raised platform there are three world-weary musicians. There is a singer who emerges from time to time, to confide intensely sentimental songs, in French, to a mike. In order for a patron to adjourn to the Little Boys' or the Little Girls', one must cross this dance square—avoiding, if possible, the mike lines and the lady singing. Also one must dodge waiters coming from the opposite direction with loaded trays. In the Madelon it is nothing at all to hear the singer rendering a torchy

Movieland's New Picture Guide

LOVE LETTERS (Hal Wallis, Para. release)—Tender love story of two passionately idealistic people, incorporating a murder in what's a psychological suspense drama . . . the best since Rebecca.

Jennifer Jones' performance as Victoria Morland (the girl shocked into losing her memory and fighting to regain it so that she can come back into the world as a complete person) transcends anything she's ever done—and this reviewer won't except "Bernadette." Joseph Cotten—as the serious, poetic Alan Quinton who wrote the letters that brought love, hate, murder and fear into the lives of five people—turns in his usual polished, restrained, superior job of acting. And excellent, too, are Cecil Kellaway, Ann Richards, Gladys Cooper and Anita Louise.

STATE FAIR (20th Century-Fox)—Phil Strong's novel of the same name, made into a Technicolor-musical, with Hammerstein lyrics for Rodgers melodies crooned by Dick Haymes. The setting: rural Iowa. The story: farm family spends four days at the Fair. And in addition to Haymes, it gives Jeanne Craine, Dana Andrews and Vivian Blaine, supported by Charles Winniger, Fay Bainter, Frank McHugh and Donald Meek.

OUR VINES HAVE TENDER GRAPES (M-G-M)—Based on the novel by George Victor Martin, and starring Margaret O'Brien. A tender story of good and simple people living in harmony in a Norwegian farm community, in Wisconsin.

Edward G. Robinson gives a heartwarming performance as the farmer, who dreams of having a new barn someday. Jackie "Butch" Jenkins, still classifying as cute little tough guy, with freckles; also James Craig, Frances Gifford, Agnes Moorehead, Morris Carnovsky and Sara Haden—the "good people" who're kind to their neighbors.

SPANISH MAIN (RKO)—A Technicolorful pirate plot, with adventures based on historical fact. Laurent Van Horn (Paul Heinreid) is a Dutch Merchant captain, who starts out with the idea of colonizing the New World but is forced to become a pirate in order to survive. Highlight of the whole courage 'n power drama is the tempestuous romance between the captain and the noble Spanish lady (Maureen O'Hara), whom he captures and weds—against her will.

ONCE UPON A DREAM (Universal)—There was a young girl (Susanna Foster) who wanted to be a singer, but couldn't get any farther than slinging hash in Johnny's Diner. David Bruce is Johnny, Franchot Tone is a stage producer name of Paul Renaud; Jacqueline DeWitt, alias Blossom Drake, his former wife; and Louise Allbritton, occupation: Secretary.

AND THEN THERE WERE NONE (20th Century-Fox) — Agatha Christie's thriller-chiller ("Ten Little Indians") transferred smoothly from Broadway. Entertaining whodunit about an oddly assorted collection of guests invited by an unknown—and unseen—host to spend a week-end on a mysterious island off the coast of England. The guests and "other members of the cast:" Barry Fitzgerald, Walter Huston, Louis Hayward, Roland Young, June Duprez, C. Aubrey Smith, Judith Anderson, Mischa Auer, Richard Haydn and Queenie Leonard.

I LOVE A BANDLEADER (Columbia)—Featuring Phil Harris as the leader of the band, this is a musical with a touch of amnesia. The necessary thread of story is set in the Club Monterey and involves Phil Harris as the man who forgot his past (when he was a scenic painter) by becoming a baton wielder. Aiding in the search for his true identity are Eddie "Rochester" Anderson, Leslie Brooks and Walter Catlett.

"CAPTAIN KIDD" (Benedict Bogeaus, released by U.A.), with Charles Laughton in the title role. A "period" story happening just at the turn of the 18th century. Colorful, romantic, daring-deed adventure stuff, complete with Kidd's buried treasure, plundered galleons, and a plot that unites Randolph Scott and Barbara Britton in the hero-heroine roles.

AT WARNERS:

A STOLEN LIFE, the Bette Davis produced and starred story about twins in love with the same man, is now in its fourth month, keeping very busy Glenn Ford, Walter Brennan, Charlie Ruggles, Dane Clark, Peggy Knudsen, Esther Dale, Mary Servoss and Joan Winfield.

CONFIDENTIAL AGENT is the Charles Boyer, Lauren Bacall picture with Katina Paxinou, Peter Lorre, Dan Seymour, Victor Francen and Lynne Baggett.

NIGHT AND DAY, in Technicolor, is the musical in which Cary Grant sings, you lucky people. With him in the chorus are Alexis Smith, Jane Wyman, Monty Woolley, Henry Stephenson, Donald Woods, Selena Royle, Virginia Sale and Jane Harker.

AT PARAMOUNT:

THE TROUBLE WITH WOMEN is a picture that has run into plenty of trouble. Planned as a typically suave comedy of manners, the type of thing that Ray Milland does so well, the script ran into trouble because Teresa Wright—a superb dramatic actress—has had no previous comedy experience. She gave her all, but director Sidney Lanfield and other studio officials decided to rewrite much of the script. Brian Donlevy is the third arm of the triangle, turning in his usual brilliant performance.

CALCUTTA is the new Alan Ladd adventure with Gail Russell, William Bendix, June Duprez, Edith King, Lowell Gilmore, and John Whitney. This is the story of two buddies, Alan and Bill, who discover, when a pal is murdered, that Gail Russell is involved in a jewel smuggling ring, and all the time they had thought she was such a nice girl. This is an excitement-maker.

TO EACH HIS OWN (a bad title, incidentally) is a very unusual motion picture; it deals with the reunion of a mother and her son in London, but the background is such that the incident has high dramatic value. Olivia de Havilland plays the role of an American woman executive during the blitz. John Lund, Mary Anderson, Philip Terry, Bill Goodwin, and Dick Winslow are also bumping into each other in the blackout.

THE BRIDE WORE BOOTS will be covered more thoroughly in next month's MOVIELAND because this month it has been shooting only one day as we go to press. Barbara Stanwyck, Robert Cummings, Diana Lynn, and Patric Knowles make up a very juicy cast.

AT 20TH CENTURY-FOX:

THE ENCHANTED VOYAGE, in Technicolor, is the picture shot mainly in New Orleans starring John Payne, June Haver, Charlotte Greenwood, Connie Marshall, brilliant Charlie Russell, Clem Bevans, John Ireland and Irving Bacon.

LEAVE HER TO HEAVEN, also in Technicolor, is the cinematic version of Ben Ames Williams' great book about a woman's jealousy so great that it reached back from the grave to be revenged. Cornel Wilde is the husband, Gene Tierney the wife, Jeanne Crain her sister, and others in the incandescent cast are Vincent Price (as the D.A.), Ray Collins (the father), Ruth Nelson (the mother) and Darryl Hickman as the crippled younger brother of Cornel.

SMOKY is in its first week of production with Fred MacMurray, Anne Baxter, Burl Ives, Esther Dale, Brad Russell, and Jay Farrol MacDonald.

AT UNITED ARTISTS:

DUEL IN THE SUN in Technicolor is being filmed on a set so closed that even the rumors have to seep out under the auspices of osmosis. One of the best rumors to date is that the love scenes between Gregory Peck as the bad, bad bandit and Jennifer Jones are so torrid that the Hays office plans to screen them in a cold

Blair has a flair—for changes! Here's the Janet that once was. Watch for our heroine's new hair shade in Columbia's "Tars and Spars".

DYEING with DELIGHT

By SHIRLEY COOK

Right about face is turn-about for tresses. Take a dark gold tint for a smooth topknot and you get a delightfully different Janet.

IF you're not in harmony with your hair, as is, your dissatisfaction might be due to a question of color. If you were in movieland, where glamor grows, you'd simply change to a happier hue. As you've probably noticed, Columbia's lovely star Janet Blair changes her hair shade frequently. Many of the most attractive girls among the film folk do!

But if you've ever considered the complexities that might make a color change complicated, you are probably curbing those innermost impulses.

In one sense of the word, anything that changes the color of your hair might be called a dye. We, however, prefer to classify hair colorings as permanent or temporary and break them down into types in these categories.

Quick but temporary color for the tiniest tint can be had by means of prepared rinses or special shampoos. These are made of pure vegetable coloring and are as easy to use as they are effective. The after-shampoo rinses, particularly, come in many stunning shades. According to your wishes, they can add warmer highlights, tone down too-bright or brassy effects—or even help to blend gray streaks. Such temporary treatments must be renewed with each shampoo.

There are also permanent vegetable colorings which stain the hair to any of a number of desired shades.

Quite a different proposition is the coal-tar derivative or amine type of hair coloring. Such dyes penetrate the hair and permanently stain the inside of each shaft. While it is true that they are among the most aesthetically pleasing because of their superior range of shades and natural appearance, it is also true that they must be used with care. Here's why.

These dyes are, to the certain minority who are allergic to them, extremely irritating. It is absolutely necessary that a "patch" test be given before every single application. The best manufacturers want you to have this protection. The Federal Government, while admitting the beautiful color results of amine dyes, insists upon it. You won't have to worry about whether a hair coloring belongs to this particular group. All such dyes are required to carry a standard "Caution" warning regarding the "patch" test. This is what it consists of:

The test area of skin should be about an inch square. It is generally taken behind the ear and close to the scalp. This is washed with soap and water, rinsed and dryed. The dye solution is swabbed on this clean patch of skin and allowed to remain for 24, or preferably 48, hours. If no redness or irritation is apparent on this small section of skin after the required time has elapsed, the "patch" test can be considered negative. If there is any resulting irritation whatsoever, the dye should not be applied to the hair.

As we told you, this test is not a single-time, conclusive one. To be absolutely safe, you must be absolutely sure that a negative "patch" test result is obtained before each and every tinting and retouching. To ignore the "Caution" label on a hair dye might result in severe external or internal irritations.

We find still another kind of lasting or "permanent" hair coloring—the metallic salts group. Such dyes generally act slowly, but after several applications, they leave a thin deposit on the hair which changes its color. They do not permit a wide choice of shade and they do coat the outside of the hair which coarsens its texture somewhat. These dyes must be used strictly according to directions, of course, but a "patch" test before application is not necessary.

No matter what you apply, or have applied, to bring about a permanent change in the color of your hair, remember that it is a dye. There are not only different types, but different combinations of these types. They must all be used with care. There is always a possibility of resulting irritation due to the chemical reaction of each individual to any given substance or combination of substances.

Bleaches, by themselves, bring about a changed effect by removing color. Usually, they are a mixture of peroxide and ammonia. In some cases, they may make the hair seem redder as well as more blonde. This is because there is normally a large amount of red pigment present in the hair of some individuals and this becomes more noticeable when the hair is lightened. A too-red or too-harsh shade can often be overcome by choosing a corrective shade of after-shampoo hair rinse or by using a mild dye solution in combination with the bleach.

There are several things to keep in mind when you make up your mind to dye—

Dyed or bleached hair need not look artificial—not if the tint is correctly applied and not if the shade blends with your natural coloring. Be faithful, though, in having the roots touched up as often as the normal rate of growth demands. This will be every three to five weeks. Between touch-ups, you can cover up the new growth at the roots with a special pencil. These crayon-like sticks come in a variety of hair shades and perform a fine service of temporary touch-up.

Dyeing or bleaching your hair is often apt to be drying. To help counteract this condition, take to frequent hot oil treatments. When you use such a lubricant, part the hair, from back to front, in half-inch sections. As you make each part, rub the length of it with cotton saturated in oil. After the entire scalp has been covered with conditioner wrap the head in steaming towels for ten or fifteen minutes. Be generous daily with pomade, brilliantine or one of the new lanolin-rich greaseless hair dressings, particularly on the ends which are more porous and usually more brittle. Have one (or preferably two) test curls made before each permanent. Dyed and bleached hair can be beautifully waved when it is given the proper attention.

You may feel that dyeing your hair would result in a lovelier and more exciting you. Well so it might! Should you wish to cover up gray streaks or put life and liveliness into faded drab hair, no one need ever know. On the other hand, a new and obviously different hair shade is completely up to you, too. The time has long passed when people attached any social significance to artificially tinted tresses. Hair dyes, like lipsticks, are really just color accents to natural beauty!

WHO'S NEW ...KURT KREUGER

Tall, slim, fair and impeccably dressed—Kurt Kreuger sat in the back row of Inglewood's preview theater nervously watching "Paris Underground" unreel on the screen. Next to him was his pretty girl guest; farther along the row were Constance Bennett, star and producer of the film, with her representative; nearby, sat Gracie Fields and George Rigaud, both prominent in the cast, with their guests.

The audience laughed when they were supposed to laugh; and sat tensely on the edges of their seats, holding their combined breaths and exhaling in relief at the proper moments—most gratifyingly. They liked the picture, they liked the whole cast and they showed it. But most of all—they liked Kurt Kreuger. Their approval was so overwhelmingly evident that the young actor was embarrassed. Almost before the lights came on, Kurt rose, turning his back on the screen and shading his face with his cast sheets.

"Come on, let's run!" he whispered.

By ALICE L. TILDESLEY

THIS IS MYSELF

By FRANK SINATRA

MY VERY FIRST MEMORY

Is the ocean, wild and restless, and my mother leaning over me, trying to persuade me to go in. . . . I was about three and a half. We were on the beach, with sand all around us. The waves leaping high terrified me. I kept crying: "No! No!" but my mother laughed. I can still feel that cold fright that choked me when she ducked me under the water.

UNTIL I WAS NINE

That underlying fear of water followed me. By that time I was going with other boys who had fun in the ocean. I felt I must do what they did. I still hated going in, but I went. The dread was with me for weeks, but I wouldn't let anyone know.

I'LL NEVER FORGET

The day I was free of that fear. I could swim and dive and play in water like the other kids. It was wonderful.

I THINK

That experience gave me a taste for overcoming obstacles. I can not bear to let anything lick me. If it's hard—if I dread it—I can't rest until I've made myself go through with it.

I LIKE

Candles on dinner tables, Coney Island, driftwood fires, books bound in limp leather, the bobby sox set, music with my meals, music any time and any place.

I WISH I KNEW

How to read music;

How to play the piano. I could have had lessons when I was a kid, but I was too impatient. "Heck, sit on a piano stool for an hour every day? Nothing doing!" I had time to study then, but I wouldn't. I could kick myself when I remember.

MY FIRST AMBITION

Was to be an engineer; a civil engineer or an electrical engineer, I wasn't sure which. My dad wanted me to study engineering, so perhaps I took it for granted that it was my ambition. I was always singing and I loved it, but it didn't occur to me that music could be a career.

So I went through high school with the engineering idea. I studied it for six months and discovered that I never had a night to myself. "That's not for me!" I decided, and walked away from it.

WHEN I WAS A KID

I was crazy about group singing; a quartet, three men in a barbershop, any bunch of people tuning up together got my attention.

In high school, I found out about Glee Clubs and joined. Pretty soon I was in there suggesting new ideas for group singing. I'd say: "Look—I've got an angle!" So they started calling me "Angles" I went through high school under that name.

I USED TO

Book bands to play at our high school. The school could pay for them, but nobody else wanted to take the trouble to book them. So when I signed a band, I'd say: "I'll sing with you!" And I did.

I LOVE TO REMEMBER

The summer I was fifteen. That was the year I met Nancy and we fell in love. I saw her on and off for the next four or five years, then we married. But that summer was the beginning of our romance. I can still remember the way the moon shone on those little crimped wet rims on the sand where waves had made a pattern, and that salty smell of the sea when I'd leap down the wooden steps to meet her in the early morning.

THE TURNING POINT OF MY LIFE

Was the day I married Nancy.

MY MOST EXCITING MOMENT

Was the day we got married. If any man's not excited on his wedding day, he's crazy!

I ENJOY

Prize fights, boogie-woogie, playing golf, a glass of milk and a piece of pie; playing with my babies and buying pretty things for my wife.

I'M GUILTY OF

Flying off the handle—and being sorry I flew. I like capable people, and it drives me mad when those who work for me forget or neglect simple tasks. I get in a jam, somebody's hurt, and I'm furious. I'm over it in a minute—but there it is!

I LIKE

Basket ball, bowling, organizing things;

Those fans who have been faithful to me for years, long before November, 1942, when my publicity first began;

Pantomime. I know I can get a point over quicker with pantomime than with words. I use it on the screen and on the stage in personal appearances. I even use it on broadcasts, for my own amusement. I use it on hospital tours, army camp shows, overseas entertainments.

I AGREE

With John Galsworthy than an accidental move can change your life. I was singing at a road house in New Jersey in 1939 for $25 a week. I usually had Monday night off, while the girl singer took her night off on Tuesday. One week she asked me to change nights—she had a date. I said "Okay!" So I was there that Monday night when Harry James walked in. He had organized a band and was looking for a boy to sing. He took me. If I hadn't changed nights, I'd never have met him.

I'LL NEVER FORGET

The time legal proceedings temporarily curtailed the band's salaries. We were in California, we had no savings, knew nobody there, and our first baby was on her way. Nancy had developed an appetite for ham sandwiches and apple pie, and asked for them one night when I hadn't a cent in my pockets. I gathered up and cashed in all the empty pop bottles in the building to satisfy her.

I'M MAD ABOUT

Music. I have five or six hundred albums filled with records. My favorites are Debussy, Ravel, Rachmaninoff and Wagner. I'm a rabid concert fan. I love ballet. I love all the arts and I'm envious of people who excel in any of them.

I PLAN TO

Expose my children to a (Continued on page 49)

FRANKLY FORTY

Most women are beset by the bugaboo of passing years. Not Ann Harding! She's content to look her age—and act it

Her blonde beauty ensnared Fredric March in "Paris Bound."

Harry Bannister snarls at the heroine in Vitaphone's "Girl of the Golden West."

"Holiday," with Mary Astor and the late Robt. Ames.

Co-starred with Laurence Olivier in "Westward Passage."

She plays mother roles in "Those Endearing Young Charms" and "Janie Gets Married."

ANN HARDING . . . Say it once over slowly, and comes quickly the memory of the girl with long golden hair and a voice—what a voice! Many have said it's the most beautiful ever recorded on screen-track.

But the lady wants no truck with nostalgic recollections. She's much too busy focusing on the Now, with only the briefest glance toward all those past successes—"Paris Bound," "Holiday," "Devotion," and "East Lynne." Started now on her second screen career, Ann Harding prefers to let the lavender once-upon-a-time mellow naturally, undisturbed by any will on her part to intrude the Past Perfect on her new Present Indicative.

All the same, she couldn't help being touched—and more than a little bit—by the all-out reception which marked her return to RKO.

It was "coming home" . . . back to the lot where she'd been "top star," eight years before. And when she walked onto the set for the first day's shooting it was almost as if she'd never been away. There had been changes, to be sure. Still, such a number of familiar faces—Soundman Dick Van Hessen, Assistant Director Nate Slott, and the prop man with the canvas chair marked Ann Harding, saved all these years against her return.

Same people to welcome her back to RKO, and the same Ann Harding. Looking lovely as ever, Ann has lost none of the old charm and quiet humor—but she makes no bones about the passing years. She says frankly: "I am 42 years old . . . and don't mind at all!"

Which brings us to explaining that her return to pictures created something of a stir at RKO studio, because she was scheduled to play Laraine Day's mother in "Those Endearing Young Charms"—and it was a part she almost didn't get.

"She'll probably think the part's too old," was the comment when casting selections were first being discussed. (Continued on page 68)

TALL AND TRIM, Helmut Dantine is also young, handsome and vigorous. Underneath this "young appeal" (and he does have an appealing look of boyishness), he's idealistic, intelligent and capable.

There's nothing vague or wishy-washy about this Viennese-born movie Romeo; he is decisive rather than confused, when faced with important decisions.

He has good features and merry gray eyes with a serious purpose behind their gaiety. There's a warmth to his smile, and it's not merely a trick that he's learned to charm women—it's sincere!

His maner is composed and friendly without being effusive. He is humble without being whining; he is good-humored without being flip. He has a good voice, which is deep but very pleasantly modulated, and speaks with a throaty "Charles Boyer accent."

Helmut Dantine is really his name. The family originally spelled it D'Antin, and there's a Rue D'Antin in Paris today—a street named for one of his great (how many times great, he doesn't know) grandfathers, who was chief cook in the royal court of Louis XIV.

He reads a great deal, this son of a forefather who fled from France at the time of the Huguenot persecution; tries to plan a schedule for his reading. Likes best-sellers—fiction and political books. Bought the Harvard Classics because he wants to familiarize himself with English and American literature. Enjoys Oscar Wilde's works. Is now reading Shakespeare—had previously read it in German.

He thinks American girls are beautiful dancers, that they have "an excellent sense of rhythm." Is quite a hand himself at the tango and rhumba, and (being Continental) is most proficient at waltzes.

Provided they can manage to separate their careers from their home lives, Helmut doesn't object to working wives. However, if a career conflicts with home or children, one or the other is likely to suffer. "Career girls in Hollywood," he adds, "are often unhappy because their jobs take too much out of them. Physically tired from their work, they're handicapped for being successful wives and mothers." For this reason, he'd rather not marry an actress, if he marries again. Considering himself an average man, Helmut realizes that there are too many odds against such a marriage working out.

He doesn't have any ideal dream girl. If it's to go dancing, he'll choose a good dancing partner; attending a concert, his companion would be a more sophisticated girl; for horseback riding or swimming, his date would be a gal who is definitely interested in sports. Looks is the least important factor, though the girl must make a good appearance.

And will he ever find just one girl with all these attributes? He doesn't expect to. When the "right girl" comes along he knows "it will be a thing"; there will be a current of understanding flowing strongly between the two of them and they'll know it's love

Helmut doesn't like overdressed girls nor young ladies with hairdo's. Likes hair simply dressed, hanging with abandon. He prefers tailored suits, or frocks designed along simple lines; doesn't object to black if it's accented with simple jewelry or a thin strand of pearls. His favorite clothes for himself are along tweedy lines. Very rarely dons a hat. Wears open sport shirts for comfort. In "Shadow of a Woman"—for the first time in his screen career—the studio made him a half a dozen suits.

The majority of his friends are people not connected with the movie industry; he feels that continuous shop talk can wear anybody down. (Continued on page 53)

"Shadow of a Woman" is his next Warner picture.

Art for his own sake! In the music dept., Helmut likes classics and light operettas.

GOSSIP often makes Hollywood's wheels go round. You'd be surprised how many things have happened, and are always happening—just because Someone's column or Someone's broadcast began with: They say . . .

There was that evening, not too long ago, when a popular young singing star urged throughout a five-course dinner that his beautiful blonde companion marry him. With the arrival of dessert it looked as if she might say "yes."

Suddenly, the cashier's radio tuned in on a famous high voice: "That sweet little Mary B. has just shown me an enormous sapphire diamond ring. Yes, friends, it means what you think it means. It comes from the man you think it came from. Mary and Dick will be married in March!"

"Dick" was the young man who had been trying to marry his blonde, whose name isn't Mary. The real Mary may or may not have had a sapphire diamond, but Dick had nothing to do with it. The rumor, however, was too much for the blonde. She said "No!"

But gossip isn't always a drawback. When Gene Tierney first came to Hollywood, she thought no one would ever realize it. Studio bigwigs were too busy to notice her. She talked of going back to New York.

A widely read columnist mistook another girl for Gene and observed that 20th Century's new find was "that way" about Rudy Vallee, who wasn't married at the time. Gossip writers took it up; Gene was bewildered to learn that she and Rudy had been seen at the races, the Brown Derby, the Victor Hugo. He was only a voice on the radio to her. (Continued on page 72)

Everything's GOING HER WAY

Sweet and lovely—Rita Hayworth, wife and mother; cited by the fighting men for contributing most to their morale

THIS is a story having to do with the spectacularly beautiful girl—and the spectacularly brainy young man—who, not so long ago, eloped with a spectacular suddenness that rocked the romance fans of a nation.

It's a current report on young Mr. and Mrs. Orson Welles, who now dwell spectacularly atop a canyon, in a mansion with so many pastel-carpeted rooms, and gleamingly-tiled bathrooms, and many-mirrored mantels they really haven't gotten around to counting them all as yet; who take their morning dip in a turquoise-tinted pool so large it accommodates not only a couple of rowboats, but an island with palm trees in the center, and who have so many rolling greenswards descending from their front porch, a "garden party" can run into three orchestras and four hundred guests.

Paradoxically, it also has much to do with a couple of kids who, when no one is around, stand back and view their many-winged and many-terraced manse and make awed cracks like "wonder what time it takes off?" Or, showing close friends around their rented acres, grin and say, "A little crowded—but there's a housing shortage, you know!" Who, whenever they can find a vacant week-end, sneak down to a small, two-bedroomed cottage at Carmel, to splatter paint and drape chintz after ideas strictly their own, with results sometimes wondrous, sometimes fearsome. And who secretly cherish a conviction that the most fun of all would be some day to junk the whole business of being fabulous, and steer a tramp steamer around the world.

But before and beyond any of these items—even before we can report on the something new that's been added, the super production known as Miss Rebecca Welles—it is essentially the story, or a part of the story, of Rita Hayworth, herself. The Rita who stood on a platform at the Walter Reed Hospital recently and listened gravely to the words read by a boy in khaki from a plaque in his hand:

"For sheer loveliness—and because of her willingness to share that loveliness—she has contributed immeasurably to the morale of the fighting men—"

An inscription carved by a fellow who wouldn't leave his hospital bed for months to come, presented by a boy whose two arms would never be completely straight or strong again, and applauded by thousands of wounded veterans sitting out front. A citation to Rita Hayworth from the fighting men in eight different theaters of war: "—Who see in her the beauty of that American womanhood for whom they fight."

Nothing is quite so perpetual as the Yank's enthusiasm for nicknaming everything from his jeeps to his generals, and most of all for choosing "The girls he'd rather—" Yet, if all the snappy titles awarded to all the screen queens were laid end to end, they still would not quite reach up to this "certificate of feminine loveliness." That puts into one small phrase the whole of the quality that is particularly Hayworth's.

Rita is glamorous and gam-orous, both of these attributes being standard equipment in the movie star business. But that "sheer loveliness" of hers, the quality that can be shared with others in all the barren and bloody spots of the world, is something which can also be shared with an audience of one. It's something you find on a dance rehearsal stage, when the flame-colored Hayworth hair is entirely hidden under a tight bandanna, and plain dark slacks and sweater cover the rest of the "glam" right up to her chin. Something ordinary, like the Hayworth "thank you" to a makeup man who's merely doing his job. Or something extraordinary, like the day you saw the Hayworth hand resting on the arm of a chair, and after a prop man had taken the chair from under it, the hand still rested where it had been, in long-fingered, totally unconscious grace.

A little less than two years ago, Rita sat in her portable dressing room with the satin folds of a bridal gown spreading like white foam around her slim ankles. The dressing room walls were of pale green brocade, the gown had sprays of seed pearls clustering all the way up to her white shoulders, and a bridal bouquet of white orchids languished on her dressing table.

Through the door, the bridal setting for "Cover Girl" loomed colossal and glittering. Bridesmaids in tulle and Technicolor, guests in gala groups, a softly-stringed orchestra, a groom in tails and pearl studs—all of which was to be expected, for this is the manner of movie star weddings.

It was by mere coincidence that the "I do's" were a repeat—the second ceremony in twenty-four hours. Just the day before, in a bare-walled and stuffy office, standing before a Santa Monica justice, Rita had become Mrs. Orson Welles. The bride wore a plain tan suit, no flowers, and a hint of tears in her eyes. The guests—the uninvited, perspiring, scoop-chasing press, who stood atop desk and chairs and filing cabinets—crowded best man Joe Cotten clear out into the hall. The groom was in pink shirt and business suit, and when he kissed her to a chorus of "Give it more cheese-cake, kids," whispered "I'm sorry, dear—" in her ear. For this, too, is sometimes the manner of movie star weddings.

And now, between scenes of her reel romance, Rita sat trying to convince a movie reporter that she'd rather not make any fancy statements about that real, and more important, romance.

"Why not?" asked the scribe. "What have you got to lose by giving me a few statements on it?"

"I—I just rather not. Not right now, anyhow. Sometimes there just aren't any words—especially for something that means so much to you."

"Why not?" A reporter needs a sharp pencil to do a good job, and then again there's the kind of reporter who mistakes her pencil for a pick-axe. "Why does it mean so much to you? Just what do you hope to get out of your marriage?"

Phyllis Thaxter—her life story, told here by her mother, who used to be an actress, too!

1. Phyllis Thaxter's her real name. 2. Dad's a Judge of Maine's Supreme Court. Brother Sid (now U. S. Navy), sister Hildy, Mother and Phyllis. 3. Mrs. T. gave up stage but encouraged Phyllis to have career. 4. Born in Portland, Me. Sisters (left and right) Hildy and Marie. 5. Hollywood "discovered" her in stage "Claudia." 6. Left for stage training with Mother's O.K.

IT TOOK three generations to make Phyllis an actress. First there was her grandmother, Marie-Louise Nelson, who wanted to be an actress. Then there was I—her mother, Phyllis Schuyler. I was an actress for a little while but gave it up when a promised part in a New York play didn't materialize. When I went to sign my contract I found they had changed their minds and had given the role to someone else. Elizabeth Patterson, now a very fine character actress in the movies, was waiting for me outside the building where the producers' offices were. When I came out—my hopes completely dashed—she said:

"Well, did you sign your contract?"

"No, Patty," I answered. "They didn't want me."

It was Christmas week. A light snow was falling. Chimes were playing Christmas carols. Salvation Army Santa Clauses were on every corner. I turned to Patty and made a statement that was to change my whole life.

"Patty, it's Christmas—I'm going home."

Right here that mysterious force—Fate or Providence—took a hand. If I hadn't lost the part and gone to Portland, Maine—where my clergyman father had just gone to be Canon Missioner at St. Luke's Episcopal Cathedral—I never would have met my husband. It is this sort of thing that has made Phyllis and us believe that our lives are prearranged in a sort of pattern. We don't always understand at the time why things happen as they do, but we know the way they happen is right for our particular design for living.

I arrived in Portland in December; met my husband in January; was engaged in March; and married in June. Like the Princess in the fairy tale, I lived happily ever after.

Phyllis was my third child. I wanted to call her Angelica Schuyler, because that is a family name. Her father said it was a perfectly terrible name and her nickname certainly would be "Jelly." I answered that it would be "Angel"—because that was what she was. He said she looked just like a football player because her hair stuck up all over her head like a crew cut. We finally called her Phyllis, for me—and St. Felix, for her father whose name is Sidney St. Felix Thaxter. Since she has been acting she has dropped the St. Felix because it is too long.

Phyllis grew up in an average, happy, gay American home. My husband and I loved each other and loved our four children. He was trying to make his way as a young lawyer but there was always enough money and we had lots of fun.

I could never quite get the theatre out of my blood. Grease paint to me was like the smell of sawdust to a circus horse. There were stock companies in Portland in those days; resident theatrical companies that stayed for months at a time. Inevitably we became friends of the actors and invited them to our house. We also lent them things. It was not at all unusual for my husband to come home at night and find the theatre had borrowed our living room furniture; and that for a week the Thaxters would have to sit on the floor.

When the children were old enough they went to see the plays. Sometimes I was in them—then they came back-stage to watch me make-up and perhaps see the performance from the wings. Generally they sat in the front row with their father—and beamed at me. They never failed to send me a large bouquet of flowers that was passed up over the footlights at the final curtain. There were times—unfortunately quite often—one or two of them came down with mumps or measles on the opening night.

Portland, Maine, is a lovely place to grow up in. Because our house had four children in it, it was the Mecca of all the neighbors' children. (Continued on page 62)

YOUR PROBLEM and MINE

By

Jane Wyman

Let Jane Wyman help solve your problem. Write her c/o Movieland, 9126 Sunset Blvd., Los Angeles 46, California

Jane stars with Ray Milland in "The Last Week-End," based on C. Jackson's best-seller.

Dear Miss Wyman:

I am a boy of 20 and have a wife of 18. We have a baby girl 6 months old. I know we were quite foolish to marry so young, but we don't regret it. I have not been in the service on account of a heart condition, so worked in another way to help the war effort. I have a boyhood friend whom I've known all my life, and we are as close as brothers. He recently got his discharge and is now practically one of the family.

Recently I was in an automobile accident, and smashed up my left leg, so my friend (at my suggestion) has been showing my wife a good time. About a week ago, he told me he was in love with her and shouldn't stay around any more. I made him promise to stay until I got out of the hospital. Now I find I won't be able to walk again. My problem is this: What sort of a life would I be giving my wife with both a baby and an invalid to take care of? My friend, being in love with my wife, could give her happiness and life, while I can give her nothing but burdens and worry. I know my wife would never consent to a divorce, so the only thing I can do is to tell her I don't love her any more. She would then be free to marry a man who could take care of her and the baby. Do you think I am right in doing this? I would be happy knowing she would be happy the rest of her life. She's only a kid and could forget me easily enough in the years to come. I haven't told her that I won't be able to walk again, for I am afraid she will stick to me out of pity.

Dear Roger:

In your purported desire to place your wife's happiness above your own, you have lost sight of several factors. I see no reason why you will be unable to walk again. You say your left leg was smashed, so I take it that the right one is uninjured. With all the new appliances being made for wounded soldiers, there should be one that would fit your case and give you the ability to get around without too much difficulty. Then there is your effort to take away from your wife her privilege of decision. How do you know she would marry your friend if you were out of the picture, and how can you be sure that he is the one to give her happiness? Have you considered what effect your announcement, out of a clear sky, that you no longer love your wife, will have on her; the bewilderment, disillusionment, heartbreak and bitter loss of faith it will cause her? Do you realize your selfishness in asking your friend to continue to see your wife under the circumstances? In sifting this down, Roger, I have a feeling that you are trying to dodge reality; you are afraid to face the future and your responsibilities. Keep your chin up, give your wife a chance to make her own decision and be sure that when she decides to stick with you, as I am definite she will, it is out of love and not pity. But above all, do not be content to settle yourself in an invalid's chair; you are young and have a good life ahead of you if you just have the determination to make it so. That is the obligation you owe your wife and child.

Sincerely,

Jane Wyman

Dear Jane:

I have quite a serious problem that worries me constantly. I met my husband's older brother six months ago. He had just returned from three years overseas, and we started going out together because I was lonely, and this innocent companionship developed into love. I am very fond of my husband, but we were too young when we were married to realize what true love was, and I now realize that we have nothing in common on which to build a life together. I have written my husband and tried to explain the situation to him, but he doesn't even try to understand.

My mother-in-law refuses to speak to either of us. I understand her feelings, but it hurts me to see John's unhappiness He loves his mother so.

A divorce is impossible because of my husband's religion. John and I have stopped seeing each other, but it didn't help. Loving John as I do, I could never live with my husband again.

There must be some way that John and I can have our happiness together without doing wrong. We have thought and talked about a solution to our problem without avail, so we are now seeking impersonal assistance.

Martha

Dear Martha:

I am afraid that I am going to be unable to give you the advice which you want, for I can see no happiness for you and John. Blood is thicker than water, and even if your husband would consent to a divorce and you married John, the knowledge that he had betrayed his brother and cut himself off from his family would gnaw at his conscience to such an extent that there could be no happiness for either of you. You already have an example of that in his hurt over his mother's attitude.

I am wondering whether your caring for John arose from his resemblance to your husband. Absence plays queer tricks on us, and it may be that when your husband returns, you will find that your fondness for John is just a reflection of your love for your husband—a shadow instead of substance. Before you met John, you apparently were satisfied with your husband and fond of him, so do not close your mind to a life with him again until you see him once more. Play fair with him, give him the advantage of being with you in person before you make any decision. I feel certain that you will find more happiness in your present marriage than in one with John under the circumstances.

Sincerely,

Jane Wyman

GREAT is the excitement, not to mention jubilation, at Bagdad-On-The-Hill, better known nationally as 20th Century-Fox Studios. Alice Faye is back, working in a picture that has the working title of "Fallen Angel" but which may be released under another name. (Seems the Hays office or some other deep thinker—forgetting Lucifer—has taken exception to the suggestion that an angel can fall.)

The first question asked of Alice (at least one quatrillion times) has been: "Well, well, and what has our beauteous blonde been doing during the two years she has been away from the cameras?"

Answer: plenty. Item: two engaging young daughters, Alice, Jr., aged 3, and Phyllis, aged 1, have kept her too busy to miss picture-making.

Phyllis is still too young to travel, but when Phil and Alice made a bond trip and hospital tour with the Benny troupe early last spring, they decided that Junior was a big girl now and (Continued on page 64)

The Femme Faye-tale of Hollywood—or how does Alice account for the two years that she's been off-screen?

SALUTATIONS, Citizens! I know you're busy shaking vacation out of your hair and getting ready to go back to work and back to school, but I'm sure you can take off a few minutes to see what's doing in the music world.

Our name band leaders have a big problem at the moment—transportation. Of course it's always been a problem, because packing a band around the country, with instruments, library, and equipment, is tough, even in peace time. But now, with the strict rules for civilian travel which have been set down by the Office of Defense Transportation, leaders are faced with a bigger headache, especially those who have large organizations, like Harry James and Tommy Dorsey. You can be sure there will be fewer one-night stands from now on, too, at least until the situation eases up.

Of course Harry James doesn't like to travel anyway, and it looks as if he'll be spending most of his time on the West Coast, which won't make Betty Grable unhappy. Harry is rumored to be set for a radio commercial this fall, with a cigarette sponsor footing the bills, and he'll probably make another picture before long.

Well, Frankie Boy now has thousands of new fans, but not the bobby-sox variety. The G.I.s overseas went for the Sinatra brand of swoon in a big way. Here's an excerpt from a story which appeared in one of the Army papers, which more or less sums up the way the boys felt about Frank: "Most of us went to see Sinatra, undecided as to whether we were going to jeer or cheer. However, after watching the fine performance that he and the rest of the troupe put on, there was no longer any question. In the opinion (Continued on page 50) sound musical training. Maybe it'll take.

I ADMIRE

John Charles Thomas, because he's a great singer;

Orson Welles, because he has tremendous imagination. I think he's a genius;

Bing Crosby, because he's a swell person besides being a swell singer;

Nancy—she's beautiful and sweet, and besides, she's the ideal homemaker. She cooks all our meals. The other day, I brought in a new sort of bow tie I'd found in New York, and inside half an hour Nancy had copied it for me in different material.

OUR HOUSE IN CALIFORNIA

Could have been a mistake, if it hadn't been for Nancy. She was in the east when I bought it. I chose it chiefly because it was on Toluca Lake, where the family could enjoy the water. I thought I'd have fun teaching Nancy Sandra, aged five, and Frank, junior, now eighteen months old, to swim. The house wasn't ideal, but there was a housing shortage.

Nancy was appalled when she first walked in, and I saw it then through her eyes—depressing with its dark beams and dark walls, its cold, slippery tiled floors and stairs, with their danger to the children; the light shut out by heavy dark velvet draperies.

I was away part of the time, so most of the credit goes to Nancy for transforming that dismal house into a lovely, cheerful, inviting spot. Nancy had holes drilled into the tile to fasten down soft green carpets over floors and stairs, so the children wouldn't fall as they ran. She had ceilings and walls painted in light creams and pastels, gay flowered chintz hung at the windows, and furniture upholstered in warm bright shades. She couldn't use much of the furniture from our eastern home, because the formality of heavy old mahogany didn't fit the bright informality of California.

I'VE BEEN INTERESTED

In fighters all my life. My father fought under the name of Marty O'Brien and my uncle was well-known as Babe Segar. I own a chunk of heavyweight fighter, Tami Mauriello. And my favorite exercise is boxing.

I'D LIKE TO

See my daughter, Nancy Sandra, acknowledged as a great harpist. She's only five, and I don't know if she'll care about a harp—but that's one of my dreams.

I LOVE

Children—mine and other people's. For kids, I'm a pushover.

I CAN'T STAND

Bureau drawers slightly open, knives and forks out of line, books in untidy heaps. I'm an automatic straighten-upper.

I ENJOY RIBBING

On "Anchors Aweigh," the first day on the set, I found a sign on my dressing room door: "Bing Crosby." I suspected Gene Kelly, so changed his sign to read: "Pat Rooney." The first time we saw each other, we emerged from our rooms and came face to face under our fake signs. What a laugh.

GENE KELLY TAUGHT ME

To dance for our picture. Routines were so strenuous that I lost four pounds in our first rehearsals, and my sailor uniform hung on me. Wardrobe took it in, neatly. I drank six malted milks a day for two weeks and gained back eight pounds. Then I couldn't get into my uniform!

AMONG MY FAVORITE MEMORIES ARE

That night in Hollywood Bowl when I sang before 10,000 people. There had been quite a controversy about my singing in the Bowl, and I was a little nervous and a little worried; then when I got there, it was SO wonderful.

That day I met our late great President Franklin Delano Roosevelt, and had tea at the White House. When I neared him in the line, he cried: "Look, who's here!" and when we shook hands, he laughed in his unforgettable way and whispered: "How's about telling me what's first on the 'Hit Parade' this week? I won't tell anybody!"

THE FIRST THING I NOTICE

About a person is whether he has warmth. I shy away from aloof people. I don't understand them. You see, I go overboard to make friends with everyone—so I like warmth.

MY GREATEST HERO

Is FDR.

I AM PROUD OF

My association with his cause, and of the autographed picture he gave me.

MY BEST ADVICE

Came from Mervyn LeRoy. Returning from New York this year, he, Frank Ross and I fell into conversation. I had been traveling around giving lectures before high school and other groups on my favorite subject, "Tolerance," and we discussed that. "You're wasting your time," Mr. LeRoy told me. "You could reach a thousand times more people if you told your story on the screen."

The three of us decided to make a short, each contributing his services: Mr. Ross as producer, Mr. LeRoy as director, and myself as actor. Albert Maltz, who wrote "The Cross In The Arrow" wrote the script. Our short, "The House I Live In," is now ready for release.

I HAVE FUN

Making odd pieces of furniture; I've finished a few of the many items I plan to make for the house;

Painting, I've painted the boat, my little landing and my float on the lake;

Planning a Musical Scholarship Award Idea, whereby four-year musical scholarships will be awarded annually to deserving students. Such a thing would have meant the world to me once, and I hope some day it will help other kids on their way up.

I CAN'T

Seem to hang onto money. The more money I earn, the more ways I see to spend it to make long-cherished ideas come true. I get so enthusiastic, I forget what ideas cost.

SOME DAY

I'll write a book, which I'll inscribe: "All That I Have, I Owe Period."

THE END

CHRISTMAS IS COMING!

Woody Hermon and Jill got together for a good laugh ond tolked over music matters. It oll hod to do with Woody's bond opening ot the Pennsylvania Hotel in New York.

of the G.I.'s in this outfit, he's an O.K. guy."

And everyplace he appeared, Frank was received in the same way. He has several picture deals pending, but he wants to go to the Pacific before he makes another movie. And his new one, "Anchors Aweigh," is so good that it will probably play for months and months.

Johnnie Johnston has been a busy lad, doing five shows a day at the Capitol Theatre in New York and ten broadcasts a week, subbing for Perry Como on the Chesterfield Supper Club program. He's due to arrive in Hollywood some time in October, to start his picture contract with Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer.

The housing shortage is no longer worrying Johnnie, thanks to the thoughtfulness of a former landlady, from whom he once rented a house in the Hollywood hills. She heard he was looking for a place to live and wired him that she was going to sell her home and would give him first crack at it. Johnnie wired "Yes" in a hurry, and then arranged the whole deal by long-distance telephone.

WHAT'S BRISK ON THE DISC:

CAPITOL:

Here's a Freddie Slack album called "Slack's Boogie Woogie," which is all-instrumental, and features Freddie's piano. And get a load of the tune titles: "Rib Joint," "Behind The Eight Beat," "Blackout Boogie," "Southpaw Serenade," "Kitten On the Keys," "Bashful Baby," "Strange Cargo," and "A Cat's Ninth Life."

The King Cole Trio's latest combines "I'm A Shy Guy," and "I Thought You Ought To Know," both with King's vocals.

Carlos Molinas makes his Capitol debut with "Nocturno" and "Koki-Koka." The first is a slow rhumba and the second is a pregon, whatever that is. Bobby Rivera does the singing.

The Pied Pipers can always be counted on for something solid, and their new one is no exception. It's "Lily Belle" and "We'll Be Together Again," with Paul Weston's orchestra.

Skip Farrell and The Dinning Sisters have joined talents for "Love Letters" and "Homesick, That's All."

COLUMBIA:

You can take your pick from two Harry James' platters this month, but you'll probably want both of them. The first is "Carnival," an instrumental, backed up by "11:60 P.M.," sung by Kitty Kallen. Then there's "I'll Buy That Dream," with Kitty Kallen again, and "Memphis in June."

If you like Phil Spitalny's all-girl orchestra, you'll want their album, "Favorite Melodies From The Hour of Charm." The selections include "The Rosary," "Love's Old Sweet Song," "The Lost Chord," "Onward Christian Soldiers," "The Lord's Prayer," and others.

Ray Noble pops up with "The Wish That I Wish Tonight" and "So-o-o-o In Love," with both vocal choruses by Trudy Irwin. (Remember her with Bing Crosby on the Kraft Music Hall?)

Two of the most beautiful songs from the Theatre Guild musical, "Carousel," have been recorded by Frank Sinatra, and he does a great job on both, "If I Loved You" and "You'll Never Walk Alone." Axel Stordahl's orchestra and the Ken Lane singers.

Kate Smith, with the "Four Chicks and Chuck," do "On The Atcheson, Topeka and the Santa Fe," backed by Kate's solo "Johnny's Got a Date With a Gal In New York."

Capitol NEWS FROM Hollywood

Jo Stafford waxes 'Gee, It's Good to Hold You'

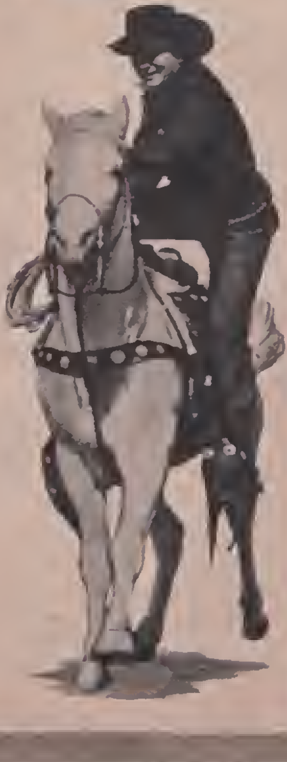
Ever since she became a single, Jo Stafford has climbed up high—and fast! Her latest, 'Gee, It's Good to Hold You,' promises to keep Jo's fan mail pouring in. Picture shows her with Johnny Mercer, Capitol's president, the man with the sixth sense for turning unknowns into headliners. This, plus a canny selection of hits, tireless rehearsing and slick engineering, is the reason for the tremendous popularity of not only Jo but all the other great Capitol stars.

Carlos Molina now Capitol exclusive

Master of Latin rhythms is Carlos Molina (shown with his fiddle). Leading his orchestra through fast rumba-numbas, Maestro Molina has built up muchos aficionados. And now Carlos Molina is the latest Capitol "first"—having just been signed to an exclusive Capitol contract.

Tex Ritter started something!

The big yen today for cowboy songs is due in no small part to Tex Ritter, America's most beloved Western star. His Capitol recordings of 'Green Grow the Lilacs,' 'There's a New Moon Over My Shoulder' and 'Jingle-Jangle' have been hailed as hits by millions. It's no wonder Tex is an exclusive Capitol artist. For Capitol picks only the "firsts"—the top-ranking talent and the top-notch tunes.



Quick Quiz! Here's a list of outstanding artists who have one thing in common. Can you guess what it is?

KING COLE TRIO	JOHNNY MERCER
DINNING SISTERS	PIED PIPERS
GILDERSLEEVE	ANDY RUSSELL
BETTY HUTTON	FREDDIE SLACK
STAN KENTON	COOTIE WILLIAMS

You guessed it—they're all exclusive Capitol artists!

"Till The End Of Time" and "He'll Have To Cross The Atlantic," are done by Les Brown and his orchestra, with lyrics for both sung by Doris Day. The first tune is based on Chopin's "Polonaise," and was featured in "A Song To Remember." The second is the latest Sammy Kahn-Jule Styne composition, and looks like a big hit.

It's Tommy Tucker Time with "On The Atcheson, Topeka and the Santa Fe" and "Welcome Home." Don Brown and The Three Two Timers handle the lyrics.

Woody Herman is in for "June Comes Around Every Year," with a Herman vocal, and "Northwest Passage," an instrumental.

Here's an album which should please all the Eddy Duchin fans. It's "Eddy Duchin Reminisces," and includes such tunes as "April Showers," "I'll See You In My Dreams," "If I Could Be With You," "Sometimes I'm Happy," "Can't We Talk It Over," and "It Had To Be You." Of course these were all recorded before Eddy went into the service.

VICTOR:

Jess Stacy finally did organize his band, and it was only about a week old when Victor signed Jess to a contract. His first record shows great promise. It's "Daybreak Serenade" and "It's Only A Paper Moon," with a terrific vocal by Lee Wiley (Mrs. Jess Stacy).

Tony Pastor's "Five Salted Peanuts" was such a hit that he has followed it up with two more novelties, "Jose Gonzalez" and "Please No Squeeza Da Banana."

"Bedford Drive" and "Tabu" have been waxed by Artie Shaw and his orchestra. They are both instrumentals, with lots of the Shaw clarinet on the first side.

Larry Stevens, who sings on Jack Benny's program, makes his Victor debut with "Stars In Your Eyes" and "I Don't Want To Be Loved" (By Anyone Else But You).

Vaughn Monroe steps in with "No More Toujours L'Amour," which he sings with the Norton Sisters, and "A Story Of Two Cigarettes," which he sings alone. This latter tune is the one which was banned from the air when it was first published, but which was later introduced by Johnnie Johnston on his program.

The Duke has a new one: "Otto, Make That Riff Staccato," sung by Ray Nance, and "Everything But You," with a vocal by Joya Sherrill.

Perry Como has recorded "Till The End of Time" and "That Feeling In The Moonlight." Perry will be in Hollywood for a few weeks, making his second picture for Fox, "Doll-Face." His leading lady will be Vivian Blaine instead of Carole Landis.

Freddy Martin offers "Lily Belle," with Gene Conklin and the Martin Men handling the lyrics, and one of the tunes from "Weekend At The Waldorf," "And There You Are"—sung by Artie Wayne.

Tommy Dorsey does "Nevada" and "That's It." Stuart Foster and the Sentimentalists vocalize "Nevada," which was published a few years ago but never became popular, until recently.

Before Hal McIntyre went overseas he recorded "Autumn Serenade" and "Some Sunday Morning." Frank Lester and the Quintet take care of the vocals.

Gloria Foster is vocalist with the Carmen Cavallero outfit. Here they are, at Ciro's.

DECCA:

Glen Gray and the Casa Loma Orchestra are represented with "Counting the Days," with Skip Nelson doing the musical counting, and "All By Myself," which is an almost complete vocal disc, with Eugenie Baird. This one was waxed before Eugenie cut out from the Casa Lomans to join Bing's radio show.

Hazel Scott is featured on "The Man I Love" and "Fascinating Rhythm." She sings and plays piano solos on both sides.

Decca has done a great job on their album of "Carousel." As is usual with their show albums, the original cast, chorus and orchestra from Broadway production to the numbers, which include "June Is Bustin' Out All Over," "If I Loved You," "This Was A Real Nice Clambake," etc. The dialogue is cleverly woven into the recordings so that you'll know what it's about, even if you didn't see the show.

Dick Haymes and Helen Forrest have joined their voices for "Some Sunday Morning" and "I'll Buy That Dream." Victor Young's orchestra and arrangements. Helen goes it alone on "Strange As It Seems" and "From Out of Nowhere." She sang the latter tune in the picture "You Came Along," but she got the worst end of it, photographically.

One of the best Guy Lombardo recordings in a long time is "Stars In Your Eyes," done as a beguine, and "Small World." Jimmy Brown does both vocals.

Johnny Green, the well-known composer and musical director for Metro, has done "From Out of Nowhere," and an oldie, "Steam Is On The Beam." Ralph Blane, who, with Hugh Martin, wrote "The Trolley Song," sings the "Nowhere" side, and the lyrics for "Steam Is On The Beam," are done by Kay Thompson and Her Singers. Kay arranges and directs most of the vocal work you hear in Metro musicals.

Randy Brooks' first record for Decca is "I'd Do It All Over Again," with a Billy Usher vocal, and "Land Of The Loon." Decca is planning big things for Randy's band, and rightfully so—because Randy plays a lot of trumpet, and his band, though only a few months old, clicked fast.

ACCENT ON HELMUT

His best friend is Peter Skipper, whom he met while he was attending U.C.L.A. He does have casual acquaintances amongst the film folk, however; speaks very highly, for instance, of Humphrey Bogart, attesting that it's a delight to work with Bogie . . . he's "a man's man."

Helmut enjoys doing nice things for friends. Buying them little tokens of esteem isn't an extravagance, as he sees it, because he feels that friends are one of the few nice things you have in life.

Speaking of extravagances, he has none. He's practical, not a spendthrift. He is definitely aware of budgets, abiding by one himself. Realizing that a Hollywood career is not always a long one, and that every actor should save for a rainy day, he puts half his check into a savings account and lives within the remainder.

He is a fatalist. But he heartily disapproves of sitting back and letting fate take its course. His theory is that there are two fates—the "big" fate, which is lined up for you, and the "little" fate, which depends on you. You have to go out and do your best. How it will work out depends on God, but you have to contribute your share.

He likes American cooking—it's simple, healthy and tasty. But he hasn't as yet acquired a taste for sweet potatoes. When he first came to this country, he couldn't eat avocadoes and celery. Living in a small bachelor apartment, he has very limited facilities for cooking—just a heating plate. However, very often he does fix his own breakfast, and always keeps some food in the ice box for cold suppers. Has been living in the same apartment ever since he first came to Hollywood; took it then because the rent's low and he's saving a lot of money that way.

He doesn't mind being alone at times; says being on a constant merry-go-round is a superficial impression some people have gained of Hollywood, not necessarily true. He likes to play chess; is a frequent visitor, too, at the Hollywood Athletic Club, where he engages in many fencing matches. Once in a while he enjoys a movie.

Helmut recently learned to play golf, his teacher being his stand-in. Traditional in Hollywood are the stories of help and career-coaching that motion picture stars give their stand-ins. Here is a stand-in who has successfully coached his star!

Art Stewart, professional golfer, began giving the actor lessons in the game when the pair worked together in "Hotel Berlin." Dantine proved himself an apt pupil, and by the time their next picture ("Shadow Of A Woman") was completed, he was playing the 18 holes of Lakeside Golf Course with a score in the middle 90's, which is slightly over par.

Making his first personal appearance junket since he became a motion picture star three years ago, Helmut went East last May; was booked only for appearances in New York, but his p.a. proved so successful and created such a stir with the fans that his engagement was extended to include Philadelphia and Washington. He was away from Hollywood for nearly two months; didn't mind the tough grind, fact is he enjoyed every minute of it, though it meant doing four and five shows a day, and interviews and photographic sittings in between stage bows.

His first-night ovation in Washington was terrific. And he was moved—he really was—by all the niceties he received from those enthusiastic fans, and remembrances listing as hand-rolled handkerchiefs, sport shirts, attractive ties, candy, delectable fruits, rare delicacies, even celery and olives. In the past five months, Helmut has jumped to one of the leading spots in the fan mail department at Warners.

He had the great honor of meeting President Truman, in Washington, and of attending a session of Congress. (Also something memorable: he slept in the President's bed—the one Truman occupied at Hotel Statler before entering the White House.) His first trip to the capital, he visited Mount Vernon, Lincoln's Memorial, Washington's Monument, The White House.

Helmut thinks America is wonderful. Will he return to Europe? If so, only for a visit—to see his parents, who're still in Vienna. The last letter he had from them was nearly a year ago, in November, through the Red Cross. In June, however, he was asked to make an OWI broadcast (In French, German and Italian), and was allowed to add a personal message to his fam-

BUT cream rouge is easier to apply than dry rouge. That's because it can be controlled more readily. Dot on sparingly, then smooth and blend evenly with your fingertips:

BUT nails need never smear after they've been freshly manicured. A new type of oily sealer can be applied over the top coat of polish to harden it immediately.

BUT hand lotion is just as good a cleanser as it is a softener. Pour several drops into a palm, massage hands together and wipe off all surface soil on a clean towel.

BUT eyeshadow's chief function is structural. Shadow in inner corners makes eyes seem wider apart. A touch of color on the center lids of protruding eyes creates hollows.

BUT dry shampoo is a year round hair helper. Without disturbing a wave, it removes all oil and dust. Such a clearup takes only ten minutes in hot or cold-causing climates.

BUT anti-perspirants do a better job of checking perspiration if they are used at bedtime when there is no activity to cause moisture and interfere with their action.

BUT a combination of brown and black eyebrow pencil looks more natural than either used separately. Feather stroke brows with brown pencil, then go over them very lightly with black.

BUT your skin lotion will go further and have full-strength effectiveness if you avoid waste by moistening a cotton pad thoroughly with water first, then with astringent or skin freshener.

BUT white flakes on dark shoulders do not always indicate dandruff. They may be the result of excessively dry scalp. If so, massage, brisk brushings and frequent oil treatments are in order.

BUT a fever blister may be the result of nervousness or indigestion. Any internal upset can cause a sudden change of temperature and bad health habits contribute to mouth irritation.

BUT cake make-up can be the filmiest kind of powder base as well as a complete make-up. For smooth flattery, apply it with a soaking wet sponge or cotton, blend quickly and blot dry.

ily. Arrangements were afterward made for beaming the program to Vienna, and his family was notified when the program would be heard.

Delivering a serious but impassioned discourse on the advantages of "being an American,"—and he will, given the merest suggestion of an invitation—Helmut has lots to say about Freedom, in ways most Americans never stop to consider . . . "Freedom to travel about, without all the redtape of crossing boundary lines; different languages, different money and complicated rates of exchange. No passport problems here. And more important, the Freedom of Opportunity.

"In Europe," he points out, "you're a cobbler or a professor or whatever, not just because you want to be . . . it's because you have no choice. And once started on that career, what European would ever think of changing to something else? Never! It's unheard of! While in this country, there are no insurmountable problems or limitations; what you want to be, you can be. And if you start out in one thing, and decide later you'd like to try something else instead . . . well, that's possible, too. I think of that in terms of my own future; it's a comfortable feeling knowing that if ever I tire of movies, or they tire of me, I can change careers. If I decide I want to sell real estate, or go into the poultry business or whatever, there's no reason I can't."

Helmut would like to spend about six months of every year in New York and six months in California. That failing, he'd like to make sure of getting back East at least once a year.

Katharine Cornell was playing in "The Barretts Of Wimpole Street," while he was having his p.a. at the Strand in New York; they met, being just next door to one another (though in separate theaters), and from that meeting stems the possibility that Helmut will be cast for one of the leading parts in a play which Miss Cornell expects to open, the end of this year.

Ambitious as well as eager, Dantine hopes in time to direct pictures. Has already had a stab at producing; in July he was sole producer of "To Hell We March," a play written by Peter Brooks, which concerns Allied soldiers in their tense as well as lighter moments during the occupation of Berlin. The Volunteer Army Canteen Service benefited from the entire proceeds. Helmut paid all production costs, as his personal contribution to the V.A.C.S. cause.

His rise to stardom hasn't been an easy one. He started from scratch and he's had to work hard for everything he's achieved.

While he was studying at the Pasadena Community Playhouse, he opened two gasoline filling stations to help defray his expenses. In order to stimulate business, he bought autographed pictures of movie stars and gave them to his customers.

There's a recognizable and unmistakable power in this young man. His innate enthusiasm is that of a typical American who enjoys life. He has his feet on the ground and no wool in his eyes. He makes no extravagant gestures, no unnecessary remarks—yet he's the kind who makes adjectives you've known all your life suddenly come alive: gracious, charming, captivating. He's top-drawer; or, in straight Americanese—a swell guy!

How many of these do you own?

If you look under your car, you'll probably find a couple of gadgets something like this one.

They're shock absorbers.

They take the sting out of sudden bumps and jolts. They make a rough road smoother.

And if you're wise, somewhere in your desk, or bureau drawer, or safe deposit box, you have a lot more shock absorbers. Paper ones. War Bonds.

If, in the days to come, bad luck strikes at you through illness, accident, or loss of job, your War Bonds can soften the blow.

If there are some financial rough spots in the road ahead, your War Bonds can help smooth them out for you.

Buy all the War Bonds you can. Hang on to them. Because it's such good sense, and because there's a bitter, bloody, deadly war still on.

Eyes of preview fans are sharp. A concerted roar of "Kurt!—It's Kurt!—Kurt Kreuger!" arose from a dozen throats. Bands of adolescents—mostly feminine—surrounded him, shrieking.

"Sign my book!"

"Gimme an autograph!"

"This is mine . . ."

"Say something on this, willya?"

Swarms of fans pressed about him, jostling and pushing. Screaming with excitement they swept him into the lobby, thrust autograph books, straw hats, white coats, bits of paper and assorted oddments at him. In a bewildered daze he signed whatever he could reach.

A tide of fans had surged around Connie, Gracie and George in turn, but it ebbed away again, politely—and they reached their cars without too much delay. Police had to rescue Kurt at long last, escort him to a taxi that took a roundabout way to his parked car, and guard him until he was safely on a boulevard. Then he discovered that his pretty girl friend had vanished.

Even overpowering success brings elation, but Kurt's was dimmed with worry over his young friend. He scoured the streets of Inglewood; decided that one of the cast must have given her a lift, and raced home to a telephone. No one had seen her. It was well into the early morning when he reached her. His guest—sensible as well as lovely—had calmly ridden two street cars and a bus to her own door. She was neither angry nor hurt.

"After all," she observed, reassuringly, "it was your night!"

Kurt's telephone began ringing before he was out of bed. 20th Century-Fox, RKO and Selznick Studios were among studios eager to sign the actor who had taken Inglewood by storm. It was wonderful to be able to pick and choose; to have agents calling up and calling back; finally, with the feeling that the favor was all on his side, to sign a lucrative contract with 20th Century-Fox Studios.

The only Swiss star in Hollywood had attracted attention in other pictures before his performance in "Paris Underground" made Hollywood history. In "Sahara," his portrayal of the German flier shot down in the desert brought sacks of fan mail. Theater audiences went out asking: "Who is Kurt Kreuger?" and next day RKO signed him to play opposite Simone Simon in a delightful little period picture called "Mlle. Fifi." It was his work in this film that convinced director Gregory Ratoff that Kurt must be the Nordic menace in the Bennett production. Between the two pictures, he played "Major Kauder" in Warner Brothers' "Hotel Berlin."

The first World War was raging when Kurt was born in St. Moritz, Switzerland, July 23, 1917. His father was a large landowner in Germany, but his mother, a Swiss, had returned to her native land for the event. Because of the Allied blockade and the increasing shortage of food in Germany, mother and child remained in St. Moritz for the duration, and the little family continued to live there until Kurt was eight.

Handsome 6'2" George Rigaud came to Hollywood via France and Argentina.

Frau Kreuger's death changed his plan of life. His father removed Kurt from the St. Moritz school and took him to one of his farms, where a young girl cousin and a tutor for both children joined him. The tutor had a girl at a neighborhood farm; Kreuger, senior, was frequently away on business; and Kurt recalls with pleasure a year of glorious freedom seldom permitted European youngsters.

"Schools in Europe are strict, and scholastic standards are high. You work hard all the time," he said, thoughtfully. "I should like to have gone to school over here—you have such fun!"

Maybe the tutor married his girl; maybe Herr Kreuger found out and dismissed him. At any rate, presently Kurt was in St. Moritz again at a preparatory school from which he graduated into the University of Lausanne. Later on, he spent a year in England at the University of London's School of Economics. It was here that he picked up his clipped British accent.

In 1934, Hitler announced that all German land must be put to use. Those farms not under intensive cultivation would be rented from their owners. The Kreuger farms in Northern Germany and Silesia were taken over under this order. Rent was paid for a few months, then all payment stopped. Nothing could be done about it, of course; in those days no one talked back to the little man with the moustache. The Kreugers continued to reside abroad.

Since becoming an American citizen, the actor has filed claims for his inheritance, but the possibility of regaining possession seems slight.

While still in his teens, Kurt became amateur ski champion. So it was natural that when he came to America in 1937 he should visit Sun Valley. There on the snowy slopes he met his first film stars, Norma Shearer, Claudette Colbert and Ray Milland, a glamorous trio.

"You look like a movie star yourself," observed a fellow guest one day, when Kurt, glowing with exercise and high spirits, came striding into the lodge. "Why not try pictures?"

The guest, it turned out, was a talent scout. Kurt didn't take his suggestion seriously. He was mad about travel, and presently was off again to New York.

At a cocktail party in Manhattan, he met a woman who seemed to have been everywhere. They discussed trips they had made, cafes they had discovered in out-of-the-way places, the cuisine of various Continental hotels. Before they parted she said: "Why not go into partnership with me, if you've nothing better in mind? I run a Travel Bureau."

"The idea intrigued me," said Kurt, "I felt I was fitted for it. I'd lived in Amsterdam, London, Paris, Berlin, New York and Switzerland. Europe isn't very big. In normal times you can drive all over it in a matter of a few days or weeks. While I was at school, I had made holiday tours in Italy, Belgium, the Balkans, France and Austria. I speak French, English, German and a little Italian. It was my hobby to know where to find good hunting, fishing, ski-ing, to remember where they served the finest food, how to get to interesting spots, where the best hotels were located."

The Travel Bureau was a great success. Kurt used to plan economical trips for schoolteachers with $500 to spend, who wanted the most for their money. He also worked out luxury tours for men with $10,000 to cover the cost of taking wives or families abroad.

"I'd take roses to the boat for the women, when I went to see them off," he recalled. Then his blue eyes twinkled wickedly. "And often I'd take wealthy oil men from Texas to one side and tell them what they ought NOT to see in Paris. This made me very popular."

Mr. and Mrs. Joe E. Brown celebrate their anniversary—an evening at "The Blackouts."

This congenial occupation ended abruptly September 1st, 1939—when the Germans marched into Poland. Kurt, sitting at his lonely desk amid cancelled tickets and now obsolete travel folders, suddenly remembered the words of the talent scout. Maybe it would be fun to be a movie star!

For weeks he sought advice from actors he'd met in New York. All agreed that it was foolish for an unknown to try to crash Hollywood. "Get some experience," they urged. The summer of 1940 saw him in Provincetown, R. I. in summer stock. Before the year was over, he'd played supporting roles in "Liliom," "Boy Meets Girl" and "Cradle Song."

All this seemed to be leading exactly nowhere, so one morning Kurt climbed into his car and set out for a tour of the United States and Canada, winding up in Hollywood. The trip was exciting, but the film city failed to break out with banners at sight of him. All he was offered were bits in "B" pictures.

The combination of sophistication and charm in the blonde young man attracted the attention of a couple who happened to be his neighbors in Hollywood. They were helping to cast plays for New York's Theater Guild and they spoke to Kurt about his plans.

"It had been impressed on me that you can't tell the truth in this business," confided Kurt. "I believed it then, though I doubt it now. I informed them that I'd had stage experience—which was true; but I laid my experience in Switzerland—which wasn't."

"You're just the type for the German in Helen Hayes' new play," they said, and let him see the script of "Candle In The Wind."

The story enchanted Kurt. He rushed back to New York, under the impression that he was to do the role if he could satisfy director Alfred Lunt. He didn't realize that neither his name nor his experience were of sufficient importance for a Broadway production; all the way across the country he enthusiastically studied the lines he thought were his. At the first rehearsal, what was his fury and amazement to find another actor reading the role? Kurt merely was understudy to him, with a brief bit in the play.

All was for the best, however. Kurt played the part in Pittsburgh when the other man was ill, scoring a hit and getting good reviews. A year with Helen Hayes gave him prestige when he returned once more to Hollywood. Almost at once he stepped into "Sahara" and onto the pathway to fame.

It wasn't quite so easy as it sounds. Zoltan Korda, producer of "Sahara," had made many tests for the role of German flier, and was discouraged when Andre DeToth (then assistant to Alexander Korda) suggested that Kurt might do. Andre had known Kurt in Europe, when both were boys. A test was arranged, after which Korda shook hands graciously, and said: "I'll let you know."

Those fatal words usually mean: "Don't hold your breath till you hear." For more than a week, nothing happened. Kurt had given up hope and was packing his things when Korda himself telephoned. He was much pleased with the test and would give Kurt feature billing. All of which led you know where!

Twice since Pearl Harbor, Kurt has been on the threshold of induction into the army, but has been defeated by the combination of: bad heart, near-sight, and a tricky cartilage in one knee. When they refused him the first time, he took comfort from the fact that they hadn't classified him as 4-F. That must mean that they'd make room for him later. When the second induction notice came, he took it for granted that he was in.

"My imagination leaped ahead," he recalled. "I saw myself sitting at a long desk, dressed in uniform, getting information out of German prisoners. I thought I'd know exactly what to ask, since I'd lived over there and knew the countries so well. I was having a wonderful dream when they handed me a little slip. "Rejected," it read. I was terribly downhearted until I heard that again they were taking only perfect specimens, guaranteed to stand up under anything."

Kurt has an attractive little house set high in the Hollywood hills, next door to the DeToths. He's building a swimming pool beyond the terrace that overhangs a cliff. He has a library and owns two police dogs. So far he hasn't a wife.

"I'm not in love. I hope I shan't fall in love soon, for I realize that when it happens to you—you're helpless. I watch Hollywood people rushing to marriage license bureaus to get themselves bound to each other: presently rushing to Las Vegas or Reno to have those bonds cut."

So until some beautiful young American girl breaks down his resistance (when he'll probably overwhelm her with a headlong courtship), Hollywood's newest find will pursue his career on the screen, beginning at once with the title role in "The Spider."

On the side, he'll study singing; read his favorite authors, Stefan Zweig and Somerset Maugham, plus whatever best sellers his studio may acquire; entertain his circle of writer, painter and actor friends, and have—as he's always had—a PERFECTLY WONDERFUL TIME!

It's a new Kotex "extra"!

To use silver correctly, would you—

☐ Start from the outside
☐ Start from the inside
☐ Catch as catch can

Fumble for the right fork or spoon? Not if you follow this simple rule: Start from the outside, work in toward your plate. You're fluster-proof when you can skip social errors. And you'll make no mistake on "trying days", when you choose the poise-preserving sanitary napkin . . . Kotex. Truth is, Kotex gives you confidence through comfort. Because Kotex is made to stay soft while wearing . . . so different from pads that just "feel" soft at first touch. There's no roping, no wadding up, with Kotex.

If he stood you up last night—

☐ Should you blow your top
☐ Be a tearful earful
☐ Bide your time

Tears or temper won't teach him. Bide your time 'til he calls again, then give out with the brush-off. Keeping calm wins many a victory . . . over "calendar" jitters, too. With Kotex, see how serenely you can sail through difficult days! For you're sure the flat tapered ends of Kotex don't show. YES, MY DARLING DAUGHTER

I saved all my old evening dresses for the children to dress up in. My eldest child, Sidney was a great fan of Douglas Fairbanks, Sr., so I had copies made of Fairbanks' "Robin Hood" and "Mark of Zorro" costumes for him. Sometimes, when I came home from an afternoon party, I would find "Robin Hood" sitting on the front fence and a play going on inside the house, with the children dressed in everything from the dining room curtains to my new Easter hat.

I think the first play with a grown-up audience that the children were in, was an adaptation of A. A. Milne's Poems "When We Were Very Young." Sidney was a guard at Buckingham Palace in a very snappy uniform, with my old muff strapped on his head for a busby. I remember he said, "Well, Mum—once an actor, always an actor." Phyllis distinguished herself in the part of Mary Jane in the poem called "Rice Pudding." The first verse goes:

"What is the matter with Mary Jane
She's crying with all her might and main
And she won't eat her dinner—rice pudding again—
What is the matter with Mary Jane?"

Phyllis was a natural for this part because she loved to cry.

Phyllis was seven when she told me of her decision to be an actress when she grew up. I told her that if she really wanted to be one, she probably would be; and I would do all in my power to help her. I think the reason for her decision at this time was that she had just been in a play called "Joseph and his Brethren." I don't remember whether she was Joseph or one of the brothers. I do remember that there was a stage wait when one of the characters failed to appear in answer to his cue. With perfect stage presence, Phyllis filled in with a long speech, made up entirely out of her own head. It kept the audience entertained until the missing actor was found.

The next few years were spent just in growing up. There were boys, of course. I have always laughed about her first boy friend—he is still a good friend. After school she skated at a place called Deerings Oaks. One day she came home furious. "That old Lloyd . . ." she said, "Every time I skate by him he trips me up." She was so upset I became angry, too, and telephoned Lloyd's mother.

"Mrs. Thaxter," she laughed, "Lloyd is perfectly crazy about Phyllis and the only way he can get her to pay any attention to him, is to knock her down!"

These cave man tactics evidently worked, because Lloyd was the boy friend for a long time.

We live in Portland only in the winter. In the summer, we move to a cottage on Cushing's Island in Casco Bay. I have to tell you about the island because it is one of the things that has made Phyllis the outdoor person she is. It was there she learned to swim, ride, play tennis and sail.

Each summer, the day that the Thaxters moved from one house to the other was quite a sight for the neighbors. My husband's hobby was raising incubator chicks in the cellar, so we had several crates of chickens to move. We had a cow, so the children would have fresh milk; and in winter kept it in a shed in the backyard with the kids' pony—Dickie. Of course there was a dog and sometimes a canary. You can imagine the excitement the day we moved. We had to round up the children, who were always somewhere else when we wanted them; get one man to lead the cow through the streets and another the pony. Somehow or other, we never failed to make it.

Phyllis began her career in earnest at seventeen when she became an apprentice at the Ogunquit Summer Theatre. The story of her career until she played Ellen Lawson in "Thirty Seconds Over Tokyo" has appeared before in Movieland. Her ambition now is to be a really good moving picture actress.

Here are some of the things that I told her out of my own experience that I thought would help her in her career.

1. No one should embark on a theatrical career who has not plenty of courage—what the boys call "guts." You are not always on top of the heap. There will be lots of hard times coming to you and you will need to be brave and believe in yourself to take them.
2. There are only two kinds of people in the world—good people and bad people. They are in every profession, the church, society, the theatre and in business. Learn to discriminate between the good and the bad. Seek out the good; avoid the bad.
3. Drinking and acting do not go together. No actress who drank ever got anywhere.
4. Work hard on the parts you hate. The parts you love will take care of themselves.
5. No producer wants anything from you but the knowledge that you will make money for him. You are part of an industry. If the public will buy what you have to sell, that is all he cares about.
6. If you put yourself in the public eye—as you do if you are a motion picture actress—you must be willing to accept the public's criticism as well as their praise.

Last November Phyllis married the man of her dreams, Capt. James Thomas Aubrey, Jr. of the Army Air Force. He is everything any girl or any parents could desire: handsome, clever, good and sweet. His background is very much the same as hers. He is one of four brothers from a happy, fine American home. At Exeter and Princeton he was one of the stars of the football team. Jim wants Phyllis to keep on with her work. He believes they can fit their lives into their business—not their business into their lives.

At present she is on suspension from M-G-M because in December their child will be born. She believes she can be a successful wife and mother and a successful movie star. With Jimmie's love and help, I think she can be both!

ADVICE FOR ABUSED SKIN

DON'T BE AFRAID AND STOP WORRYING NOW ABOUT EXTERNAL SKIN TROUBLES. FOLLOW THESE EASY DIRECTIONS.

By Betty Memphis

Have you ever stopped to realize that the leading screen stars that you admire, as well as the beautiful models who have lovely, soft white skin, were all born just like you with a lovely smooth skin?

Almost everyone can have a natural, healthy, normal complexion which is in itself beauty. All you must do is follow a few simple rules. Models and screen stars must give their skin special attention. So should you, because everyone looks at your face. Your social success may depend upon your being good looking, because a lovely skin may be a short cut to success in love and business. Your pleasure is worth it; and you owe it to yourself to give your complexion a chance to be healthy and beautiful.

Medical science gives us the truth about a lovely skin. There are small specks of dust in the air all the time. When these little specks, which are in the air get into an open pore in your skin, they can in time cause the pore to become larger and more susceptible to dust and infection. These open pores begin to form blackheads which become infected and bring you the misery of pimples, irritations or blemishes. When you neglect your skin by not giving it the necessary care it requires, you leave yourself wide open for external skin miseries. When you know that your skin is smooth, white and fine, you have more confidence and it helps improve your personality, and it helps improve your entire well being. A flawless skin is priceless, yet it costs you only a few pennies daily to keep it normal, natural, healthy and lovely. Many women never realize or even suspect that the difference between a glamorous complexion and an ordinary one may be caused by having blackheads and pimples.

The proper attention with the double Viderm treatment may mean the difference between enjoying the confidence a fine skin gives you or the embarrassment of an ugly abused skin. The double Viderm treatment is a formula prescribed by a doctor, and costs you only a few cents daily. This treatment consists of two jars. One jar contains Viderm Skin Cleanser, a jelly-like formula which penetrates and acts as an antiseptic upon your pores. After you use this special Viderm Skin Cleanser, apply the Viderm Fortified Medicated Skin Cream. You rub this in, leaving an almost invisible protective covering for the surface of your skin.

This double treatment has worked wonders for so many cases of abused skin, it must help you, too, or your money will be refunded. Use it for ten days. You have everything to gain and nothing to lose. It is a guaranteed treatment. Enjoy it.

Use your double Viderm treatment every day until your skin is as smooth and clear as you may want it. Then, use it only once a week to remove stale make-up and dust specks that infect your pores and to aid in healing external irritations. When you prevent blackheads, you prevent externally caused skin miseries and pimples. While your two jars and the doctor's directions are on the way to you, be sure to give your face enough attention and wash it as often as is necessary. Wash with warm water and then cleanse with water as cold as you can stand, in order to freshen, stimulate and help close your pores. After you receive everything, read your directions carefully, and then go right to it with these two fine formulas.

Just mail your name and address to Betty Memphis, care of The New York Skin Laboratory, 206 Division Street, Dept. 23J, New York City 2, New York. By return mail you will receive both of the Viderm formulas, with full directions for using Viderm Skin Cleanser and Viderm Fortified Medicated Skin Cream. The doctor's directions and both jars are packed in a sealed carton, safety sealed. On delivery, pay two dollars plus postage. If you wish, you can save the postage fee by mailing your two dollars with your letter. If you are in any way dissatisfied, your money will be cheerfully refunded. Both of the formulas you use have been fully tested and proven, and are reliable for you. They must help you or your treatments cost nothing. After you have received your Viderm, if you have any questions to ask concerning abused skin, just send them in.—ADV.

could accompany her parents as far as Chicago. From Chicago onward, the itinerary involved a series of arduous one-night stands, but they decided that Young A. would enjoy at least that much railroading.

They had been in their Chicago Hotel something like five hours when it became apparent that Miss Alice Harris knew every bellboy, every maid, most of the waitresses in the dining room, and the housekeeper on terms of mutual admiration. Currently, a good many of these people keep up a steady correspondence with Alice, Jr.

On the day the curly-headed youngster was to leave her father and mother and proceed westward with her nurse, Alice and Phil took Junior to the station. They had assured her that they would be in the next drawing room, so she was content to settle down for a nap "until the train pulled out."

Both of them knew that their daughter was in expert hands; they realized that they would see her within two months' time; she was in perfect health, they were in perfect health—there was no reason for even so much as a moment's qualm.

But as Mr. and Mrs. Harris hurried down the platform, away from the train and toward their car, they suddenly turned to one another and, swallowing, tried to say something . . . anything. Both of them had to blink back hot tears before Phil said, "We're a couple of sentimental saps. Here . . ." and he handed Alice his handkerchief. But he used it himself before he restored it to his pocket.

As for the cause of this dissolving: she awakened refreshed from her nap, asked where Mommy and Daddy were, was told that they had to stay in Chicago, but that she was to have the fun of going on, like a big girl, to California. Accepting this explanation with sunny composure, she wriggled into her clothing and went for a tour of the train. The door of the drawing room down the hall from her own accommodations was standing open, so Miss Harris strolled in, chubby hands behind back, dimpled face tipped upward so she could study the nice lady who was reading a book.

"Where's your man?" asked Alice, Jr. without preamble.

The lady put down her book, chuckled, and said that—much as she regretted the fact—she didn't have a man.

Alice, Jr. shook her head in condolence. "Well, then," she pursued, "where's your baby?"

The lady, rapidly developing an inferiority complex, was forced to admit that she had no baby either.

"Well, I'll come back again some time," said Alice, withdrawing with the air of having stumbled upon a creature totally different from anyone she had ever met.

In a nearby roomette, Miss Harris made friends with a man. "Where is your lady?" she wanted to know. He said his lady was in Los Angeles with his boy and his girl.

"You're NICE!" beamed the pint-sized Emily Post, delighted to meet such a proper gentleman.

These brief conversations clearly reveal Alice Jr's concept of an ordered universe: it consists of a family in which there is a man, a lady, oneself, and a baby. In applying her rule of thumb to the passengers, each one of whom she met or tried to meet before the trip was over, she found that most of them fell into this satisfactory category. To this day, a great many of her train acquaintances still write to Alice. As things stand now, her daughter's social committments are keeping Alice, Sr. in such close association with a pen, that writer's cramp threatens.

Allan Jones finished successful p.o. tour then he and Mrs. J. left for USO overseas trouping.

In the evening, Alice, Jr. encourages her mother—when there are no letters to be answered—to indulge in a session of nursery rhymes. This has been going on for almost two years now, because demi-Alice is keenly intelligent and she has been learning jingles ever since she learned to talk. She has now reached the jocular state. When called upon to recite some of the traditional favorites, she stops her family in their tracks by adding modern improvements, to wit:

"Tom, Tom the Piper's son, stole a pig and away did run.
Fee, Fie, Fo, Fun! I smell the blood of an EnglishMUN!"

or

"Little Jack Horner sat in a corner, Eating his curds and whey.
Leave them alone and they'll come home, Never no more to stray."

And then her round cheeks grow rosy with laughter.

Someone on the set asked Alice, Sr. if she had heard a certain quizz program. "I live with a quizz program," she smiled. "I can't take them on the radio, too."

No matter what anyone tells Alice, Jr., she is at that stage of development in which her instant reaction is "Why?" Why do birds sing? Why does grass grow? Why is fire hot?

"Why is the refrigerator cold?" she demanded of the cook one morning.

"Because cold is good for things—it keeps them fresh so they don't spoil," said the cook, a patient soul.

"A Nurse Needs to be SLIM..."

—says Miss Louise Boor of Martinsburg, W. Va.

"—and with the DuBarry Success Course I changed from a size 20 to a size 12!"

Look closely at these two photographs of Miss Louise Boor, registered nurse, and you can see why she writes, "I can't tell you how much happiness and vitality I have gained since taking the DuBarry Success Course. A nurse . . . or any other woman who has to be on her feet a lot . . . needs to be slim, for her own comfort! Now, not only am I comfortable but I enjoy everything . . . my work, my food, and even—believe it or not—my exercises!"

On the Left, Miss Boor photographed when she started the Course. Weight, 152 pounds. On the Right, Miss Boor upon completing the Course. Weight, 125. (P.S. She now weighs 115!)

"The DuBarry way is a safe and sane way to lose weight," says Miss Boor. "Learning to 'eat as a beauty eats' was a complete re-education for me. Best of all, the new food habits 'stick with you'; I have lost my taste for fattening foods altogether. My skin, hair and nails are healthier and nicer than they've ever been . . . and I wouldn't give up that daily few minutes in the Beauty Angle position for anything in the world!"

HOW ABOUT YOU?

Do you consider yourself an "exceptional" case? So did Miss Boor! And look what she was able to accomplish for herself through the Success Course at home.

The Course is sensible . . . it's practical, for even the busiest people . . . and it's individual. The methods are exactly the same as those taught by Ann Delafield at the Richard Hudnut Salon in New York. From an analysis of your measurements, your coloring, your "type," the Course shows you how to bring your figure to normal whether you're over or under weight . . . how to style your hair, how to select becoming clothes, how to use make-up in the right way for you.

Miss
Mrs. ______________________

Street ______________________

City ______________ Zone No., if any ________ State ________

An hour later she found the following items ensconced in the refrigerator, chilled against spoiling: one egg beater, a pair of salt & pepper shakers, two second-hand grapefruit shells, one tired orange from the dooryard grove, and a doll.

Shortly before demi-Alice's third birthday, which took place May 19, she let it be known that she was deeply interested in two gifts: a tricycle and a blackboard. Her local friends, she said, owned and operated these possessions as recreational items, and she felt that it was high time she was placed on neighborhood par. These were not her exact words, of course, but the meaning was there. Incidentally she speaks no baby talk aside from struggling determinedly with the sound of "th." She is inclined to pronounce this sound "s." Sample conversation: "I sink sat man is sinner san sat oser man."

So, for her birthday she received several little dresses, a bathing suit (large enough to blindfold a Pekingese), a blackboard, and a tricycle. Phyllis, her running mate, was already the ardent owner of a scooter, so the sisters promptly staged a series of races. For a time, any adult attempt to cross the living room, dining room, or kitchen was fraught with peril.

Miss Alice, herself, took several bad tumbles. Riding up and down the driveway, she decided to use the space sidewards instead of lengthwise, and overshot the field, landing in a culvert. She sat still for a long time while her mother watched ruefully from a convenient window. Then Missy struggled to her feet, brushed herself off, spoke a few eloquent words to the tricycle, and returned it to the driveway. She apparently was unwilling to cry for fear the tricycle would be taken away.

Alice, Jr.'s interests are not entirely athletic. When she was extremely small, her mother began to teach her the value of money. She was allowed to hold her own pennies when making a minor purchase, and when she set up an outcry for some inappropriate object, Alice, Sr. explained that the object cost so-and-so number of pennies. The sum was usually so astronomical that sub-deb Alice instantly withdrew into a mathematical trance, ignoring the erstwhile object of her interest. While she has a penny bank that jingles satisfactorily when shaken by a junior financier, Miss Alice is not one to put trust in a single investment medium.

One day when Alice, Sr. was running the vacuum she heard an odd metallic sound flick into the nozzle. Investigation revealed three pennies. "Phil must have dropped them from his pocket," she surmised.

"Oh no," corrected her elder daughter, "those are mine. I hid them under the rug." On occasion she also has hidden coins under the paper covering of closet shelves, behind cushions on the lounge, and under the chest of drawers.

The little lady recently discovered the feminine delight of cosmetics. She was so taken with her mother's lipstick that Alice, Sr. bought a stick of colorless pomade—explaining that this was made especially for little girls—and installed it in demi-Alice's purse. Also in the purse is a diminutive compact boasting as large a powder puff as space will permit. When this small package of feminine vanity goes shopping with her mother and her younger sister (not yet interested), Alice may be seen to open her compact, scrutinize herself critically, then apply pomade and a generous slapping of a powderless puff.

Her use of cologne is phenomenal. One afternoon she came sailing into the room where Alice, Sr. was lengthening a junior dress, and sat down with a great sigh. Within a few minutes, there was more fragrance in the room than there was air. "Darling, have you been using Mother's cologne?" asked Mrs. Harris.

"Just a dash," said her daughter. "A teeny dash."

Her other depredation in her mother's room consists of trying on Alice, Sr.'s high-heeled slippers. The small lady already has learned to balance herself and will stroll around by the hour—making wooden shoe sounds—but feeling very elegant indeed.

Alice and Phil are both excellent swimmers; they go in every day, of the year, rain or shine, and last summer young Alice was allowed to join them. She rode on Phil's back, and Alice taught her to float. When the two older members of the family were ready to leave the pool, Miss H. wasn't inclined toward a towel at all. On several occasions she set up a masterly howl.

This year she will be big enough to learn to swim, and Phil intends to employ a professional to coach his aquatic daughter. Most little girls love their daddies, naturally, but the way Junior feels about her daddy is the way Scotch tape feels about a book page, which is to say that she really sticks to him. She sits on his lap when he reads; she follows him when he fusses around the car or attends to some household chore; when she sees him coming home at night, she stands at the window yelling, "That's my Daddy. Here comes my Daddy! OH, MY DADDY!"

Since babyhood she has listened to Phil talk to her on the telephone when he called Alice; for one of the holidays, a fan of Alice's sent little Alice a rather efficient toy telephone, complete with movable dial. Not so long ago, Alice, Sr. overheard her daughter carrying on a pseudo-conversation with the grocery. "I'll have some potatoes, and a loaf of bread, and a pound of butter, and a roast. What! You have no roast today. Oh, dear! Now, what shall I cook?"

As soon as the war is over (and by that time Phyllis will probably be old enough to participate, too) Alice and Phil plan to go horesbacking in a family group. They own several horses at present, but the mounts are all out in pasture. The army long ago took over the area through which the nearest bridle paths to the Harris home ran, and the problem was complicated by the fact that it was impossible to get help to care for the horses. But when the bridle paths are open again and competent grooms are available, the Harris family will go cantering through the calendulas.

In Hollywood, there is a photographic organization that contracts to prepare a dosier of the childhood of a family's progeny. Once a year an ace still cameraman comes to the home and spends an entire day with the children. He snaps them before they have awakened in the morning; he takes candids while they brush their teeth and dress themselves. He catches them in typical poses while they are having breakfast, and afterward when they are playing, entertaining themselves.

He was jubilant over the most recent series he made of the Misses Harris. "So natural, so unaffected," he said. About that time Missy Alice sidled up, giving him a vivid smile. "Do you want me to change my dress once more?" she inquired.

The fact that Baby Alice and her small sister are two of the most ingratiating children in Hollywood is easily understood when one knows how wise and perceptive their mother is. Sometimes it is easier to gauge a girl's maternal virtues by observing her with other children rather than with her own.

During the making of "Fallen Angel," the troupe spent one Sunday working in a Hollywood bank vault; when the needed scenes had been stowed in the cans, Dana said to Alice, "I wish you'd come out to my place for as long as you can spare from your own youngsters. I'd like to have you meet David" (his son by a previous marriage who is eight) "and Kathy." Kathy is only a few months younger than Alice, Jr.

When Alice, Sr. arrived, Kathy was still upstairs, being dressed after her nap, but David was there and made friends instantly. Alice was seated on the lounge, her arm around David's waist and David's arm around her neck when Kathy appeared at the door.

She took in the scene with a small, furious glance. Her beloved David was in the arms of a strange woman. It was more than a devoted heart could stand. Striding across the room in hot, quick steps she planted herself before Alice. "Go home," she ordered.

Kathy's mother and Dana almost lost their chins in amazement. As they were collecting themselves, preparing to improve the manners of their small daughter with dire methods, Alice said quickly in an adult aside, "I was mad about my own brothers. I think someone was shocked by my pose with someone's brother." To David she said, "Is this Kathy, your little sister who is so pretty?"

David didn't get the play, but he swallowed—glad in man-like fashion to see the situation eased—and nodded. By that time Kathy had been whisked into the hallway and chided for being so naughty. "Come back, Kathy, and let me tell you about my brothers," called Alice.

A small, tear-streaked face moved around the door like a sad moon sliding over a dark hill. David, she noticed, was sitting across the room from the strange lady, and the lady was motioning to Kathy. Apparently the lady wasn't mad. Slowly she lagged across the carpet, a lower lip preceding her by almost an inch.

But when she stood before Alice, and Alice smiled down at her with comradely understanding, Kathy said between two sobs, "I'm sorry. I'm a good girl now. You stay."

Alice stayed—to hold Kathy on her lap and to tell the penitent Miss Andrews all about her soon-to-be friends, Alice Jr. and Phyllis Harris.

But then, Alice Faye Harris is such a happy chappy that she spreads glow everywhere.

"Too old?" was Ann Harding's answer. "I have a daughter of my own who is almost grown up!"

And this frankness is so consistent with the story told now about how it was that she walked out of the studio, eight years ago—billing: "screen star, retired."

It was when she was entering what Ann calls "the second awkward stage for actresses"—the first, of course, being adolescence, when the actress is no longer a child yet not quite a young lady. "It's the same kind of an adjustment when an actress is getting into her thirties," Miss Harding declares. "She's too old—or at least she should be—to play romantic young things; but too young to play middle-aged parts and mothers. Hollywood just doesn't seem to realize these in-between women exist."

Ann's studio had wanted her to continue to play romantic young things. She thought it was ridiculous to do so. They argued. She rebelled. They remained adamant, so she quit and went to England to do "Camille."

Just at this point, however, MGM announced they were going to do "Camille," with Greta Garbo. And that ended that!

Ann could have demanded her salary and refused to make a picture, since the British studio was at fault for not staking claim to the camellia lady. But Ann Harding doesn't do things that way. She made another picture instead, one which she thought would be a completely routine job. "Love From a Stranger" was the title, and it turned out a sleeper—i.e. a surprise hit.

With that finished, Ann had no further business in London. It just so happened, however, that she had met a young musician by the name of Werner Janssen, world-famous symphony conductor and rated the foremost interpreter of Sibelius. This meeting is pertinent and mentionable, in that it explains her wanting to prolong her stay in England, and being interested when an English theatrical producer approached her to play Bernard Shaw's "Candida." She was interested, that is, until one morning when she was reading the London Times—with a critical review therein written by Charles Morgan, novelist and critic-authority, tearing a foreign actress to shreds with uncomplimentary verbiage for having dared to play Shakespeare's "Anthony and Cleopatra," the night before. Reading the brutally witty description of the woman's accent, Ann muttered, "They aren't going to do that to me!" She wasn't going to lay herself open to attack as an American actress with an American accent, playing Shaw in his own bailiwick.

So she commenced searching for an American play. She was considering the possibility of reviving "Holiday"—and considering it with some misgivings, let us add, for the troubles of the rich seemed singularly unimportant and badly timed, with war clouds already collecting over Europe. It was at this point, however, that she met the critical Charles Morgan.

"What is a British accent?" she asked, taking a conversational opportunity at a dinner party. "What is typical? There are six well-educated

IF YOU "HATE EXERCISE" AND "LOVE TO EAT"—

Here's a New Lazy-Way to REDUCE -Quickly and Safely

10-Day Miracle Diet—Lose 10 Pounds in 10 Days!—and Still Eat 3 Delicious, Satisfying Meals a Day; Not Do a Bit of Extra Exercise!

PARTIAL CONTENTS

Showing HOW This Book Takes Off the Pounds and the Bulges

I. THE SURE WAY TO REDUCE

The "Lazy Way" to Lose Weight. How you can reduce quickly and safely—no exercise, no hunger pangs, no drugs, girdles or gadgets.

How Much Do You Want to Reduce—How Fast? Your choice of diets that reduce you rapidly or gradually, as you wish.

Exercise Is a Practical Joker. Why exercise alone is a poor way to reduce.

No Drugs, No Sweat, No Charge. Why you can ignore costly sweat baths, reducing drugs, dangerous fasting etc.

Counting Calories Isn't Enough. "Galloping calories" that slim you faster.

II. WHY YOU DON'T GET SLIM

Coffee, Tea, Cocoa, Milk, Water, Soft Drinks. How beverages affect weight control—with some surprises!

Cocktail Calories. The strange role of alcohol in building fat.

III. YOU CRACK DOWN ON CALORIES

How Proteins Help You Get Slim. Reducing without hunger or sacrificing vitality.

The Simple Arithmetic of Reducing. Easy way to get your calorie quota whether you're a housewife, war plant worker, stenographer, etc.

10-Day Miracle Diet. Safe, easy way to lose a pound a day for 10 days. Daily menus.

Heartier Diets. 3 daily diets for losing 10 pounds a month. How to substitute other foods you like better. 2 "STAY Slim" diets.

The Fastest SAFE Slimming Program. Diet safeguards that make speedy weight reduction safe.

Two-Minute Calorie-Counting Table. At-a-glance chart showing kinds of calories in 26 meat dishes, 4 kinds of milk, 13 fish, 10 cheese and egg servings, 41 vegetables, 29 fruits, 19 breads, cereals, 16 pies, pastries, 17 fats, sugars, syrups, 7 nuts, 11 soups, 18 "little things", 15 beverages.

Eat as Often as You Want. Exploding the no-food-between-meals myth and the nothing-but-coffee-for-breakfast error.

IV. YOU COUNT YOUR VITAMINS THE EASY WAY

You Needn't Pay Extra for Vitamins. How to get all you need from foods alone.

Your Daily Vitamin Needs. Complete table showing units of A, B1, C, G, D needed for Adults, Adolescents, Children, Infants, Pregnant Women.

V. EAT FOR BEAUTY, CHARM AND—YES, REALLY—SEX APPEAL

No Pep, No Joy, No Friends. Is this you? How you can remedy it—at the dinner table!

Gray Hair, Baldness and the Diet. What science has learned about diet effects on hair.

Skin You Love to Touch. How Vitamin A and other elements promote clear, beautiful skin.

Teeth You Love to Brush. Food, for healthy teeth.

Diet Cure for Constipation. "Scare" warnings vs. truth.

VI. EATING FOR "OOMPH"

Food and Glamour. Relation of what you eat to personal appearance, vitality, sex appeal.

Anemia Wins No Love Prizes. Red-blooded "romance" minerals: how to get them.

YES, it's true—this new 10-Day MIRACLE DIET—thanks to latest discoveries in weight control! Now—WHETHER A MAN OR A WOMAN—you can lose 10 pounds in 10 days, 30 pounds or more within 3 months—comfortably, pleasantly, healthfully. WITHOUT strenuous, difficult exercises. WITHOUT dangerous pills or drugs. WITHOUT sweating in steam baths or spending money for massages. WITHOUT suffering the dizziness, nausea, and torture of self-imposed starvation!

You'll eat three delicious, fully-satisfying meals a day, including a big breakfast. You'll be allowed to "snack" between meals. This new scientific lazy-way—described in the fascinating book, "The New Way to Eat and Get Slim," by Donald G. Cooley—brings you a slimmer, more attractive figure, and also greater health and beauty! Your skin becomes smoother, clearer . . . your hair softer, more lustrous . . . your eyes more sparkling. You have more energy, pep, get-up-and-go.

What Is This Amazing Secret?

The whole secret lies in your food—not just how much, but also which kinds. And it isn't (as you may have imagined) merely a matter of "calories." It's the kind of calories that makes the difference! Some foods are high in fat-producing calories. Others are high in energy-producing calories. If you merely cut down the amount of food—without being sure to get more energy-calories than fat-calories—you don't lose weight at all. Your body simply "slows down"—and continues to store fat!

Many people think they know about calories. But do they? Suppose you had to choose between a large glass of orange juice and half a sirloin steak? You would probably reach for the orange juice. Actually, the steak would give you 15 times as many precious ENERGY-calories. Yet the total number of calories in each is roughly the same!

What This Book Can Do For You

Mr. Cooley's book shows you, quickly and clearly, how to apply this simple principle of selecting energy-calories instead of fat-calories. It gives you a "10-Day Miracle Diet" by which you lose a pound a day for 10 days; a diet for losing 10 pounds in 30 days; a "tapering off" diet for losing 8½ pounds in 30 days; and a "Stay-Slim" diet, so that when you reach the right weight, you STAY there.

You don't have to adhere rigidly to these diets, either. The book's Substitution Table gives you dozens of meats, and other foods you may eat instead. The partial contents, on this page, suggests only a few of the ways this book goes about improving your figure, health, appearance, and general disposition.

more information below (about Tampax)

Tampax has grown to be a famous name but many women still may not have clearly in mind just what advantages there are in this method of monthly sanitary protection. Here are the facts:

1 Tampax is made of pure surgical cotton, very absorbent and compressed to a small, dainty size. Tampax is worn internally, in accordance with the well-known medical principle of "internal absorption."

2 The insertion is quickly and easily performed by the use of a patented disposable applicator—so dainty that your hands need not touch the Tampax.

3 No belts, pins or external "pads" are required at any time. Tampax can cause no bulges or ridges under the clothing—and no odor! Sanitary deodorant becomes unnecessary . . . And Tampax may be worn in tub or shower!

Drug stores and notion counters carry Tampax in 3 absorbency-sizes to suit individual needs as well as early and "waning" days . . . Remember, a whole month's average supply will slip right into an ordinary purse! Tampax Incorporated, Palmer, Mass.

English men and women sitting around this table, and no two of you speak in the same way!"

To this, Mr. Morgan had no answer. And before the evening was over, it was the mighty critic himself who was urging Ann to accept the "Candida" offer.

"You'll be perfect for it," he insisted. And with the assurance that she had nothing to fear from the London Times notices, Ann went into rehearsal.

"They were wonderful, those rehearsals!" she says. Shaw, himself, came and played all the parts, as he always does at rehearsals of his plays. And when the director remonstrated that the actors could not play as he did—because it would be too hammy—Shaw replied: "That's what's wrong with the theater today! Not enough ham!"

"Candida" toured the provinces, and Ann wondered at the stories she had heard of British reserve. "The general public is well-behaved," she says, "but the press endangers life, limb and sanity!"

She found the English "wonderful people," and loved them. (She loved Mr. Janssen, too, and married him—between performances at Edinburgh and Brighton.)

"While on the stage in England," Ann tells now, "I was careful to pronounce all the words in the British way, when there was a definite variance from the American pronunciation." But on Eugene, the young poet in the play, she met a snag. Two thirds of the cast said the accent should be on the first syllable, one third voted on the last. Ann took the majority opinion and said "Eugene."

The play had a brilliantly successful opening in London. The following morning the critics' enthusiasm for Miss Harding's performance went beyond all bounds. And the only reference made to her American accent was that she mispronounced the poet's name. It should have been "Eugene"!

While the play was still at the peak of its long run, Ann turned Candida over to Diana Wynward, and made a honeymoon to Finland. Mr. Janssen conducted the symphony orchestra of Helsingfors—with Sibelius in the audience. And from then on, for the next few years, Ann's life was entirely devoted to her husband and music.

She accompanied Mr. Janssen on tours of the United States and South America, and Hollywood was the thing farthest from her mind. Until this country went to war.

Then Mr. Janssen decided to settle in Los Angeles, where he has his own orchestra, and Ann Harding returned to the screen. She returned clothed in the aura of a woman who has found her life, her marriage, and her daughter, eminently satisfying and complete. And why not? There's contentment and work, "with all the old strain of being a star left out!"

There's a glow that comes into her face when she speaks of her husband. There's the constant contact with music he has brought into her life; and music is food and drink to Ann, who has played the piano since she was a child. "But never in front of anyone!" she exclaims. "I get the most terrible stage fright if I try to." Let it be known, however, that on maid's day out, when there's no one within yelling distance of the house, Ann Harding plays everything under the sun, just for herself, and has a thoroughly enjoyable time.

There's the clearly apparent pleasure it gives Ann to be able to say that because of her own knowledge of music, "I seem to have been able to help my husband in many ways."

There's the completely informal life that the Janssens mutually enjoy, for Ann has never been one for chi-chi, or pomp and circumstance. Even when it comes to clothes, she says, "I've never been interested. I have always just delivered the body, and let the studio designers cover it any way they wish."

And then there's Janie! Not a Joyce Reynolds, fictional Janie; but a Janie of flesh and blood—Ann's own lovely daughter. "And Janie would make it impossible for me to lie about my age, even if I wanted to," Ann laughs, "since she's now in her last year of high school, and towers over me at five feet seven!"

In that laugh you can hear the pleasure, amusement, devotion, and occasional exasperation of all intelligent mothers of adolescent girls. The mothers who sometimes wonder if girls that age all live in a state of semi-coma, and who find it necessary, from time to time, to lay down the law. "I did, last summer," says Ann.

She approached her attractive and definitely non-swooning daughter with parental sternness. "There's going to be no lying in bed until noon this vacation," she warned. "And no going to movies every afternoon. You're going to get a job! I don't care what it is, just so it's something that you have to do every day of the week".

Ann told Janie how she'd heard over the radio that the telephone company was badly in need of operators; or she could go to work as a salesgirl at one of the department stores.

So, Janie went to work. But she took none of her mother's suggestions, proving herself to be an extremely independent young lady. She studied to be a Volunteer Nurse's Aide, and then worked for five days each week at the Good Samaritan Hospital in Los Angeles. When she came home at night she would fall on her bed with all her clothes on, completely exhausted. "I could hardly bear to wake her for dinner," her mother says. And when Ann suggested to Janie that she take a holiday for the week before she went back to school, Janie refused. Ann's great pride is surely pardonable!

Janie isn't sure what she wants to do, and at the moment is without a definite ambition. Ann finds this somewhat bewildering, since she herself was always certain that she wanted to be an actress. She worked for this with clear sighted purpose from the days of her first acting lessons at Bryn Mawr, and on into parts at the Provincetown and Hedgerow Theaters that led directly to Broadway and success. But Janie has no interest at all in acting. Her attitude has undoubtedly been conditioned by her lifelong contact with the theater and pictures, and the people thereof. The life contains none of the glamour it held for her mother, who grew up in the Army, and whose father, the late General George Grandt Gatley, threatened to disown her if she embraced such a disgraceful profession.

Ann thought perhaps Janie would decide to be a nurse, after her work as a Nurse's Aide, but Janie brushed that off with the remark that nursing had no future. "And then!" her mother laughs, "she turned around and announced maybe she'd be a model!

"Of course, there's a great future in that!" was Ann's comment. "Especially with your awful slouch! Stand up straight!" And a gentle whack on the back apparently wrote finis to that ambition. But in spite of worrying from time to time about her daughter's non-existent ambition, she's inclined to agree with Janie that some of the girls who want to be things like physicists and electrical engineers are "awful drips".

Janie is in boarding school this year—the Douglas School at Pebble Beach, California. Ann finds it rather embarrassing to report that now she's away from home, Janie's grades are better than ever before; the reason being, Ann is convinced, that in Pebble Beach it is no longer possible to carry on three-hour telephone conversations with her girl friends each and every night!

Besides Ann's activities as a wife, actress and mother, she has a "hobby" which is the most unique in the whole of Hollywood—namely, Bookkeeping! And if you feel inclined to yelp with pain at the very thought, Ann goes off into such an ecstacy of enthusiasm for the pastime, she almost convinces you.

"People just don't understand," she says. "Numbers are wonderful! They're just like Bach. They always come out right. And," she adds, still more fervently, "there is something really beautiful about a double entry!"

As a result of this remarkable passion, Ann handles all the business affairs of the Janssen household. Once a month she settles down for an orgy of fun with the books. "You don't ever need a budget if you keep your own accounts. If the figures are right there before you, you know where the money's going. If one column gets too long, you quickly put a stop to so much spending in that direction."

But as for carrying her mania further, and making out her own income tax returns . . . "No!" she shudders, "I'm pretty good at figures—but after all, I'm not a genius!"

THEY SAY—

Rudy sang at a big Hollywood fiesta. Gene sat at the far end of the room, regarding him with interest. When he finished, he sauntered down the applauding room. "I really must—" he laughed—"meet the woman I'm so mad about!" He indicated Gene.

It was a pretty scene. Sid Skolsky and other writers, remarking it, wrote some readable paragraphs about it. Seeing Gene in a spotlight, her studio hurriedly cast her in a big production and her career began to zoom. No romance, understand. The two are now married to two other people.

Once upon a time, Josef von Sternberg, then a mere nobody trying to get a start, had an idea for a picture and no money. He canvassed the industry for a loan, and wound up, after many disappointments, with thirty or forty thousand dollars from the late Doug Fairbanks, Sr., and Charles Chaplin. That's not much money to make a picture, but it's a lot to lose, and both genial money-lenders woke up next day and wondered what had got into them to lend it.

"How do we know he can make a picture?" they worried. The more they thought of it, the worse they felt. A Bright Lad in the Fairbanks' office said: "Leave it to me."

Like a wind rising in the night, a whispering campaign went the rounds: This new chap, Sternberg, or whatever his name is, is a genius! His little picture is going to be a masterpiece! It's hot! It's new! It's better than good! I wish I had a piece of it. It'll make millions!

It didn't make millions, but it didn't lose money. The backers got their money back and Josef von Sternberg was labeled Genius.

Two decades ago, Ronald Colman came to Hollywood. Close-mouthed then, as now, he didn't say he was married—in fact, he didn't say anything—and Hollywood took him for a very desirable bachelor. Invited to big parties as escort for this star or that, his name was linked with theirs in newspapers and fan magazines.

Ronald was escorting Lois Wilson to a box-party at a local theater, when a woman astounded the audience by pointing him out and crying: "That's my husband!" Jack Holt took Lois home; Ronald vanished. The woman was actually Mrs. Colman, from whom the actor had long been separated. Gossip items in fan magazines had brought her across a sea and a continent to try to make up their differences. She chose the wrong method and years later they were divorced.

Barbara Hale, RKO lovely, was assigned as one of the young hostesses for a producer's party. She found herself at a table with a wealthy visiting fireman. A columnist, thinking to do her a favor, rumored that the two were "excited" about one another.

Barbara's fiancé, fighting in the South Pacific, received the paper with the item by airmail. His next letter observed that other men had told him how quickly girls forget, that "a woman's a two-face, a worrisome thing," but he'd never thought Barbara was like that! Barbara was in anguish for weeks before things could be set right.

Lupe Velez' temperamental outbursts and wild romances kept her name in print even when she wasn't on the screen. At her death she thanked the press for being so good to her. But the rumors that dogged Mabel Normand and Mary Miles Minter after the murder of William Desmond Taylor wrecked their careers. Top stars of the time, they slid down the ladder of fame overnight. Their innocence made no difference.

Gossip has a thousand tongues. "They said" something was wrong with Tony Gaudio's eyes. Tony is one of our finest cameramen and that rumor wasn't good. It did him plenty of harm before he scotched it. His sight is keen and he's still in the top bracket.

Chatter, chatter, chatter . . . Were Paulette Goddard and Charlie Chaplin married or not? That was good for years, in fact up to the time Paulette filed suit for divorce.

Talk, talk, talk . . . "Barbara Stanwyck doesn't like Bob Taylor to fly; she doesn't like him to wear a moustache; she doesn't like this, or that, she wants to handle his career." Barbara, newly married, was frightened; Bob took it lightly. "How's the old henpecker?" he'd laugh. Barbara couldn't laugh. Scared to death, but gallant, she went flying with Bob; she never criticised him, even in fun; she told everyone she met that her own career was trouble enough without trying to handle his. In the end, she had to let the gossip die of its own accord.

It was deep depression when someone figured out that Connie Bennett was making $30,000 a week. The item got her name in the papers, but the public resented her vast earnings when so many fathers of families couldn't bring home bacon and beans.

Charges that Jimmy Cagney was independent with producers helped him with his many fans who demanded his triumphant return to the screen.

Women were intrigued with George Sanders' reputation for woman-hating. It was a let-down when they discovered the woman-hater was married. George survived that, for next time he was interviewed he hated everything and everybody. "He's bitter," wrote a fan. "Maybe his wife doesn't understand him." Maybe she does.

Whether or not the woman-hating angle was George's idea, Victor Mature claims credit for being a heel in print. He gloried in keeping producers and directors waiting, forgetting dates with important people, pretending to be conceited, to run away from women, etc. He never was rude to weaker or less important people and he got in all the papers. Now he's in the Coastguard, where the Beautiful Hunk of Man is making good. To suggestions that it might be time for him to have a leave to make a picture, he replies: "Yeah, Bo, AFTER the war. I'm busy till then, see?"

'Way back before Pearl Harbor, a new and attractive boy-friend asked Ginger Rogers for a date.

"I can't go out Tuesday night," she regretted. "I'm dancing all day. I'll only have strength to fall into bed."

Someone at the Mocambo found that Tuesday dull and enlivened his copy by observing that Ginger Rogers and Jimmy Stewart were cheek-to-cheeking. The new b.f. telephoned before Ginger was up next morning. "How were the beds at the Mocambo last night?" he asked. What might have been Romance was over. He never believed her.

Laraine Day had a happier experience. In her picture "Bride By Mistake," Laraine was publicized as "best-legged lady of the land." She returned to her home studio (MGM) while billboards raved about her underpinnings. For seven years, her passing on the lot had not raised an eyelid, but now practically every important executive went out of his way to welcome her, his eyes riveted below her knees. They called her "Gam Girl," "Dietrich Junior," and "Legs Laraine." RKO, the studio that started the whole thing, fell victim to its own publicity and bought a $150,000 picture to star her. In "Those Endearing Young Charms," however, Laraine's legs don't show.

June Allyson missed the item that had her married to Van Johnson. Its publication synchronized with the preview of "Two Girls and a Sailor," wherein June made a smash hit. She was puzzling over a message from her mother in New York, which read: "Why not tell your mother these things?" when friends telephoned congratulations. Thinking they meant her picture, she beamed.

"Where's Van—let us talk to him?" the friends went on.

June's baffled denial of knowledge of Van, of quarreling with him, and finally of marrying him was scarcely believed. She had hung up and was working on a message to calm her agitated parent, when the telephone rang again, with more congratulations. "It's not true, you know," she replied, warily.

"Weren't you in the picture?" gasped the caller. "I could have sworn . . ."

"You can't win," murmured June, "I mean, thank you very much."

Whisper, whisper, whisper . . . Whenever Ida Lupino had a headache, she was critically ill; if she sneezed, she was headed for a sanitorium; if she coughed, it was laryngitis, strep throat, bronchial pneumonia. It sounded as if she had one foot in the grave all the time.

No sickly star has appeal and Ida had to campaign vigorously against the whispers. She went in for outdoor sports, took on a full-time program of war work, made pin-up pictures to show her plump curves. No invalid could stand up to her strenuous schedule, and at last the rumors died.

The repeated stories that Jeanette MacDonald was giving up her career to follow her husband into the army resulted disastrously for her. At the time, major studios were negotiating with the singing star. Believing her services soon would not be available, no contract was signed. Jeanette's concert tours, army camp shows, opera debut keep her busy, but fans clamour for her screen return.

Joan Bennett and sister Constance used to read that they were jealous of each other, almost every time they picked up a magazine. Joan was worried at first, wondering what she could have said to give such an idea, but veteran Connie laughed. "Darling, when you're furious with me, just throw a dish at me. You'll soon know about it, if I ever get mad at you. Until then, we're friends. Let them say what they please." No dishes have yet been thrown.

The "let them talk" school is also followed by Irene Dunne. Her coast-to-coast marriage to Dr. Francis Griffin, whose practice kept him in New York for years while her film career anchored her in Hollywood, survived all the rumors that might have separated a less well adjusted couple.

Ruth Hussey won her Ph.D. in college and sometimes she wishes she hadn't. Adjectives like "intelligent," "well-read," "brilliant" were used to describe her when she arrived in Hollywood, and she was regarded as a somewhat chilly blue-stocking. Please don't listen to such talk! Ruth assures me she's neither cold nor brainy.

Victor McLaughlin's Lighthorse Troop became an international item when someone called it a Fascist organization. This broke Vic's heart, for he had organized the troop because he wanted to enjoy the sport of his old cavalry days and thought other horse-lovers might enjoy this special type of relaxation. The story flew over the country. The organization aligned with the Los Angeles Police Force and worked under that force in floods, earthquakes, fires and so on. The "relaxation" idea was ended.

"Paul and Lisl Henreid are tilting," ran the column in front of the actor one morning. He read it again. What on earth was "tilting?" He found an English dictionary, in which was a picture of two knights in armor crossing swords.

"That can't be," said Paul, surveying it. "Lisl could never wear armor." He called to his wife to ask if she had ever fenced.

"As a little girl, I took it up in Vienna," admitted Lisl.

"I felt that we mustn't make a liar out of a famous columnist," related the actor, smiling, "so Lisl and I had our pictures taken in fencing costume, each armed with a foil. I sent it to the writer with a little note. 'Lisl and I,' I said, 'are really tilting!'"

IT'S FUN Be Your Own Music Teacher!

• Yes, it's a great pastime learning music this short-cut, Print and Picture way, right at home without a private teacher. That's because you learn to play by playing real tunes by note with the very first lesson.

No matter which instrument you are learning, once you begin a U. S. School Course you look forward to the time you can spend on your lessons. No boresome exercises. No lengthy, baffling explanations. Instead of hard work, learning to play becomes a genuine pleasure. You progress as quickly as you want to. You start with simple melodies. As you improve, you take up more difficult pieces. And sooner than you ever expected you're amazed to find that you can pick up many popular tunes and play them right off.

Costs Only 7c A Day

And that's not all. You can take up any instrument this easy, home-study way for only 7c a day. That covers everything, valuable sheet music, printed instructions, diagrams, and our Personal Advisory Service.

So if you really want to learn music, to win new friends, new popularity, send coupon at right for our Free Booklet.

version of "Lili Marlene" only to be interrupted by a waiter grumbling "Pardon me" and sweeping a plate of French fried and a steak past the singer's left ear. It is nothing at all for a stimulated citizen to join the singer at the mike for a few hilarious stanzas. In a rigidly conventional town, always on its good behavior in public (with a very few notorious exceptions), it is delightful to find a truly Bohemian spot for a change. Long-ago favorites like Alice Terry and Rex Ingram are seen there frequently; beautiful Dolores Moran and her escort of the evening like to drop in; Richard Cromwell and Angela Lansbury have a favorite corner table. Which is to say that the Madelon is sort of a night club schwabadero.

IMPOVERISHED:

Mr. Cornel Wilde, probably the greatest current sensation in Hollywood, was cast as Dick Harland, the writing hero of Ben Ames Williams fascinating book, "Leave Her To Heaven," and was asked to appear in some of his own clothes for a wardrobe test.

When the studio officials saw the successful Mr. Wilde, wearing the best his suit hangers had to offer, they shook their heads. "We'll have to have something tailored for you," they said apologetically. "You see, as you are you don't look like a wealthy author."

Impoverished actor Wilde intends to buy the wealthy writer's suit when the picture is finished.

Hume Cronyn and wife Jessica Tandy. His next pic "For Better, For Worse," with June Allyson.

BOBBY SOCKO:

Joan Leslie was called into the Warner Brothers front office for a solemn high conclave. She was told that it was time she became more sophisticated, more mature, more poised. She must overcome her natural school girl levity and assume a more adult attitude as her screen portrayals from now on would require assurance.

Joan, eager to please, decided that one of the first steps toward developing a soignee' personality would be the purchase of an Adrian gown. She selected an elegant material and a svelte mode—this, she decided, she would wear to the premiere of "Rhapsody In Blue."

Quick-fast, with true Hollywood rapidity, came a change in Warner orders: (1) Milo Anderson, ace Warner designer, was to design for Joan a Rhapsody-In-Blue dress which she was to wear to the premiere willy-nilly; (2) she was to retain her youthful attitude because Joyce Reynolds was retiring from the screen, so Joan was to be cast in "Janie Gets Married." And Janie must be the epitome of teenish hoydenism.

Quoth Miss Leslie, "I'm confoozed."

BACALL CALL:

Bogey now has a whistle on his watch chain, larger but similar to that which Lauren Bacall wears on her bracelet; they toot at each other, according to Hollywood legend, when they are in different parts of their new house, when they are across the lot from one another at the studio, or when they are on the boat.

Added note: their monogram on all their spruce new linen is attractive: B. & B.

Added note No. 2: A startled Warner Brothers Publicity Department employee couldn't believe his ears when he heard Bogey telling him over the telephone, "I want you people to kill that 'Baby' business."

The harried employee performed mental somersaults, to wit: had some press story announced a blessed event for the Bogarts in error? Or were Miss Bacall's enthusiastic

Bogey went on, "I've never called Betty anything except Betty, Slim, Charlie, or Sluggy. I referred to her only once as 'The Baby' . . . but the thing is getting out of hand. I wish you'd do something about it."

Sighing with relief, the employee said he would do something. Afterward, he wasn't certain just what steps to take. The 'Baby' nom-de-Bacall appears to have sunk deep into the consciousness of press and public alike.

MOUTHS OF BABES:

Virginia Van Upp is one of the most important women in Hollywood, although theatre-goers, for the most part, are unfamiliar with her name. She is a dynamo with magnificent red hair, sense of humor to match, and the peachbloom complexion that goes with such coloring. She has written some of the best scripts to be produced in Hollywood, and was recently made executive producer at Columbia. No other woman in town holds a similar post, although both Harriet Parsons and Joan Harrison are meteors in their own right.

On the day the news was announced, Miss Van Upp's niece was visiting her. The telephone began to ring as her friends by tens and twenties offered congratulations; a special delivery note or two arrived; Western Union messenger "boys" limped up the stairs and peered at Miss Van Upp from beneath their Civil War hats as she signed for their messages.

In the midst of all this todo and hullabaloo, Miss Van Upp's small niece fixed the flustered one with a pinioning eye. "What's this all about?"

Miss Van Upp attempted to combine modesty with the facts of the case.

At the close of her aunt's speech, the small critic shrugged. "Well, you STILL didn't produce 'Going My Way,' did you?" she squelched.

SUCCESS:

Lieutenant (senior grade) John Howard Coxe, famed in Hollywood as John Howard, was recently ordered to Cornell University to serve as an instructor for the Navy. Previous to this assignment he had participated in a series of naval operations to the notable extent of having been awarded the Navy Cross.

While at Cornell, John also served as director for the annual play—which happened to be "The Drunkard." The night of the presentation, the villain fell ill, there was no understudy, so John was persuaded by the rest of the cast to enact the evil squire.

Commenting upon the results of his performance in a letter to his mother, John wrote, "Apparently I haven't entirely forgotten all I ever knew about acting, because I was so convincing as the scoundrel that I got hissed off the stage!"

The cast, having high regard for a good bad man, presented John with a wrist watch.

At this moment, Paulette Goddard is sick and tired of having people who don't know the situation, saying that her hair has been blondined as a publicity stunt. Nothing could be more removed from the fact of the matter.

Miss Goddard's next picture is to be "Diary of a Chambermaid," and it is to be directed by Jean Renoir, son of the cele-

BOARD WITH IT ALL:

Perhaps you read about it in your local paper, but even so you may not have given it enough thought. Those of our philosophers who like to contemplate the depravity of inanimate objects (a fountain pen always drops ink on one's new suit, a shoe lace always breaks on the dance floor, a tire always goes flat seven blocks from the railway station), are quietly chuckling over the latest revolt of mankind's servitors, i.e.:

Edgar Bergen put his partner on a westbound plane recently, calm in his belief that, although Charlie is one character who always carries a chip on his shoulder, the world's most famous blockhead would proceed obediently to Los Angeles.

He didn't. He went to San Francisco instead, an activity that gave Bergen, TWA, certain pilots, and the general public a few astounded moments.

Gagsters have supplied the following explanations of Charlie's unexpected trip: He was on his way to Brooklyn to establish kinship to the tree growing there.

He was in search of a boat for which he could be the 'elmsman.

He simply grew board with it all.

DRIZZLE PUSS:

Unhappiest man in the state of California in June was Mr. Tommy Dorsey. He had been scheduled to take his band into the Hollywood Bowl for a concert, an innovation in Bowl concerts that represented a high compliment to Mr. Dorsey. "It was the dream of my life," said a despondent maestro when the concert had to be cancelled.

It rained. In June. In Los Angeles. Mobs formed with the intention of lynching local meteorologists, and it is rumored that the Chamber of Commerce threatened to commit hara-kiri. Incidentally, June is always the most putrid month of the year in Southern California, abounding in all sorts of freak weather—100% bad.

TIMELESS TUNE:

Veronica Lake and her husband, Andre De Toth, went to an auction recently, just for the fun of it. The exploit became serious when Veronica espied an antique music box 250 years old, constructed of inlaid, handcarved woods gathered from a dozen countries and fashioned with the skill and love of an artist.

Breathlessly, she said to Bondi, "I've got to have that . . . no matter how much it costs —I've GOT to have it. We can live on potatoes and oatmeal. We can burn candles for light, but I've got to have that music box."

Bondi won it for $500. A week later it was appraised by an expert at nearly three thousand. It has ten discs, each of which plays six different melodies. A lid can be lifted to reveal the glass-enclosed mechanism that operates the instrument, and a delighted Veronica can sit for hours, watching small clappers ringing tiny bells, minute cymbals chiming, and slender percussion sticks beating a model drum.

Veronica remained up until 3 A.M. the morning after she had acquired the instrument, oiling it under the expert guidance of a connoisseur of music boxes who lives and works in Long Beach. He has promised to keep an eye on it, so that its performance will continue perfectly.

SILVERWARE SHOWER:

When June Haver was singing with various dance bands, and was touring the country, supervised by her mother, the supervision was never stringent enough to forestall June's appropriation of souvenir silver. Whenever Mrs. Haver packed or unpacked a bag, she exclaimed with horror over June's gradually increasing hoard of items engraved with hotel and railroad names.

"No one will ever know," said the souvenir hunter, and blithely continued to add to her collection. Finally, in desperation, Mrs. Haver purchased a small suitcase and ordered Miss June to pack all her ill-gotten gains in that one container, and to carry it personally.

Came the frantic day when the band, June and her mother, were to catch a train leaving the Dallas station. Everything had gone wrong; the packing had been done in frenzy, the trip to the station had been made in jumbled confusion. And . . . as June scorched through the station, the clasp on her trophy pack gave up the fight and collapsed, scattering illicit silverware for yards.

Every individual who stooped to assist the blushing blonde knew, after one glance at the strewed contents, just what and how Miss Haver collected. For five full hours, after she and her mother were installed safely and more or less intact in their drawing room, June refused to face the senior Haver eye. Finally, still staring morosely at the scampering landscape, June muttered, "Never again."

INCOMPARABLE BETTE:

By the time you read this, Bette Davis will be somewhere in the European Theatre of Operations, giving shows for the boys who are sweating out their trip back to The States. Those who see her touring production of "The Little Foxes" will have no idea of the difficulties Bette encountered in planning the show.

When she first offered her overseas services to the War Department, she suggested that her vehicle be "The Letter." It was a dramatic sketch, it was interesting to me, it was easily costumed and could be done with one backdrop. No, said the War Department, the theme of the play was infidelity, a problem which should not be brought to the attention of men away from home.

The next suggestion made by Bette was "Voice Of The Turtle," a happy comedy dealing with the intention of a boy to wolf a girl. No, said the War Department, too suggestive for the pure members of our armed forces.

Miss Davis placed the burden of proof on the War Department. What play would they like her to produce? After months of waiting, back turtled the answer: "The Late Christopher Bean!" This is the story of a middle-aged woman's reminiscences about her departed husband and his interest in art —wonderful theatrical fare for G.I.'s, if you want them to walk out on you.

When Bette rejected this suggestion, an alternate was offered: "Mr. and Mrs. North," a bit of fluff in which Gracie Allen originally appeared, but which was certainly not fitted to Bette's talents.

But Miss Davis is a patient and a determined woman. Finally she persuaded the War Department to allow her to take overseas a somewhat softened version of "The Little Foxes." But by that successful time she felt like the Spartan boy who, you may recall, had some little fox trouble of his own.

storage vault. Others in the cast are Joseph Cotten, Lionel Barrymore, Lillian Gish, Walter Huston, Harry Carey, Scott McKay, Butterfly McQueen, Steve Dunhill, and Victor Wong. All this and Selznick too.

WHISTLE STOP is Ava Gardner's first big part; George Raft, Victor McLaglen, Tom Conway, Florence Bates, and Charles Drake (remember him as "Handsome" in YOU CAME ALONG?) are also cast.

DIARY OF A CHAMBERMAID won't be as frightening a picture as the title would indicate. It is actually a continental farce and costume picture with Paulette Goddard, Hurd Hatfield, Judith Anderson, Reginald Owen, Irene Ryan and Burgess Meredith.

ABILENE, in honor of the Texas city, is keeping Randolph Scott, Ann Dvorak, Edgar Buchanan, Rhonda Fleming and Lloyd Bridges busy.

AT MGM:

THE YEARLING is the cinema version of Marjorie Kinnan Rawlings great book, starring Gregory Peck, Jacqueline White, and Claude Jarman, Jr. The cast and company spent two months in Florida, filming exteriors; Greta Peck spent the time with her husband, and the stories they have brought back indicate that the picture will be one of the year's best.

THIS STRANGE ADVENTURE marks Clark Gable's return to the screen as a merchant seaman who falls in love with librarian, Greer Garson. Joan Blondell, Thomas Mitchell, John Qualen, Larry Burke and Esther Howard are also appearing in this picture that wild horses wouldn't make you miss.

THE POSTMAN ALWAYS RINGS TWICE is the dramatic murder mystery derived from the hard-hitting novel by James M. Cain. Lana Turner is the wife of the restaurant owner, Cecil Kellaway, and John Garfield is the man who happened along one day. Leon Ames, Hume Cronyn and Jeff York are doing brilliant additional parts.

THE HIDDEN EYE (Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer)—The Far East loses some mystery when your old favorite, the blind detective Captain Duncan Maclain (Edward Arnold), his seeing-eye dog Friday, and body-guard Marty Corbett (Wm. Phillips) put the bead on the murderer determined to wipe out Sumatra Tin King Arthur Hampton (Raymond Largay) and his family. The murderer has been doing a good job (three gone and two to go!) when Jean Hampton (Frances Rafferty) asks the help of the master detective to prove the innocence of fiance Barry Gifford (Paul Langton), accused of doing the dirty deeds. Captain Maclain goes at the case with his usual suave vigor, but even he isn't prepared when the ruthless killer turns . . . on him! It all comes out o.k.—in a breathless sort of way!

DUFFY'S TAVERN (Paramount), modeled after the radio program of the same name and starring Ed Gardner (since given an audience by the Pope, when he was in Rome entertaining troops), as Archie.

With Charles Cantor as Finnegan, Eddie Green as Eddie, and Ann Thomas as Miss Duffy . . . and just about everyone else on the Paramount lot, including the four sons o' Crosby.

It's with lots of laughs—Archie's special brand, already familiar to his radio audiences, and added contributions in the fun department from Robert Benchley, Eddie Bracken, William Demarest, Victor Moore and The Bing.

FIRST MAN IN TOKYO (RKO)—It's the old "American plans captured by Japanese—we got to get 'em back" idea . . . but something new has been added. Tom Neal is the American Army pilot who gets to Tokyo. Barbara Hale, Marc Cramer and Keye Luke are on our side in this one, with Richard Loo bidding to be voted "most insidious son of a Nip."

LOVE, HONOR AND GOODBYE (Republic)—A comedy that travels from the home of the wealthy Baxters (Edward Ashley and Virginia Bruce) to the theater, where Virginia is trying to become an actress, to the Penny Arcade, where they find adorable, three-year-old and orphaned Jacqueline Moore—also a tattoo artist (Victor McLaglen) and Veda Ann Borg.

WHY GIRLS LEAVE HOME (PRC) isn't always a mystery . . . but in this case it is! When news reporter Chris Williams (Sheldon Leonard) dragged Diana Leslie (Pamela Blake) out of the river, he didn't realize he was making a date with murder—several of 'em, in fact—for he's sure Diana was pushed into the water, not an attempted suicide as a note specified.

From then on, Chris' nose for news (plus interest in the pretty gal) lead him on an exciting chase. He exposes a huge gambling ring run by Lola Lane and Paul Guilfoyle, and finally catches up with the villains, who live long enough to regret having made his acquaintance.

YOU CAME ALONG (Hal Wallis production, released through Para.)—Originally titled "Don't Ever Grieve Me." Robert Smith and Ayn Rand did the screen play, John Farrow directed.

With Robert Cummings (his first picture since he's been in the Army, and he still is), plus a trio of newcomers—Lizabeth Scott, Don DeFore and Charles Drake. The boys do more than all right, as returned Army fliers selling bonds for Uncle Sam; Missy Scott doesn't very often get fair breaks on camera angles, and she's handicapped with having to be "another Lauren Bacall"—but, given a chance, she promises much!

More than half way through, the script is gay, witty, runs at a lively pace. Then the story gets in the way, and the whole thing goes off on a tangent of sentimentality which isn't sentiment.

The large cast includes Julie Bishop, Kim Hunter, Helen Forrest and Rhys Williams.

Alas, the princess, who lived in a far-off country, is very sad—because her true love (Warner Anderson) has returned to America, to write a daily column for a New York newspaper.

The bellboy had a pal, Albert ("Rags" Ragland, to us), and they both had a little crippled friend, Leslie (June Allyson).

Fantastically delightful, if not profound.

SHADY LADY (Universal) is a comedy where in jovial card-sharpster "Colonel" Appleby (Chas. Coburn) tries valiantly to stay on the Primrose Path for the sake of his niece, Lee (Ginny Simms). He doesn't fare too well after he meets gambler Marty Martin (Alan Curtis) and his cohorts . . . and then finds Lee's love in Bob Wendell (Robert Paige), deputy State's Attorney. He manages to outdeal them—but, of course!

THE HOUSE ON 92nd ST. (20th Century-Fox) was the German embassy, headquarters for the intricate German espionage system in the U. S. It's a true story, taken directly from the FBI files and reenacted as and where the happenings originally took place.

Lloyd Nolan is cast as FBI Inspector Briggs, Bill Eythe is the American counter-spy, and they're supported by Signe Hasso, Leo G. Carroll, Lydia St. Clair and Renee Carson.

MAN FROM OKLAHOMA (Republic)—That King of the Cowboys, Roy Rogers, in an exciting outdoor extravaganza highlighting a Hatfield-McCoy feud—only this time it's the Whittakers (Gabby Hayes) and the Lanes (Maude Eburne). Dale Evans makes her ninth consecutive appearance as Roy's leading lady; Roger Pryor is the villain.

ADVENTURES OF RUSTY (Col.)—A boy-meets-dog story that spells nice family entertainment. Ace, the Wonder (Rusty in this picture) manages to catch some German spies, also to reconcile the relations of young Danny (Ted Donaldson) and his step-mother (Margaret Lindsay) and the man of the house, Conrad Nagel.

TWO SISTERS FROM BOSTON is the musical dream starring Kathryn Grayson, June Allyson, Jimmy Durante, Lauritz Melchior and Peter Lawford.

THE HOODLUM SAINT is a delicious comedy drama with William Powell, Esther Williams, Angela Lansbury, and James Gleason.

AT MONOGRAM:

FRONTIER FEUD is another whoppin', gun-totin', rootin' tootin' western with Johnny Mack Brown, Raymond Hatton, Riley Hill, Ed Parker, Steve Clark and Dick Dickinson.

SUSPENSE is in its first week of shooting, a murder mystery with Warren William and Peter Cookson cast thus far.

AT COLUMBIA:

RENEGADES is the Technicolor picture formerly called THE KANSANS. The stars are Evelyn Keyes (unbelievably beautiful in bodice dresses with long sleeves and graceful flowing skirts), Willard Parker (one of our biggest stars-to-be, and that means in every respect, since the altitudinous Willard is something like 6′4″), Larry Parks, Edgar Buchanan, Jim Bannon, and Forest Tucker.

SNAFU is a comedy (the title is derived from the army statement Situation Normal, All Fouled Up) starring Robert Benchley, Barbara Jo Allen, Conrad Janis, Enid Markey, and Marcia Mae Jones.

SONG OF THE PRAIRIE is another westrun with Ken Curtis, June Storey, the Hoosier Hot Shots, Jeff Donnell, and Robert Scott.

AT REPUBLIC:

YOU'LL REMEMBER ME stars Brenda Marshall, William Gargan, Ruth Ford, Hilary Brooke, H. B. Warner, Lyle Talbot, Mary Treen (remember her in "I Married A Soldier"?), and Gay Forrester.

SHERIFF OF REDWOOD VALLEY is the latest chapter in the leather adventures of Bill Elliot, Alice Fleming, Bobby Blake, Bob Steele, and Peggy Stewart.

DON'T FENCE ME IN, from the song of the same name, is occupying the time of Roy Rogers, Dale Evans, George Hayes, and Trigger.

AT RKO:

THE KID FROM BROOKLYN is Danny Kaye's latest Technicolor triumph. You won't miss this one, and it would be impossible to describe the plot anyhow. Fellow players to the kinetic Mr. Kaye are Virginia Mayo, Vera-Ellen, Steve Cochran, Walter Abel, Eve Arden, Lionel Stander, Clarence Kilb and Charles Cane.

RIVERBOAT RHTHYM is a tuneful new picture having to do with adventures on a Mississippi showboat, starring Jean Newton, Glenn Vernon, Jonathan Hale.

HEARTBEAT is the first picture to be made by Jean Pierre Aumont after his return from France. Ginger Rogers is working opposite him, as are a brilliant cast composed of Adolphe Menjou, Basil Rathbone, and Melville Cooper.

A HONEYMOON NEED NEVER END

It is so easy to preserve the bridal loveliness that he adores and retain that lustrous, pulse-stirring look, by the faithful and constant use of Formula 301. Applied as a powder base—the most important step to a well-blended complexion—it conceals tiny lines and minor blemishes . . . lends an appearance of flower-fresh, flawless beauty.

Use Formula 301 to look your loveliest . . . keep the breathless charm that brings lavish adoration and enjoy an endless honeymoon.

Trial-tested by millions of women . . . now unchanged in their loyalty of use.

To People who want to write

but can't get started

Do you have that constant urge to write but the fear that a beginner hasn't a chance? Then listen to what the editor of Liberty said on this subject:

> "There is more room for newcomers in the writing field today than ever before. Some of the greatest of writing men and women have passed from the scene in recent years. Who will take their places? Who will be the new Robert W. Chambers, Edgar Wallace, Rudyard Kipling? Fame, riches and the happiness of achievement await the new men and women of power."

Army Wife Wins Writing Success After Two Months' Training

"After only two months of N.I.A. training I became a reporter on the Columbus Enquirer. In four months, I have had two raises. Also I have over 75 'by-lines' to my credit, and the prospects of becoming City Editor look very promising." —Mrs. Marion M. Blondel, Columbus, Georgia.

Writing Aptitude Test—FREE!

NEWSPAPER Institute of America offers a free Writing Aptitude Test. Its object is to discover new recruits for the army of men and women who add to their income by fiction and article writing. The Writing Aptitude Test is a simple but expert analysis of your latent ability, your powers of imagination, logic, etc. Not all applicants pass this test. Those who do are qualified to take the famous N. I. A. course based on the practical training given by big metropolitan dailies.

This is the New York Copy Desk Method which teaches you to write by writing! You develop your individual style instead of trying to copy that of others. You "cover" actual assignments such as metropolitan reporters get. Although you work at home, on your own time, you are constantly guided by experienced writers. It is really fascinating work. Each week you see new progress. In a matter of months you can acquire the coveted "professional" touch. Then you're ready for market with greatly improved chances of making sales.

CORNERED is another hard-boiled drama with Dick Powell, Walter Slezak, Micheline Cheirel (who was once Mrs. John Loder), Ann Hunter and Jack LeRue. The day your reporter visited the set, big Mike Mazurki was also a visitor. It had been bruited about in the studio that he was shortly to become a bridegroom. During a brief silence in the scene, immediately before a take, Dick Powell said softly, "Once there was a lousy prizefighter." Said Jack LaRue, picking up the cue very fast, "Who became a lousy actor." Said Director Edward Dmytryk, "So decided to get married and become a lousy husband." Then everyone howled at visitor Mike Mazurki's expense. Thus are motion pictures happily made.

THE LIE DETECTOR is a who-dun-it with Bonita Granville (whose engagement was announced one day, denied the next), Morgan Conway, Rita Corday and Edward Norris. Apropos of nothing at all, did you know that whenever Eddie Norris and Pat Knowles have a day off from their respective studios, they hop on their motorcycles and tour small inland towns in search of antiques? The studios protest because they consider motorbike riding during picture production an act of tweaking the beard of Father Fate himself.

AT UNIVERSAL:

FRONTIER GAL, the Technicolor spectacle, is in its third month of production with Yvonne DeCarlo, Rod Cameron, Andy Devine, Fuzzy Knight, Sheldon Leonard.

AS IT WAS BEFORE is likely to be one of the pictures of the year; the story of the mixup in the life of a young man and his beautiful wife, this picture is the second to be made by handsome, intense Charles Korvin. Merle Oberon plays the wife's role, and others in the cast are Claude Rains, Jess Barker, Ann Codee, Doris Merrick and Sue England.

THE ROYAL MOUNTED RIDES AGAIN, bang-bang, William Kennedy, George Dolenz, Milburn Stone, Daun (how about that spelling?) Kennedy and Robert Armstrong.

Zachary Scott got a B.A. degree from Texas U. before turning actor. (Above, with Mrs. Scott).

YOUR PROBLEM

Dear Miss Wyman:

I am a sailor nineteen years of age. I have a very bad handicap which almost makes me have a nervous breakdown. I have been a stutterer almost all my life. I am so self-conscious of my stuttering that I don't know what to do. I joined the Navy because I thought that everything new would help me overcome my self-consciousness, but I find that it has hindered more than it has helped. How can I overcome my handicap?

Jack

Dear Jack:

If you could overcome your self-consciousness, it would be a great stride in helping you get over your habit of stuttering. However, the medical profession has done wonders in helping victims of this habit overcome it, so if you will consult with one of the doctors at the base where you are stationed, I know he can give you advice on the matter.

I do not know the names of any doctors who have specialized in this line, but you should be able to obtain the name of one from your medical adviser.

Jane Wyman

Dear Miss Wyman:

We have a problem which we hope you can solve for us. It has been quite some time now since we have seen any women, and we are about to enter that great civilized place, the United States, so could you give us a few pointers about the women back there? Do they want us to be the same as when we left? We want to know how to go about approaching a woman without frightening her to death. We're not the wolves that we are reputed to be, but anything can happen unless we get someone's advice. Will you help us?

Lee and Sandy

Dear Lee and Sandy:

Wanna make a bet? Bet you two will know just what to do and how to act without the benefit of anyone's advice! And what do you mean—"frightening them to death"? The man shortage is pretty bad, but the species is not so extinct that the sight of two young fellows will inspire terror in the hearts of our maidens and cause them to flee. I rather believe that you two will do the running from an excess of attention. How right you are about the girls wanting you to be the same as when you left; the prayer and hope of thousands of girls is that their men will come back to them unchanged.

Seriously, you will find the young women of these United States the same fine women they have always been, perhaps a bit more adept in handling wolves from repeated experience, but since you disclaim any relationship to that breed, you will have nothing to worry about.

Jane Wyman

Dear Jane:

I've gathered all the facts, examined them carefully and come to the conclusion that I'm physically and mentally a woman—emotionally immature.

It probably started when I was a tomboy. I refused to act as other girls my age did and I just didn't "give a darn." To tell the truth, I'm glad I had the experience. I've always been fat and that has a great deal to do with it. "It" is my lack of interest in boys, dates, clothes and other frills and doodads that thrilled other girls. I go through the same phases as other girls—eventually. For instance, I should have worn lipstick when I was in the eighth grade. I started when I was finishing high school, and I still don't like it. I should have had a movie idol when I was fifteen; I'm nineteen and a persistently devoted admirer of a star.

My mother thinks it's silly and most other friends tell me that I should dance and have a romantic interest in boys. I'd much rather ride a horse or row a boat.

My problem? Should I try to force myself to do these things which don't appeal to me, or should I just go my "silly" way and wait 'til I grow up?

Serina

Dear Serina:

With your ability to analyze logically and think out clearly your situation, I see no reason why you need advice, except that perhaps you have been getting too much of it and are a bit confused. Happiness is the goal for which we all are striving, and if you find happiness in, as you say, going your "silly" way, why not do it? But there is one warning I must give you, and that is not to carry this tomboy attitude to such an extreme as to cause you to lose your femininity, which might be a natural result of your trying to flaunt your independence against those attempting to force you into a mold that does not appeal to you at the moment.

I believe you have developed this attitude as a defense mechanism against fear of lack of admiration on account of your weight, and when you do meet with a romantic interest, you will realize that love of sports cannot compete successfully with romantic love, and your problem will be solved.

Jane Wyman

Dear Miss Wyman:

I am seventeen and four feet, eleven inches tall. Could you suggest a few exercises or other means for me to grow a few inches.

Cheryl

Dear Cheryl:

I know of no exercise which will actually cause you to add a few inches, but you might try this one to give you that tall feeling: Grasp the top of a door with both hands and lift feet from the floor. You will get a stretch through your whole body. Then kick one leg backward, stretching it all the while, after which kick the other leg. This should be done four or five times with each leg.

Even if you are short, you can give an illusion of height by your posture and dress. Carry your shoulders back and your head high. As I said above, give yourself that tall feeling. Platform soles should help, as well as straightline skirts. The same color combination should be chosen in costume and accessories, and keep everything to your size; small bag, small hat, etc. Avoid horizontal lines and contrasting belts, for they cut down height.

point where my wife is neglecting our child to see pictures in which he appears.

My problem is how can I win my wife's love and affection again and wake her out of this ridiculous dream. I do hope you can help me as you have helped many others.

Henry

My dear Henry:

Crushes, such as your wife's, are usually confined to unmarried adolescents, and they get over them when a real interest comes along to take the place of their dream hero. In your case, the problem becomes more difficult, since you must reawaken her interest. Suppose you try a complete change of character. You say nothing you do seems to please her, so turn the tables and let the pleasing be on her side. You are the head of the family, tell her you are tired of her foolishness, throw the pictures out, and demand that she be a good mother to your child. In other words, be a man and not a mouse, and see if that does not intrigue her again. If this treatment does not seem applicable, the only other course I can suggest is that you develop a fictitious infatuation for a female star, such as Lana Turner, and carry it to even more ridiculous lengths than she. Ridicule is a potent weapon if handled correctly, and may be your solution.

Jane Wyman

Dear Miss Wyman:

I am ashamed to write anyone about my problems, but an outsider sometimes can give one peace of mind.

I am 33 and have been married 13 years. I have never been satisfied but believed in sticking; besides I now have three boys.

My husband has never let me handle the money or run the affairs of the home. This has caused trouble. He buys the groceries and all the children's clothes. They have them almost worn out before he will buy any more and growls about the way they wear things out. He refuses to give me an allowance to take care of expenses.

I worked in a defense plant at one time and made good money. I kept myself dressed and paid someone to care for my children, and managed to save a little but had to use it for necessities. My husband nagged me all the time I worked and said I was neglecting the children. He promised to give me an allowance but broke this promise after a few months. If I work, he nags—if I don't, I am in rags. Tell me, should I work, or stay around until the children are grown.

Lucille

Dear Lucille:

I can imagine no more humiliating thing than a wife who has to beg money from her husband with which to run the home. It is a man's obligation to support his family in as much comfort as his income permits, and it is the wife's obligation to see that the money provided for such purpose is spent wisely and within reason.

I would have a talk with my husband, if I were you, giving him the choice of providing for you and your family in a decent way, or of letting you work without nagging. Be firm about it, and impress upon him that it is he who is causing this decision to have to be made; that you much prefer to stay home and care for the children, but under the circumstances you cannot go on having to fight for the necessities the children need.

You do not say how old the children are, and of course, an important consideration is getting the proper person to take care of them while you work, but I am sure you will see to that.

You should act for the best interests of your children, and if your husband, after you have given him a chance, refuses to cooperate, then his feelings in the matter should receive little consideration.

Jane Wyman

Dear Miss Wyman:

I have been married three times and every time I ended up in divorce. I was married for the first time at the age of twenty—I am now 26 and as you can see, I did not stay married very long to each of my husbands.

The cause of these divorces has been my disagreeable temper which would be very hard to cure. I divorced my third husband last June, and in August I met a very handsome man three years my senior. We both love each other very much, and he has asked me to marry him, but I have been putting him off. I haven't told him of my past and he thinks I have been putting him off because I don't love him. But I do, very much. Should I tell him of my past? I am all mixed up. If I marry him now, it may end up in another divorce. I love him very much but am afraid of my horrible temper. Please help me.

Elizabeth

Dear Elizabeth:

Your letter has left me with mixed emotions and practically at a loss for words. I cannot conceive of anyone admitting to having tossed three marriages into the discard so nonchalantly within six years and brazenly blaming it on her bad temper. You are an adult, and after one unhappy experience, I should think you would have taken steps to curb that temper, instead of pampering it and bragging about it as though it were something to be proud of. You also must hold love lightly to have fallen in love with four men within six years.

Until you have learned to control your temper and know what real love is, I suggest that you steer clear of matrimony, for the boy's sake. It certainly would not be fair to marry this man without telling him of your past experiences, and if you do tell him, he would be more than brave to chance marriage with you until you have put a control on that temper of yours.

Jane Wyman

Dear Jane:

Just recently I received a letter from a friend of mine in the air corps, asking me for advice. I don't know what to tell him, so please see if you can help me in answering his request. The trouble is his mother. He is one of two children, both in the service. His brother is a prisoner of war. The mother is continually worrying about my friend getting injured, or worse than that, not coming back at all. Instead of keeping these fears to herself, she tells him about them in her letters to him.

He will be leaving for overseas soon and he dreads to leave his mother in such a state of mind. What can he say to her to assure her in some way so that she will be comforted?

Please tell me what to write him to make him feel he has gotten the right kind of advice.

Mary

Dear Mary:

Your friend's mother is very selfish to voice her fears and upset him so badly, but it is understandable under the circumstances. I would suggest that he write his mother's minister and have him go to her and explain the effect of her letters on her son; tell her of the many other mothers who are bravely meeting this situation, even though their fears are as great as hers; point out to her that destructive thinking seems oftentimes to draw to one the calamities which are dreaded; tell her of the young wife whom I know, whose husband was a prisoner of war for so long that his whole family gave him up for dead, but not so his wife—her faith never waivered, she knew he was coming back to her, and went about her duties bravely, planning his return in the face of no word from him for months. When Germany fell, he was liberated and is now home with her, and I am confident it was her complete faith that brought him back.

In case your friend for some reason does not want to adopt this plan, let him write his mother along this line, using a bit of psychology and putting her on her mettle, by telling her how proud he is going to be of her because he knows she will be brave over his going. I hope this suggestion will be of some help and my wishes for the best of luck go out to this boy.

Jane Wyman

Dear Jane Wyman:

I have an eight-year-old sister-in-law who is one of the worst spoiled children I have ever come into contact with.

When this child comes to visit me alone, she is very well behaved and stays only a short while. When she comes with her mother, she is into everything. She tries out all the things on my dressing table, tries on my best shoes, and if I refuse them, she screams and kicks while her mother looks calmly on and remarks "But, darling, you shouldn't act that way." When her mother suggests leaving, this calls for another tantrum, so another hour of torture follows. When they do finally drag her away, you can imagine how it feels to try to remove scratches from furniture you treasure.

Should I be hateful and perfectly frank with her mother and tell her, or just what would you suggest. My mother-in-law and I get along nicely, and I want to keep peace in the family without letting my home be completely torn from under me.

Sheila

Dear Sheila:

You certainly have a trying situation with which to contend, and it will need tact to work it out amicably. I would suggest that you talk this over with your husband. After all, it is his house and furniture that are being hurt, and have him take the matter into his own hands. It will be a lot easier for him to talk to his mother about his sister; his mother will take it from him more gracefully than from you, and you will be saved any hard feelings on her part.

If this doesn't work, you will have to decide which is dearer to you, the friendship of his mother, or your things, for I am sure if you take the matter upon your own shoulders, it is going to be a hard job to keep out hurt feelings.

I doubt if a talk with the child some day when you have her alone will accomplish much, since she is so spoiled, but it might be worth a try. If she likes you and you handle her properly, this might be the solution.

Make Up Your Room as you Make Up Your Face!

MAKE-UP, of course, high-lights your best features . . . but remember, your home spot-lights your personality.

Perhaps right now you're planning your dream home . . or maybe just going to do over a single room . . . whichever, why not be sure you're going about it right.

Personality Decorators, Inc., will tell you how to choose colors and furnishings that are most becoming to you.

Send one dollar with a complete description of yourself — your age, height, weight, color of hair, eyes, complexion; work and hobbies; whether you're the outdoor type; do you like to entertain? Do you read a lot? Do you prefer modern or traditional furniture? Are you married, single or engaged?

Expert decorators will analyze this data and advise what colors you should choose in selecting rugs, draperies, wallpaper and furniture, together with suggestions for decorating your home to fit your personality.

Judy Garland and the Merry Macs, with Lynn Murray's orchestra, have a solid platter in "On The Atcheson, Topeka and the Santa Fe," and "If I Had You."

JAM NOTES:

Buddy Rich finally took the big leap and eloped to Las Vegas, Nevada, with Jean Sutherland, a non-professional. Buddy surprised everybody, including a couple of girls who had romantic feelings toward him. . . . Jinny Garland, Judy's sister, has been singing in nightclubs in the east under the name of Miss Dorothy. . . . Sgt. Jack Leonard, who won fame several years ago with Tommy Dorsey's band, is back in the United States after sixteen months overseas, in action in the European theatre. . . . Duke Ellington has established a scholarship fund for a period of three years at the Julliard School of Music, in New York City. Three promising students will be chosen each year, the selection to be made by a specially appointed board of judges. . . . Claude Thornhill is reported much improved after a serious ear and sinus infection. He has been in a Naval hospital in Tarawa, and received a hundred and twenty-five shots of penicillin. . . . Another new disc company has been formed, under the name of Cosmopolitan Records. They have signed Joan Edwards, Jerry Wayne, Henry Busse, Barry Wood, Coleman Hawkins, The Four Chicks and Chuck and Gertrude Niesen. . . . Betty Jane Bonney almost missed her first show when she made her debut as a single in Baltimore. She got locked in her dressing room and had to be taken out through a window. . . . Jack Smith, the vocal lad on the "Prudential Family Hour" and other shows, has been signed for his own program this fall, five nights a week, over C.B.S. . . . Phil Brito has been chosen as the pin-up boy of the girl employees at the defense plant in Newark, N. J., where Phil puts in a daily eight-hour shift as a lathe worker. He gets off early twice a week to do his Mutual broadcasts. . . . Nancy Norman may cut out from the Sammy Kaye band when she weds crooner Dick Brown in September. . . . Andy Russell has been definitely set for the vocal spot on the new Joan Davis program over C.B.S. . . . Harry James is the latest name leader to form his own music publishing company, to be called "The Music Makers." . . . The Glenn Miller Band is due back in this country any day now. . . . Private Ray Eberle has finished his basic training at Camp Lee, Virginia. . . . Try to catch the "Saturday Senior Swing" air show over the American Broadcasting Network (formerly Blue) every Saturday afternoon at three o'clock Eastern War Time.

That does it for now. Remember, if you have any little questions which are bothering you—musical ones, I mean—drop me a line and I'll answer you. But not too many questions, and be sure to enclose a self-addressed stamped envelope. Just write Jill Warren, Movieland Magazine, 1476 Broadway, New York City 18, New York.

Dear Bob—
Congratulations on your promotion! We are all very happy about it – your brother has heard, too. By the way how do you like the Photo Stamps!
Everyone here thinks

Made from your favorite SNAPSHOT or PHOTO

250 for $1.69

Just imagine the thrill your friends and loved ones will get, seeing your picture in every letter. Why, it would be almost as if you had stepped right out of the envelope for a brief visit. With PHOTO STAMPS your letters become warm, human things—alive with your personality.

Large, Colorful, Lifelike

PHOTO STAMPS are faithful reproductions of your favorite photo, printed on high gloss gummed stock. Large-sized—about twice the size of the ordinary postage stamp—individually cut, with smooth edge. Simply moisten the back and apply. Adheres smoothly and evenly to any surface, giving the appearance of having actually been printed on.

Many Other Novel Uses

Besides letters, PHOTO STAMPS can be used to personalize your greeting cards, gift cards, books, invitations, etc. They are ideal for pasting in your friends' albums and autograph books, or for exchanging with pen pals. They identify your personal possessions, such as books, sheet music, etc. You will find many novel and clever uses for PHOTO STAMPS.

RITA HAYWORTH

"I hope to get what anyone wants out of their marriage," said Rita, with her face gone a little white and her voice very low. "I hope to get happiness."

You think back to that scene, these days, when you sit listening and laughing with Mrs. Orson Welles. You realize with surprise that this is the very first time you, at least, have ever heard Rita tell a gay story on herself, seen her throw back her head and really laugh. The Cover Girl with the closed pages—the public beauty with the private poignancy—is gone. There's a new Rita, with a new mind and manner.

Because today, as Mrs. Orson Welles, she's the wife of a man who married her not only for himself, but for herself—for her opinions, her humor, her humanness. Who doesn't give a darn if her sequins are on straight, but would rather sit with her in crumpled slacks, munching a charred chop from their own barbecue, batting everything around from the Peace Treaty to Leon Henderson's rhumba.

She learned about the Henderson rhumba one week-end in the conference city: "He's an expert—more rhythm than he has cigars," she reports. And one day, when Orson was busy broadcasting, she learned about Molotov:

"I couldn't stand it—everybody was talking, or wondering about Molotov, the Mystery-man of the town. Finally, I got a wild idea and borrowed a press card. I didn't think I could really crash the conference, and when I got a look at those great big determined looking guards at his door, I was sure of it. I waited until they were busy talking to someone, flashed the card at them in a hurry, and they let me go by! Inside, I felt that if I was going to go to jail any minute I wanted it to be worthwhile, so I pushed right up near Mr. Molotov.

"I think he has more inner humor than anyone I ever saw—the kind you see in his eyes. I listened to people asking him questions—some of them were such stupid questions I was ashamed to hear them. He answered every one of them so politely—in very serious tones, but you could see what he'd rather say, something funny, twinkling in his eyes."

There's no doubt, of course, that Miss Rebecca Welles, now almost a year old, has a great deal to do with the metamorphosis of her beautiful Mom. She is obviously determined to live up to her out-of-this-world heritage by scorning the tactics of most humans her own age, refusing to do anything but coo and smile—not a cry in a crib-load. She looks like Orson done in miniature, which caused her Dad's much-repeated commentary: "Of course—all babies look like me!"

Smiling up at a bunch of strange cameramen, Rebecca displays a congenital "stage-presence"—which isn't at all odd, under the circumstances. The nicest thing about her, however, is that sitting on her mother's lap, or pulling at her daddy's beard, she doesn't know or care whether the family has a scrap of glamor, or public clamor, to its name.

"The beard intrigues her, "says

Mom, "but I don't know how she'll feel when it's gone, and catches a glimpse of that crew hair-cut. I screamed—" The crew cut was committed in the interests of Orson's current picture, "Tomorrow is Forever," which, as is the way with movie-making, had him acting an old man first and his younger self later.

The junior Welles was named after the heroine of "Ivanhoe," and considering her parentage, no one will be surprised if she starts rewriting the thing at the age of three or four. But just what bent her talents take, or even if she doesn't have any, is unimportant to her Mom and Pop.

"We'll let her pick out her own ambition, and then back her up in it—whether she wants to be a housewife, a doctor, or President!"

Rita is sorry for only one thing, that Becky won't be able to be raised at the famous Todd School for Boys in Woodstock, Illinois, where most of her Dad's childhood was spent. She'll make sure that she has plenty of travel, learns to love the smell of train-smoke as Rita did in her childhood. As one of three generations of the dancing Cansinos, and more specifically as dancing partner for her father, Rita knew the excitement of changing towns and changing faces.

"I finally out-grew Daddy—got too tall to dance with him. But to this day I love to get on a train and go someplace—even if it's only as far as San Diego."

Both she and Orson love odd little towns, places with individuality and with funny, crooked little streets—especially if there's a rickety trolley they can board and ride to the end of the line. Whenever they can, they run down to Mexico. One of the times they remember was their first evening in Vera Cruz:

"We ate at an outdoor restaurant, across from the public square where the young people of the town take their weekly promenade. It's an old Vera Cruz custom—the boys walk in one direction, round and round the square, and the girls with their chaperones in the other. They're very sedate about it, and because of the chaperone, what the sweethearts have to say to each other must be said mostly with the eyes.

"Orson and I sat there watching them—the girls with flowers in their hair, and the boys with their brightest shirts on. The square was strung with orange lights, the same color as the Mexican moon. We watched until we couldn't sit still any longer, and then got up and joined them. It was really a lot of fun—we walked around and round as they did, bowing stiffly every time we passed each other and saying a polite "Howdy—do."

They both love music, any kind, any time. Which is why, when they gave a party at their canyon-top castle, they had three orchestras. Mexican music, Gypsy music and plain Harlem jazz—with food and drink native to all three, offering refreshment all over the hillside. It was a good party, because it was the first and only one they've had. Aside from this one splurge of doing things up right, they run to small groups of friends, with no fuss and a lot of conversation.

There's no use pretending that the Welles at home are just like any other couple, however. You will not be invited into the kitchen to see Rita standing prettily flushed over the latest ragout-a-la-Hayworth, which is sometimes the way with glamor gals gone determinedly domestic. She likes to run the vacuum cleaner over her reams and reams of carpeting, when she needs the exercise, but otherwise prefers to confine her housewifely instincts to pouncing triumphantly on a dust-curl skipped by the maid. Orson paints—not chicken coops, but canvases with macabre characters. His study is hung with a collection by a forgotten Mexican artist who ran to political satire, which might have been dull except that the politicians go about their work as grinning skeletons.

You are more apt to find the Mr. and Mrs. in their spare moments, when they have any, engaging in a bull-fighting session on their front terrace. And watching Rita, the widespread red-and-gold cape in her hand not nearly as colorful as she is, lithely side-stepping a horned contraption rushed at her complete with bellows from her famous-voiced husband, you are apt to decide it's too bad other householders don't go in for more of this sort of thing.

Someday Rita may set the world's most graceful bull-fight to music on the screen, because even though she is currently doing an entirely dramatic role with Glenn Ford in Columbia's "Gilda," she is not apt to give up her dancing. Decades ago, her great-grandad danced all over South America, traveling by stage-coach from Brazil to Peru, doing the traditional Spanish dances. She is not likely to stop while there is still something colorful to be done with music and motion . . . which is nice for the rest of us to think about.

Meantime, that's the current report on the dream-girl and the wonder-boy. Still being fabulous—and having more and more fun at it.

Marriage, anywhere, is something to come marked "Fragile," along with the wedding gifts. In Hollywood, it should also be marked "Explosive"—or maybe, "Handle at your own risk!" Both Orson and Rita had learned about that, the hard way, long before they stood together for the second marriage for each of them, holding each other's hands to keep them from shaking. We're not making any high-flown predictions either, except this one:

The pre-Welles Rita, who because she had nothing but graciousness and kindness within her, was a girl with no defenses against disillusionment or hurt. That happiness she hoped for, once known, is a lasting armor. It's the secret of the new Rita—even more vivid, and not nearly so vulnerable!

The End

WELCOME STORK:

There was universal rejoicing in Hollywood when Mr. and Mrs. John Garfield announced that they will have another child in January. Their son, David, is nearly 3. You remember, of course, the tragedy that took their daughter, Katherine, in March, 1945.

VAN HEFLIN, CIVILIAN

action! Roll 'em!" All familiar, yet strange.

What was it going to be like, anyway—back home, making movies again?

It occurred to him that rehabilitation is a mighty fancy word, no matter how you look at it. Too bad you couldn't take tablets three times a day for it; treat it with sulfa, penicillin or atabrine. Probably it would surprise some people, that a motion picture star can use a little rehabilitating too—just like Joe Doaks down the street, who's going back to his old job at the grocery. For an actor, as for all the others coming back, it's a too-abrupt change—the same strangeness that got you, as you went into Army life, smacked you in the face again on the return trip.

Yes, the transition from Civilian to Army three years ago had been a big one—but no more so than that of coming out of the Service and back into motion pictures again.

Van had absolute confidence in his own ability to begin where he'd left off. He was eager, restless to get back into familiar grooves. He knew that, fundamentally, he hadn't changed. But it would take some levelling off—a lot of levelling off! You don't shed experiences and habits of living, overnight. It would take time.

What he didn't know, as he stood there that day, watching June Allyson and Peter Lawford run through their lines before the take, was that Lawford was impressed as all get-out over Van's being on the ring-side. After all, no less an actor than Lionel Barrymore, seconded by other greats, had tagged Van Heflin as "one of the most natural, most capable actors" he'd ever seen. He didn't know Heflin personally, but Lawford well remembered comments of Clark Gable, Spencer Tracy, Mervyn Leroy, Barrymore and others. He recalled how Barrymore, once when stressing that experience in living is the best teacher for an actor, had remarked that Van Heflin was a young man who'd spent more time living life than talking about it, and therefore was able to bring far more to a role. He had praised Heflin's performance as the philosophical derelict in "Johnny Eager" and as Andrew Johnson in "Tennessee Johnson" and said, "I think I've seen Van Heflin win his spurs." Peter wondered if he were winning his.

Nor could Van Heflin know that June Allyson, looking at the tanned actor with the crinkly reddish-blonde hair, was remembering when she'd been hoofing in the line of a Broadway nightclub, watching Van Heflin from afar when he was starring with Katharine Hepburn in "Philadelphia Story." "Gosh!" said June to herself, "the actor's actor!" That's what they called him on Broadway and in Hollywood—the actor's actor.

"Lights, camera, action! Roll 'em!" said the director. Walking onto the set that day we could see Van keep "rolling 'em" in his own mind; flashing back. Some place he'd been. Some guy he'd met. Jagged incidents, like a movie montage. A script that jumped back and forth. The scenes kept dissolving.

He looked at a grizzled grip working with a kleig, and the grip dissolved into his old top-kick, "Pappy."

"Remember him, Maxie?" he asked me, in his modulated drawl.

Sergeant Klein, otherwise affectionately known as "Pappy," was Top Sarge of the 53rd Field Artillery Battalion at Camp Roberts, when Van went there to help train cannoneers. Yes, I remembered Pappy. He called 'em the way he saw 'em. And I remembered the time I visited the camp and how Pappy had "called" Van. "He's a good 'un," said Pappy. That summed up Van Heflin in his books. It was a four-bell review. He was a good 'un.

When the GI's at Camp Roberts heard they had a motion picture star on the arrivals due list, they'd spat on their howitzers and wondered sadly what the field artillery was coming to, when it took a movie star to help them keep those caissons rolling. On top of which, Van had just won the Academy Award for the best supporting performance for an actor, in "Johnny Eager," and the attendant publicity only made a bad thing worse, to the men of his cadre.

Yep, he'd started off with many stripes against him. But Pappy, reporting later, had said, "He's doing the dirty work and no kicking. He likes artillery and he's making the new boys like it, too."

Van's Commanding Officer, Captain Hoghaug of Devil's Lake, North Dakota—a big, powerful artillery officer—seconded Pappy's motion. "He could 've turned it down . . . the field artillery, you know," he told us. "Could 've had a higher rank in a soft job." And he fairly spat the "soft" out. "We admire him for picking a hardworking, hardfighting outfit."

It was a motley assortment, Van's cadre. Included an ex-duck hunter, a cowhand, a Hollywood plumber, a Chinese crooner and a mutt dog, the mascot of the 53rd—a canine cannoneer named "Butch."

"Come to report on Lt. Heflin?" said the ex-plumber. "He's doin' okay. I've been a plumber around Hollywood for a long time . . . and I've been into a lot of those movie guys' houses," he said, adding that as far as he was concerned most of them could go down the drain. He'd been prepared not to like Van Heflin. "But he's okay," he said.

Yeah, Lt. Heflin was okay. But he needed and used his ability as an actor, Van did—to inspire enthusiasm in the new recruits handling the blistering gun pieces in that 120-degree summer heat. At nights, he boned up on field artillery manuals, or maybe obliged at Camp parties with a throaty rendition of "When your gold bars have turned to silver, I'll love you just the same."

His own gold bars didn't turn to silver. He was all set, ready to go back to Fort Sill, Oklahoma, for a brush-up course in field artillery, and probably get a raised commission and then go overseas with his own battery command. But rough and tough as he seemed to the other cannoneers, the Army doctor knew better. An old back injury that he's had for years fouled things up, just at the wrong time. No overseas duty for Van, the Army doctor said. Limited service, maybe. It was a disappointed Lt. Heflin who saw the caissons roll on without him.

The next time I saw Van he had changed branches of the Service, switching to a camera unit in the AAF. "It's the only combat job I'm

KIDNEYS MUST REMOVE EXCESS ACIDS
Help 15 Miles of Kidney Tubes Flush Out Poisonous Waste

If you have an excess of acids in your blood, your 15 miles of kidney tubes may be over-worked. These tiny filters and tubes are working day and night to help Nature rid your system of excess acids and poisonous waste.

When disorder of kidney function permits poisonous matter to remain in your blood, it may cause nagging backache, rheumatic pains, leg pains, loss of pep and energy, getting up nights, swelling, puffiness under the eyes, headaches and dizziness. Frequent or scanty passages with smarting and burning sometimes shows there is something wrong with your kidneys or bladder.

Kidneys may need help the same as bowels, so ask your druggist for Doan's Pills, used successfully by millions for over 40 years. They give happy relief and will help the 15 miles of kidney tubes flush out poisonous waste from your blood. Get Doan's Pills.

physically qualified for," he said.

"LIGHTS!" Another grip overhead switched on a powerful kleig, and Van was thinking how simple it was there . . . and what a dickens of a time they'd had, lighting a jungle in Panama.

FADE IN: A jungle in Central America, where Van and the AAF camera unit crew were on location making a training film, "Land and Live in the Jungle," to illustrate survival in jungle areas—what to do and not to do, to stay alive if forced to bail out into dense wilderness. Van portrayed a cocky Army pilot who parachuted down into the jungle growth, got separated from his own crew, forgot the rules in the manual and did everything the wrong way, almost dying of starvation and malaria before he was found.

They spent two months on location in a wild spot selected by aerial reconnaissance for its authentic fruits, vegetables and animal life. The intense heat, the smothering density, primitive animal life, and the way their clothes mildewed made it a little too real for comfort. It rained every day. If they didn't get the shot by noon, they didn't get it. For then the squall began. They put heavy tarpaulins over the cameras and tried to keep the reflectors from mildewing. A crew strung cables into the jungle to set up lights. They cut trails in the dense undergrowth to let a streak of sunlight in, but it was like lighting up a black room. And all the animals and bugs took their screen roles very seriously. Insects buzzed overtime, big lumbering Central American sloths wandered on and off the set. Everybody wanted to get into the act.

When they got back to the States, Van was assigned to a 16 mm combat camera unit going overseas. "I asked for it," he told us. "If I'm in the Army, I want to be in the Army." But it was starting all over again. No advance in rank. "I don't want rank on it," he said. "I'm not qualified for anything else."

DISSOLVE TO: A Montage. England . . . France . . . Germany.

Van's camera unit was attached to the Medium Bombardment Division of the Ninth Air Force, with duties carrying them into Luxembourg, Belgium and Holland, photographing ground and air activities that kept our Ninth Air Force smacking at Nazi targets of Aachen, St. Lo and Brest.

Going along the road in a jeep one day, near the front lines at Luxembourg, he was hailed loudly from off the road. "Hey, Lt. Heflin," came a voice from the woods. "See you got over!" Van recognized the grimy-faced artilleryman as one trained by his cadre at Camp Roberts, months before. This sort of thing kept happening, clear across Europe. And it gave him a big thrill just thinking, "That's my gang" made him feel very proud.

He collected a lot of pictures, too—pictures that weren't made in the wings of those planes; pictures that stay deep down inside a man's heart. Of the men in his own outfit, who hailed from Oshkosh to Kalamazoo; fellows like his roommate, Major Rex Alcorn . . . "Rex by name, George Raft by looks, and a godsend to me," Van wrote his wife Frances, at home. "He's a lovable guy from Texas . . . somebody you'd like."

Pictures of lonely hours shared and brightened by these men. Van's a rugged individualist sort of person who's always believed that one's personal life is one's own. All his life he'd dodged people who wanted to unveil photos of their families, or read him intimate letters. He'd never realized, until then, that sharing a simple little thing like that could mean so much. But at Mail Call over there, he'd catch himself hanging around the other fellows in the outfit, especially around anybody who drew a big fat letter, just hoping he'd tell him something. Read him some of it, just any part of it.

This was the best thing to come out of a war. A priceless thing. Appreciation and love of one's fellow-man, going alongside guys he would have lived a movie-lifetime and never have known. He wondered—the way you'll wonder when you're 6,000 miles away and have a lot of wondering time—just how he'd honestly stacked up as a human being, all his life. How he'd rated with the non-coms at the studio—the grips, the boom boys, script clerks and the rest.

He wrote long letters home on crude lined paper (with a blunt pencil; because he'd lost his fountain pen, given him by the crew of "Philadelphia Story"). A little thing like their family dog—a cocker spaniel named Harvey—if the dog was lost or had run away from home, it was something good for pages of copy. "You can't lose both of us at the same time," he wrote. "And Harvey promised he'd look after you, too!" Then in his next, "Has Harvey come home yet? Somehow I can't believe he's gone for good. . . ."

During long lonely evenings, he listened to the others talk about their families, and in turn reminisced to them about his own two Reds—his pretty wife, Frances, with the fluffy long shoulder-length red hair and brown eyes, and "Little Red," his two-year-old baby girl, Vanna Gay.

He kept newspaper clippings of Little Red, and his roommate mounted a picture of Frances and hung it importantly on the wall between the clothing hooks. He worried if mail were delayed. The others worried with him. They laughed with him at the picture of Frances taking Vanna to the ice cream stand for the first time. She'd seemed too little to be going anywhere, when he left.

The Sarge's face softened—the Sarge from Oshkosh—and he said: "Your kid, she must be all over the place by now."

The Sarge was right. Little Red was all over the place, all right, when Van got home.

FADE IN: Interior Van Heflin's apartment.

He'd been ordered back home to instruct other 16 mm combat camera units. He was living on a Second Looie's pay, in a small modernistic apartment. And Van was happy. For the first time since coming to Hollywood, he had a whole court full of neighbors. Wonderful folks. Like the auditor and his wife and little girl, who lived next door. They would stay with Little Red when Van and Frances wanted to go out. And Van thought nothing of the man's borrowing his "crate" to take his wife to town.

On the mantel of the fireplace, leaning against Van's "Oscar," was the little teddy bear he'd sent Vanna for her birthday from the port of embarkation, prior to his shoving off for overseas. Scattered all around the place were little French story books he'd brought her from Paris.

RAP-I-DOL SHAMPOO TINT

Little Vanna, of the red-gold curly hair, had the most embarrassing habit of toddling up to Van in the presence of company, handing him one of the books, and asking "What does it say, Daddy?" Van, who can't speak a word of French, would cover up as best he could.

DISSOLVE TO: Van Heflin in Civvys.

They moved to a modest little cottage in Westwood, with a front yard for Little Red to play in. Van's old C.O. gave the youngster a Sealyham pup, solid white with one black ear, named "Penny"—to replace the errant Harvey, who remained AWOL. And her parents enrolled her in a nursery school . . . "Because there aren't any children in our neighborhood for Little Red to grow up with," Van explains. "I want her always to have neighbors; to work and play with them."

If you were to ask Van what motion picture role he'd like most to play, you'd get a decisive answer: the hard-hitting young architect in "The Fountainhead." He's received hundreds of letters from fans saying they can't see anyone else in the role, and Van would love playing it.

Certainly no actor could play it more realistically than Van Heflin—that part of the individualistic young architect who fought for the creative rights of human beings, and who always built as he believed to be right, allowing no person or persons to fit him into a set pattern or groove. Perfect for Van who, in real life, has never dodged any one-way street, when it looked like the right way.

But when you come down to it, he'd like "any part that's real." He says, "Experience makes you a better human being. Very often we actors lose sight of the fact that we're human beings. We get stylized and phony. There's not a part I've ever played that I couldn't play better now. There's not a part that any of us who've been mixed up in this thing have ever played that we couldn't play better now."

DISSOLVE TO: Interior Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer Sound Stage.

A tanned Van Heflin in civvy tweeds that had been brought out of storage after three years, and cleaned, stood watching June Allyson and Peter Lawford finish a scene.

"Cut!" said the director.

"Hello, Mr. Heflin. Say, this is something! You watching me!" said Junie.

"I've looked forward to meeting you, Van," said Peter.

The make-up man came over to shake hands. "Swell having you back, Van." The sound man came to find out what it was like to Van, being back home. "Say, I've got a kid brother over there some place around Cologne. Wonder if you could've run into him . . ."

Two grips leaned over the cat walk and waved down to him. "Hi, Van . . . when you coming back to work?" one of them yelled.

The non-coms of the Metro lot kept crowding around. The work men; generals without rank. And it made him feel mighty proud to pass their inspection.

Gradually, Ex-Second Lt. Van Heflin began to feel "back to normal." The readjustment that doesn't come out of pills began to take hold. As was his beat; his job, his gang. And it was nice to be back. Three years didn't seem so long, after all.

Are you in the know?

Too bad she doesn't care about—

☐ Her competition
☐ Boogie-Woogie
☐ The Three D's

Men never make passes at untidy lasses—droons who ignore the three D's. (Daintiness, deodorants, dress shields.) Warm wool frocks will tattle on such charmlessness. So, take care! Busy perspiration glands are always with us . . . working time-and-a-half on problem days, moreover! Let Kotex help you outsmart them. You see, now there's a deodorant in Kotex. It's locked inside each Kotex and can't shake out—because it is processed right into each pad, not merely dusted on. Try Kotex with deodorant for daintiness—next time!

A long face loveth a—

☐ Turtleneck
☐ Crossed surplice

Be it a blouse, dress, coat—the voice of the turtle is heard in the neckline! It's The Look—the turtleneck. And if yours is a long or oval face, it's swoonderful: high necklines flatter you. Appraise a style for the "plus" it gives you. Likewise, when shopping for sanitary napkins, consider the plus protection you get with Kotex—thanks to that patented safety center. By keeping moisture from the sides of the pad, the special safety center of Kotex offers extra security. A "bonus" that helps build confidence when it means so much to you.

Which would you use?

☐ The Turkish towels
☐ The end of your slip

Freshening up at a friend's house? Let's pray those dripping little paws will reach for the guest towels—not the family's! Even if they look unapproachably lovely, use them. Spare yourself needless puzzlement, too, over which sanitary protection to choose on difficult days. Kotex, of course! For it's Kotex that has the different kind of softness that doesn't just "feel" soft at first touch. You're cushioned-in-comfort for hours and hours, because Kotex is made to stay soft while wearing. And no bunching or roping to plague you!

Can you be picture-perfect—

☐ With a shiny nose
☐ Without benefit of bangles
☐ In winter pastels

Si, si to all 3. Copy this chick for whom the camera clicks, spurning heavy makeup (a slight shine helps model the face). Forsake all bangles, "posey" clothes. Skip sweaters, slacks. Simple winter pastels photograph best. You can be at your best even on trying days—with the self-assurance Kotex gives. The flat tapered ends of Kotex free you from worrisome "outline" fears, for the flat pressed ends of Kotex don't show—don't cause revealing outlines. You're the picture of poise, with Kotex!

The METRO-GOLDWYN-MAYER'S LION'S ROAR

Published in this space every month

The greatest star of the screen!

Sometimes we get to thinking about titles like "Our Vines Have Tender Grapes". Why do authors choose 'em?

★ ★ ★ ★

Take a recent M-G-M picture—"The Clock", for example. That was about a soldier on a 48-hour pass. So the title was quite logical.

★ ★ ★ ★

EDWARD G. ROBINSON

Now try to figure out "Our Vines Have Tender Grapes" and what does that tell you? Well, plenty if you've seen the picture, and love it as much as we do.

★ ★ ★ ★

G. V. Martin, author of the best-selling novel, took his title from "The Song of Solomon": "Take us the foxes, the little foxes, that spoil the vines; for our vines have tender grapes". We guess the author meant it to say: when you've helped a wonderful thing to grow, you've got to watch over it.

★ ★ ★ ★

That's why it's a great title—and a great picture! It reaches straight down to your heart—without pretense or sham.

MARGARET O'BRIEN

And it's brought touchingly to life by the finest performers it has ever been our pleasure to watch: delightful, wistful little Margaret O'Brien; granite-faced, golden-hearted Edward G. Robinson, hardboiled and hilarious little "Butch" Jenkins. What wonderful contrast of character.

★ ★ ★ ★

Like a promising young vine herself, Margaret O'Brien grew beautifully past "Meet Me In St. Louis" and "Music For Millions". Now, in "Our Vines Have Tender Grapes" she matches her brilliant talent with the rough, earthy greatness of Edward G. Robinson.

"BUTCH" JENKINS

★ ★ ★ ★

Yes, a truly fine wine has come from these grapes: a taste of romance with James Craig and Frances Gifford—flavor from Morris Carnovsky and Agnes Moorehead—and a bit of tang from "Butch" Jenkins—the belligerent brat you loved in "National Velvet".

★ ★ ★ ★

A great vintage, with screen play by Dalton Trumbo, direction by Roy Rowland, production by Robert Sisk.

★ ★ ★ ★

This fine motion picture had its World Premiere at Radio City Music Hall.

★ ★ ★ ★

We urge you to see it as soon as you can.

So Proudly We Hail

This is the first in a series of special features dedicated to Hollywood's war veterans and men still in service. Some are stars, many might have been by now if their careers hadn't been interrupted.

Albert Morin, before December, 1941, was definitely on his way "up" in movieland. You'll remember him as Mary Anderson's husband in "Gone With the Wind," the cameraman in "Too Hot to Handle," and the impetuous French officer shot in Humphrey Bogart's "Casablanca" bar. For four years now, Albert has been dodging real bullets in the Army Air Corps.

Entering the Army as a buck private, he worked himself up to a master sergeant, and upon discharge, Albert had to buy a special duffle bag to haul away his medals—the Purple Heart, the Soldiers' Medal, the Good Conduct Medal, the African Combat Medal, the Croix de Guerre, and the Silver Star. Whee! Anyone hefty enough to tote all those around deserves one more medal—for strength.

But Albert doesn't display his medals. In fact, he rarely talks about them. He fought the good fight, and now he's back in Hollywood ready to take up his screen career where he left off. He hasn't been assigned a part yet, but Movieland Magazine is pulling for him, and we're sure that you are too.

Another guy we're proud of right now is Jim Davis. Remember him in "Swing Shift Maizie," "Presenting Lily Mars" and "White Cargo"? Jim's a six foot three-er, with dark brown hair and blue eyes. Before coming to Hollywood, he had an odd assortment of jobs, such as circus roustabout, elephant tender, rock crusher, and oil salesman.

In 1943 he enlisted in the Coast Guard, trained on Catalina Island, and was off to the South Pacific for more than a year. Now Jim has his medical discharge, has taken off his Coast Guard uniform just in time to hop into an olive drab—but for picture purposes only. Jim

MILDRED PIERCE (W.B.) was ambitious, mainly for the sake of her children. Determined to see that they have a life of ease to compensate for privation and misery she endured, Joan Crawford as Mildred Pierce, tells the story of her start in the business world as a waitress, her evolvement to a restaurant owner, finally attaining wealth and success only to bring ruin, unhappiness and murder within her midst before the scales start to balance again. Ann Blyth is Mildred's neurotic daughter; Jack Carson, Zachary Scott, Eve Arden and Bruce Bennett are part of a substantial cast.

BLITHE SPIRIT (Two Cities, released thru U.A.) Noel Coward's scintillating stage success turned into a fast-moving British film. It's that amusing version of the eternal triangle; the third party being an ectoplasmic former wife whose startling appearance for a "return visit" keeps her one-time husband and his second wife frantic trying to devise ways to send their "spirited" guest back. Rex Harrison, Constance Cummings, Margaret Rutherford are part of the cast that takes part in this verbal and visual frolic.

THE LOST WEEKEND (Para.) — The much-talked-about novel by Charles R. Jackson comes to the screen as both an artistic venture and an object lesson. The film loses none of the hard punch of the novel . . . and Ray Milland's sensitive portrayal of Don Birnam, the "alcoholic hero," beset by the tortures of alcoholism and subjected to the agonies of the damned, without sympathy from a supposedly medical-wise society, has earned him a new place in the halls of the acting profession. Jane Wyman, as the sympathetic fiancee, and Phil Terry's patient "good brother" are but two of the more than adequate characterizations to be found in this screen venture that cannot help but impress every movie-goer.

BUD ABBOTT AND LOU COSTELLO IN HOLLYWOOD (MGM)—Making with the funny faces and chasing each other on a Hollywood set, the fat boy and his crying partner are at it again. Cute Frances Rafferty, Carleton Young, Donald McBride, Jean Porter and Warner Anderson are incidentals to the slap-dash shenanigans of these two favorite pie-slingers.

ISLE OF THE DEAD (RKO) isn't Boris Karloff's hide-out, for a change. In this chiller-diller, the bogeyman busies himself trying to prove there's a vampire responsible for the deaths on the island off the Greek Mainland. (This is not an easy task, when Karloff is in a picture.) However, not even the threat of additional vampire murders can stop romance: Ellen Drew and Marc Cramer handle this department.

THE STRANGE MR. GREGORY (Monogram) is your old friend Edmund Lowe, turned professional magician with tricks of mysticism to set the tempo for murder. Jean Rogers, Don Douglas, Frank Reicher are part of this "now you see him . . . now you don't" flicker, but it takes Marjorie Hoshelle to find the answer to whodunit.

SHE WOULDN'T SAY YES (Col.) Rosalind Russell as a brilliant psychiatrist is tossed for a loop by her own neurosis: High professional standards seem to bar any love in her life. The antics of cartoonist Lee Bowman almost overcome the fixation, but its really the understanding of medical papa Charles Winninger, plus a little help from the green-eyed monster (lusciously exemplified as Adele Jergens) that finally straightens out all psychoses and makes for ROMANCE.

ORDERS FROM TOKYO (W.B.) is a Technicolor attempt to mirror the entire story of the war in the Philippines. Marine Corps Capt. David C. Griffin makes the production a personal narrative of the Manila he knew, and in shot after shot brings home the brutality and terror of war. Jap atrocities are recorded with rage and passionate hatred. Brig. Gen. Carlos P. Romulo prefaces the film with an indictment of the Jap War Lord . . . and Griffin's camera provides the evidence.

DANGEROUS PARTNERS (MGM)—Four identical wills, each for a million dollars and all naming one person as beneficiary, seems slightly illegal . . . but interesting. So James Craig and Signe Hasso discover (almost to their regret) when they investigate and uncover an international plot. Audrey Totter, Edmund Gwenn and John Warburton all are dangerous partners in this set-up.

YOUR PROBLEM and MINE

by

Jane Wyman

Dear Jane:

I am supposed to be engaged to a soldier who is now overseas. At one time I thought I was in love with him and so, of course, when he asked me to marry him, I said yes. I now find myself not in love with him any longer.

My problem is that my mother will not allow me to stop writing to him while he is overseas. She insists on my telling him I still love him and all. I am very much in love with a sailor and do not want to keep pretending that I am engaged to the soldier.

Would you advise me to keep writing until he comes back, as my mother wishes, or should I break my engagement immediately. I would appreciate any advice you can give.

Eloise

Dear Eloise:

If you could hear the stories of those who have returned from overseas about boys who have been let down—as you propose to let your fiance down—and the demoralizing effect it has on them, you would think twice before you inflicted the hurt.

Your friend went away believing you loved him—you had told him so—and has been living for, dreaming of and depending upon that love. Though I do not believe in deceiving a person, I think you owe it to him to keep writing and not to disillusion him until he returns.

As I wrote once before, I do not think love can be turned on and off like a faucet. If you loved him once, you may find this new interest is a mere fill-in because you are lonely, and when your friend returns, the old love will be rekindled. Memories have a way of becoming wraithlike and dim during absence, but with the return of the loved one, they take on substance and warmth, and become living things again. So I hope it will be with your love for this man.

Jane Wyman

Dear Miss Wyman:

Three years ago when I was seventeen, I met a man twenty years my senior. We married a month later. Lenny, my husband, went away on a business trip; met and married a young girl of nineteen, without divorcing me.

My baby was born several months after he returned. Now he and this other woman have a child. My child is ill and Lenny will not give me funds for a doctor's care.

I am expecting a child in January. I am living in a shabby home with my one child and no one to support us. Since I am still young, I would like to marry a young soldier who has long been my childhood sweetheart. Lenny refuses a divorce. What should I do?

Carol

Dear Carol:

What a mixed-up situation you are in—in fact so mixed-up that I cannot straighten out all the angles. Evidently you are still living with your husband, even though he has married another girl without benefit of divorce, since you say you are expecting another child in January.

Since your husband will not support you and your child, and since he has broken the law in marrying a second time without a divorce, it seems to me that you need legal help to unscramble your problem, and I suggest that you consult an attorney for advice.

Jane Wyman

Dear Miss Wyman:

I am in love with a man 16 years older than I, and my mother won't let me see him. I am only 15, you see.

George loves me, and tries to see or phone me, but mother tells him he can't see me any more.

I managed to see him last Sunday and we planned an elopement. I need your advice. Should I elope with him or should I listen to my mother. She says he is much too old, but I'll never forget him because I love him very much.

Jeannette

Dear Jeannette:

I agree with your mother, not only because of the disparity in your ages, but also because you are much too young to get married. A man who is double your age should realize this and be willing to wait until you are old enough to know your own mind.

Elopements sound exciting and romantic, but under these circumstances, for your friend to plan to elope with

Pictures in Production

AT COLUMBIA:

JUNGLE RAIDERS is exactly what the title indicates, starring Kane Richmond, Eddie Quillan, Veda Ann Borg, Janet Shaw and Carol Hughes.

TARS AND SPARS is the musical Coast Guard show that would have been started three months ago, had it not been for the studio strike. Janet Blair, brilliant Marc Platt, Alfred Drake, Jeff Donnell, and Sidney Caesar s 1/c, make up the cast.

SONG OF BROADWAY is a Big Town story giving Marjorie Reynolds her first breath of Columbia air. (She is a Paramountie.) Also in the cast are Fred Brady and Jinx Falkenburg who regaled the company with stories about her overseas entertainment tour. In Capri, she met her bridgegroom, Tex McCrary; the mercury stood at 120, but Jinx and Tex swam, rode horseback and jeeped themselves a good coffee brown.

PRISON SHIP is in its first week. So far only Robert Lowery and Nina Foch are working.

HIT THE HAY is the Judy Canova starrer with a calico flavor. Ross Hunter plays opposite.

HAIL THE CHIEF is a whodunit with Chester Morris, Willard Parker, Marguerite Chapman and Janice Carter.

AT METRO-GOLDWYN-MAYER:

THE YEARLING is the Technicolor dramatization of Marjorie Kinnan Rawlings' great novel of Florida two generations ago, with Gregory Peck, Jacqueline White, and Claude Jarman, Jr., as well as Florida natives recruited on the spot.

THIS STRANGE ADVENTURE is in its third month of production with Clark Gable, Greer Garson, Joan Blondell, Thomas Mitchell, John Qualen, Larry Burke, and Esther Howard.

THE POSTMAN ALWAYS RINGS TWICE is being made from James M. Cain's hard-hitting story about a waitress and the itinerant with whom she falls in love. Lana Turner, John Garfield, Cecil Kellaway, Leon Amers, Hume Cronyn and Jeff York.

TWO SISTERS FROM BOSTON is in its second month of shooting with Kathryn Grayson, June Allyson, Jimmy Durante, Lauritz Melchior, and Peter Lawford.

THE HOODLUM SAINT is straight drama, the first Bill Powell has done in years. Esther Williams, Angela Lansbury, James Gleason, and Louis Jean Heydt are also cast.

WHAT NEXT, CORPORAL HARGROVE? is a sequel to the first Hargrove yarn from the author of the same name. You will notice that Robert Walker now has two chevrons on his sleeve, Keenan Wynn still on his neck, and Jean Porter, Chill Wills, Cameron Mitchell and Arthur Walsh to add to the merriment.

BOY'S RANCH is the current James Craig picture with Butch Jenkins, Skippy Homeier (the little Nazi in "The Master Race"), Dorothy Patrick, Sharon McManus, Ray Collins and Darryl Hickman.

BAD BASCOMB is the story of a sentimental brigand, Wallace Beery, who is putty in the hands of Margaret O'Brien, Marjorie Main, Frances Rafferty, Marshall Thompson, J. Carrol Naish, Connie Gilchrist, and Warner Anderson.

UP GOES MAISIE is the first picture Ann Sothern has made since she became a mother and everyone in Hollywood is raving about her increased beauty and her superb figure. George Murphy and Hillary Brooke are also winners.

AT RKO:

THE KID FROM BROOKLYN is a Samuel Goldwyn Production in Technicolor. One day last week they were shooting a prize fight scene in which several thousand extras were employed. Practically the entire press turned out as well. Danny Kaye, as a Caspar Milquetoast type, managed to kayo the woild's champion—almost without striking a blow. It is too funny to explain in full, thus spoiling your enjoyment of the picture—but don't miss it. Danny Kaye, Virginia Mayo, Vera-Ellen, Steve Cochran, Walter Abel, Eve Arden, Lionel Stander, Clarence Kilb and Charles Cane are drawing acting checks for this picture, in addition to having a wonderful time.

CORNERED is the Dick Powell mystery-thriller with Walter Slezak, Micheline Cheirel, Ann Hunter, and Jack LaRue.

HEARTBEAT is the Hakim-Wood production that you won't want to miss. Ginger Rogers and Jean Pierre Aumont are starring, and the magnificent supporting cast includes Adolphe Menjou, Basil Rathbone, Melville Cooper and Mikhail Rasummy.

A TALE OF BEDLAM is a delicious little number that will exhaust your hair from long standing on end. Bedlam, which you probably remember from your history, was the celebrated British booby hatch through which tourists were taken for a small fee. Shivering through the proceedings are Boris Karloff, Anna Lee, Richard Fraser, Joan Newton and Billy House.

TARZAN AND THE LEOPARD MEN is running Johnny Weissmuller around in short skins again. Also Brenda Joyce, Johnny Sheffield, Acquanetta, Tommy Cook, Edgar Barrier and Iris Flores.

THE FALCON'S ALIBI is another in the series with Tom Conway, Rita Corday, Jane Greer (who used to be Bettijane Greer and Mrs. Rudy Vallee), and Vince Barnett.

AT 20TH CENTURY-FOX:

AT UNITED ARTISTS:

DUEL IN THE SUN is the vivid story being filmed from Niven Busch's titanic novel. The Jennifer Jones-Gregory Peck love scenes are said to be among the most torrid ever recorded. Also adding to the caloric value are Joseph Cotten, Lionel Barrymore, Lillian Gish, Walter Huston, Harry Carey, Butterfly McQueen, Steve Dunhill, and Charles Dingle. (Maybe now that the war is over, Steve Dunhill will get some relief from those eager beavers who thought he belonged to the lighter family, and wanted him to get them just one little lighter for grandmother's birthday.)

DIARY OF A CHAMBERMAID is the nineteenth century story of a coquette. Turning in beautiful performances under the direction of Jean Renoir are Paulette Goddard, Burgess Meredith, Hurd Hatfield, Francis Lederer, Judith Anderson, Reginald Owen, Irene Ryan, Florence Bates and Almira Sessions. Make a note of this one—you won't want to miss it.

TOM BRENEMAN'S BREAKFAST IN HOLLYWOOD is something that no early morning tuner-inner throughout this broad land will want to miss. Tom Breneman, complete with hats, plays Uncle Corny; also cast are Bonita Granville, Edward Ryan, Beulah Bondi, Raymond Walburn, Billie Burke, Zasu Pitts, Lois January, Margaret Early, Spike Jones and his City Slickers, and the King Cole Trio.

AT REPUBLIC:

DAKOTA is the new John Wayne western with Vera Hruba Ralston, Walter Brennan, Ward Bond (hooray for him) and Mike Mazurki.

THE PHANTOM RIDER is another bang-bang with Robert Kent, Peggy Stewart, George Lewis, Kenne Duncan, and Hal Taliaferro (pronounced Toliver.)

CONCERTO is a picture you won't want to miss. Frank Borzage is producer-director and the picture is being photographed by Tony Gaudio. Stars are Maria Ouspenskaya, Philip Dorn, Bill Carter (war hero), Catherine McLeod, Felix Bressart and Fritz Feld.

Bright Sayings

"Let's see a nice big smile" is old stuff to Jan Clayton who has smiled her way to stardom for MGM. Sounds simple, too, the way she explains it!

By SHIRLEY COOK
BEAUTY EDITOR

A POPULARITY poll or a reputation for raising spirits do not usually rest on rapier-like wit. The girls who are nicest to be near are those who smile easily—and prettily. So if you're not rating as many dates as you might, look to your lipline. And beyond it! Look, for instance, at lovely Jan Clayton whom you can see in MGM's "Jennie Was a Lady," and follow her hard and fast rules for the smile with a sparkle.

According to Jan, a dentist is one of the most important men in your life so the professional part of your plan for a prettier mouth must include these things. Your dentist should clean your teeth to remove stains and tartar. He should make minor repairs as they are needed before extensive and noticeable damage can cause pain—to you and to your pride.

For the personal part of mouth hygiene, you can do no better than follow Jan's own program. She allows ten minutes each and every morning and night to give her teeth and gums their proper cleansing. Strong silken dental floss, held firmly and drawn gently into all crevices removes the more difficult to reach particles of food. Her toothbrush (and she has at least two to assure a firm one for each cleansing) polishes and cleanses the surfaces; stimulates the gums too, when the brush is drawn down and over the top jaw, up and over the lower. Finally, she swishes away all debris with a fragrant antiseptic mouthwash.

Bows, Missy Clayton, it's not only what you say—it's the way that you say it!

The daily use of dental floss removes wedged-in food which helps to cause decay.

Brisk brush, bright girl! Prettier, firmer teeth and healthier, happier gums will result.

Pleasanter proximity for her friends when she puts this mouth wash on her program.

Color with curve control adds the final touch to freshness for the finest mouth appeal.

Letters TO THE Editor

Dear Miss Cline:

What do English fans like best about American movies? I don't think I could speak for the older people, but most of us in the 'teens are all in agreement about one thing: we like to see young film actors and actresses as much or more than the older, well-established stars.

Of the pictures I have seen lately I liked "Home in Indiana" and "Meet Me In St. Louis" best of all. Musicals are always great favourites over here, and I can honestly say I have never heard anyone say he didn't like Donald O'Connor. He is a universal favourite.

I thought that "Laura" and "The Woman In the Window" were the best murder films, and most people rush to see a Bette Davis film.

Sincerely,
Margaret Bunyan
Aylesbury, Bucks, Eng.

Thanks, Margaret Bunyan. Your letter was written some time ago, I note. Meanwhile, being a fan for musicals, we hope you've seen "Anchors Aweigh," with Gene Kelly, Frank Sinatra and Kathryn Grayson.

Editor, Movieland:

Please have a story of Roddy McDowall. There've been so few stories that I'd never have known him if I hadn't had the pleasure of meeting him in person recently.

Mercedes Demers
Worcester, Mass.

Weren't you the lucky one, though! Guess by now you've seen the "Swim Session" picture spread of Roddy in Septembe. MOVIELAND. And wait—there's more coming! A full-length story, in a near-future issue. Watch for it!

Dear Miss Cline:

In your July issue you mention the 20th Century-Fox picture, "Kitten on the Keys." Your final sentence reads: "Did you know that Zez Confrey, who wrote 'Kitten on the Keys,' died recently?"

Many thanks for being concerned enough to write my obituary, but I assure you that I still feel pretty much alive.

It was my brother, James, who passed away recently and the newspapers got matters mixed.

Cordially yours,
Zez Confrey
Elmhurst, N. Y.

This is one time we're really glad to be corrected on an error. Sorry to have added to the confusion, but happy to find you are still with us.

Ray Milland reaches full acting maturity in his outstanding characterization of Don Birnam, the frenzied alcoholic "hero" in

"the LOST weekend"

BY KATE HOLLIDAY

IF YOU have any preconceived notions about the sort of guy Ray Milland is, I'd suggest you set about instantly getting rid of them. Throw them away! For you are about to see Ray, the erstwhile Bright Young Man of motion pictures, as Don Birnam, the alcoholic in "The Lost Weekend."

Before we go any further, the shock I must prepare you for will in no sense arise from the picture itself. I've seen the film twice and I know. It is one of the truest, most powerful pieces of drama Hollywood has ever put upon a screen, and one which you definitely should see.

The shock will come from the fact that Ray, in this role, is so completely different from anything you have ever dreamed him in, that you'll find it hard to believe he's the same guy. And he is superb.

The whole business began, Ray tells me, when he started seeing copies of the novel by Charles Jackson in his friends' houses. It was on a table at Cary Grant's. It was in a bookcase on a boat of George Brent's. He had heard of the tome, of course, and naturally figured that his pals were reading it because they were to do it on the screen. And then he spotted it on the desk of Billy Wilder, who, with Charles Brackett, has written and produced and directed some of the finest pictures in recent years. The pair of them did "Double Indemnity," among other things. And that was no slouch!

Well, anyway, when Ray saw that Wilder was metaphorically clutching "The Lost Weekend" to his bosom, he began asking questions. It developed that the firm of B. & W. was considering doing the story, and Wilder suggested Ray take the book home and read it. This he did—with the result that he was still awake, hanging onto the volume for dear life, when four o'clock boomed through the morning air. And the next day, when Messrs. Brackett and Wilder inquired delicately whether or not he would be interested in playing Don, he answered in such a resounding affirmative that the walls of Paramount are still shaking.

Because of its subject matter, Hollywood (and Milland) wondered how on earth the picture was ever going to be made. There was, you know, the Hays Office to consider. But Mr. Brackett tells me that the censors were extraordinarily kind. They not only agreed that the film could be made, but declared that the script submitted to them was a gem (Continued on page 99)

It's an ill wind that blows no good . . .
Many stars have found that yesterday's tragedies are tomorrow's blessings

Next picture for glamazon Alexis Smith is "San Antonio" (WB).

Versatile Murphy was a miner before an actor.

Ava Gardner's big hope was to sing with a band.

WHAT are YOU crying about?

Dry those tears! More than likely your tragedy will prove to be the springboard to a greater blessing. So wipe your eyes, open them wide—and come with me.

Look, here's Greer Garson. When she was a little girl, she was ill so often that her nightgowns got more wear than her dresses. Was that bad? She thought so then, but later on she realized that it was the omnivorous reading she did in bed that won her a scholarship before she was eight. Illness taught her to concentrate so well that she could overcome almost any handicap.

That's Marlene Dietrich over there. She meant to be a violinist, but just as she was ready to appear in concert, she broke her wrist. Musical career gone, Marlene turned to stage and screen. A song she sang in "Blue Angel," and a pair of incomparable legs, drew Hollywood's attention—and what was a wrist and a violin?

Before Van Johnson's near-fatal accident, he was just another juvenile around the lot who had done a few films without getting much notice. The accident put him in headlines; for Irene Dunne, Spencer Tracy and Victor Fleming were so concerned about him that they stopped making "A Guy Named Joe" until Van recovered, and then staged a big welcome for him. Van's mail began before he (Continued on page 57)

Phil Terry

He lives the quiet life with actress-wife Joan Crawford and Christina and Phillip; their five and three year-old "junior members." New additions to this happy quartet are two black French poodles, who are almost as photogenic as the rest of the family. Likes to putter around his lovely home . . . latest "puttering" ambition being to put up a brick wall around the place, which proved to be more of a project than he'd counted on . . . so he gave up, after a few days, and called in an expert! Claims climbing ladders makes him nervous because heights bother him . . . Looks as if he'll have to get accustomed to the view from 'way up thar since doing the part of the "good brother" of Ray Milland's alcoholic hero, in "Lost Weekend." Is excited about his next role . . . a dramatic one in Paramount's "To Each His Own" . . . and with Olivia DeHavilland!

SUB-SIXTEEN

By JAMES SCOTT

THE theatrical profession can boast of scores of comedians, from clowns up to and including Bert Lahr, Bob Hope, Phil Silvers and Danny Kaye. But comediennes don't come in droves, which is the reason why Charlotte Greenwood, Carmen Miranda, Joan Davis or Betty Hutton and a few others can practically write their own tickets at the studios.

Until now, whatever child actresses existed usually were confined to the tiny, pretty type—mostly on the obnoxious side and dubbed by the film folk as "the little heavy."

But Barbara Whiting, moppet of thirteen, who plays the straight comedy role of Fuffy Adams in "Junior Miss," is strictly from hilarity—and no mistake. Her next is MGM's "Home Sweet Homicide."

Producer William Perlberg and George Seaton snagged her away from the sacred precincts of Beverly Hills' fashionable Westlake School because she happened (Continued on page 98)

The time, during shooting of scenes for "Dragonwyck"; the place, Sherwood Forest; and the gal, 20th's Gene Tierney.

By FREDDA DUDLEY

LATTER DAY ADAM: While the company making "Leave Her To Heaven" was on location in Oakcreek Canyon, a scenic spot 37 miles outside of Flagstaff, Arizona, in Cocinino County, Cornel Wilde and Gene Tierney decided, one afternoon, to take a quick dip in a nearby lake. Neither was to be needed while a set-up was being changed, so they hurried to their respective portable dressing rooms and hopped into swim togs.

Teresa Wright, off-screen since "Casanova Brown" (Int); but she's at Paramount now for "The Trouble With Women."

Gene was ready first, so plunged in. Suddenly she noticed that she was not alone in the lake: a fine large snake was circling around, planning—as Gene viewed his behavior—the most strategic moment at which to attack. She wasted no time; she began to scream at the top of her lungs.

Cornel, reaching the bank on the double, plunged in, swam to Gene, and laughed heartily at her cry of "Snake." Lightning fast, he grasped the snake and flung it, with his best pitching technique, onto the distant bank. He said to Gene, "Aren't you ashamed! Making all that noise over a harmless little water snake."

Called the sheriff from the bank, "We've just killed your WATER MOCASSIN!"

Cornel and Gene emerged from the lake, far too weak to swim.

INSIDE HOLLYWOOD

They used to be married, but not any longer. It's Alan Curtis at La Rue's with his lovely ex-wife, Ilona Massey.

WELL DEVELOPED IDEA:

Peggy Ryan recently received a letter from her brother, who is in Germany. Having served 125 days in the line without a change of shoes, he suffered a serious case of trench foot and spent several miserable weeks in an army hospital. During his convalescence, his thoughts turned to commercial possibilities along these lines:

Germany was filled with G.I.'s not allowed (at that time) to fraternize. They were bored. They were writing many letters home. They were eager to purchase souvenirs. So, as soon as young Ryan was out of the hospital, he and a buddy set up a photographic studio. Business, he reported, was terrific.

If you have a relative sweating out transportation home, and if you have received a picture of this chap recently, it may have been taken by Tenderfoot Photographer Ryan.

NET RESULT:

Guess who took up the first afternoon of Lt. Richard Ney's recent leave. Katharine Hepburn!

It happened like this: Greer Garson knew that her husband would arrive sometime during a given week, but naturally he was unable to mention the specific day. He arrived at noon on a day on which Greer was scheduled to enact a series of important scenes, so she couldn't leave the studio until 6 P.M. As Greer and Katie have become very good friends (they are eager to do a picture together) Katie came to the rescue and gave the lieutenant a terrific workout on the tennis court.

SHORTIES:

Vivian Blaine is quietly losing her mind. By some accident her home address was acquired by a group of Los Angeles bobby-soxers, who spread the news. It has been impossible for her to get any sleep recently, because the thoughtless fans drive past her apartment at all hours of the day and night, and honk like a terrified flock of operatic geese. She'd move—haha—if that weren't the vainest hope of a local householder.

Cheryl Christine Crane celebrated her second birthday recently. Her dad had ordered a handmade sand table for her, six feet square. It was painted red, and equipped with wheels making it easy to move; the sand was a white, especially-screened variety that Steve secured from the beach at La Jolla. Lana had a party for her daughter, inviting eight moppets of Cherry's age to attend. A photographer secured some of the dreamiest pictures to be taken in Hollywood for months, but they won't be released because Lana does not believe in publicizing children, no matter how lovely they may be.

Donald O'Connor is currently stationed in Atlantic City, putting on radio shows for an encampment of WACs. He wrote to a Hollywood friend, "I've spent many, many hours wearing out the boards of various stages, but this is the first time that I've built the stage from scratch."

The Charles Korvins have a delightful member of the household named "Piglet." He is a ragdoll pig with a nose like a tapir, and Piglet alone is responsible for all domestic Korvin problems. 'If someone forgot to deliver Gaza's suits to the cleaners'—Piglet's fault. If Gaza burns a hole in the best tablecloth—Piglet's fault. If Helana burns the roast—Piglet's to blame. Very handy household gismo.

CONJUGAL:

The production schedule at Universal is currently distinguished by three husband and wife teams: Walter Wanger is producing "Scarlet Street," starring his wife and Edward G. Robinson; Deanna Durbin is appearing in "Lady On a Train," produced by her husband, Felix Jackson; Merle Oberon is starring in "As It Was Before" with Charles Korvin, and is being photographed in the role by her husband, Lucien Ballard.

It may be rather late for a Bogart-Bacall wedding anecdote, but this one is worth repeating. Seems that the day before Bogart left for Mansfield with Miss Bacall, to be married at Louis Bromfield's ranch, he was having a terrible time trying to deliver lines for his part in "The Two Mrs. Carrolls." He made a dozen trips to the telephone to complete last minute arrangements; he scribbled notes on weary envelopes carried in his breast pocket; he spent spare moments staring into space. He had, in short, the jitters.

Barbara Stanwyck (working opposite him) noted the perturbation of the thrice-previously-married Mr. Bogart, and observed in honeyed tones, "I understand how nervous you are, Bogie. After all, when a man is about to become a bridegroom for the first time . . ."

Retorted Mr. Bogart wryly, "That's what I like about you, Stanny. You're so sensitive!"

BACK TO THE LAND:

Mr. Gable gave the problem a good deal of thought, to wit: he had worked every single day for 65 working days; he was driving a long distance from his ranch to the studio each day; surely it would be more sensible to find a small, casual house near the studio, than live so far away; ergo: he should sell his ranch.

"I would like to dance in movies" . . .

many hundreds have had that wish,

but only a few have had it come true

ALL over this broad land there are gazelle-ish young men who, finishing a pas de chat before the imperturbable practice room mirrors, have said to themselves: "Astaire? Who is he?"

And, when Miss Ginger Rogers expressed herself as desiring only dramatic roles in future, agile Annies throughout the country moved themselves up one rung on their mental ladders of success.

At present, in Hollywood, there are three vivid newcomers—two men and a girl—who are adding impressive footnotes to the paragraphs already tapped out by Astaire, Rogers & Company. And the amazing fact about all three is that not one of them set out originally with the leaping purpose of becoming a dancer. Each fell into the profession; landing, naturally with a tour j'ete, by accident. One protested the accident forcibly, but Johnny Coy's mother had a persuasive hand.

So we introduce to you the new toe and torso tornadoes, Vera-Ellen, Johnny Coy, and Marc Platt.

You saw Vera-Ellen for the first time in "Wonder Man"—when she did, among other things, "Bali-Boogie" with Danny Kaye. You will (Continued on page 67)

Jean Pierre Aumont—one of the first to get into the war, overseas 18 months, and what a welcome when he returned to Hollywood!

BEFORE Jean Pierre Aumont arrived for his luncheon appointment at the Beverly-Wilshire, a friend of his at the table said, "He'll come rushing in here any minute now, so sorry to be late, and so charming about it! He's always late—he just can't help it."

And that's just the way it was. Suddenly he appeared in the doorway, looked anxiously about the room until he located the table, then came hurrying over, mingling his greetings with apologies, and radiating more charm than any one man has a right to have.

"I don't know why it is," he said regretfully, as he sat down. "I can never be quite on time. I just never am."

"No one expects you to, really, Jean Pierre," teased his friend.

"But I always try to be, you know," he protested, with that engaging smile. "When I first came to America, people said to me, 'Now, look, young man, this is not Europe. You cannot be late to everything. You must learn to be on time.' And I made up my mind that I would be. And always I try, but something happens at the last minute: a phone call just as I'm leaving the house, or the traffic lights. . . . That is one trouble—there are too many red lights!" Strangers with Children

Bob Hope . . . a Yankee Doodle who really went to town! The guy who chalked up more than 300,000 miles of travel, entertaining Allied troops all over the war-torn world

Testimony to popularity "over there"—10,000 troops of Allied Nations jam-packed London's Albert Hall from floor to ceiling to see him: thousands were turned away.

Where there's Hope . . . there's a crowd! Recipient of many honors, Bob's latest is a reproduction of himself in Madame Tussoud's famous London wax museum.

Once again teamed with Lamaur and Crosby in laff-pravaker "Raad to Utapia" (Para.). Abave, Mrs. Hope and Linda. Tany (5) stayed hame.

BOB HOPE recently met a friend on the Paramount Studio lot, where he was working in a picture titled "The Road To Utopia."

"Howdy," said the friend. "I saw that pretty wife of yours on the golf course yesterday afternoon."

"How was she?" asked Bob.

The friend hesitated. "Do you mean how was her score?"

"How did she look? What did she say?" amplified Bob sagely. "If I'd known you were going to see her, I would have had you tell her 'hello' for me. Do you realize that it's reached the point where Dolores awakens toward morning, leans over and stares at my nearby form, quivering in nervous slumber. 'That,' she whispers, 'must be my husband.' We are, you might say, strangers with children."

This was not entirely a comedian's exaggeration. Mr. Hope is a whirling dervish with wings, a supercharged engine, and a pogo stick. He works long hours at the studio, extended by long hours at the broadcasting station. (In addition to his regular show, he has been known to give three or four additional broadcasts a week.) His Sundays are taken up by charity golf matches, appearances at bond rallies, or entertainment tours of army and navy establishments or hospitals. An observer, bearing in mind that Bob is British-born, once said in admiration, "Anyone who has ever seen how much Bob Hope can do, in a week, can understand how an entire nation made up of such men could have won the Battle of Britain."

Bob Hope, as a public personality, is so well established in the minds of the world that he is seldom regarded as an individual with an ordinary man's desire to withdraw from the spotlight and relax at home with his wife and children.

When the golf course conversation was reported to Mrs. Hope, she smiled ruefully. "Only yesterday I received a letter from a school chum of mine who is now living in the East. One of her paragraphs began, 'How does it feel to be married to a famous man?' I answered her by admitting that there had been a time in my life, not too long ago, when I had yearned to be the wife of a banker, an attorney a plumber or a farmer. Such a wife can plan an orderly life. Conversely, the wife of a man in Bob's position never knows at what time dinner will be served to a complete family, if it is served at all. She never knows in the morning where she will be that night. Yet I've grown so accustomed to the breathless pace, to the spontaneous character (Continued on page 92)

BILL EDWARDS is the tallest guy in pictures. But I warn you, don't say "How's the air up there?" if you want to stay on speaking terms with him. Not only is he justifiably tired of the corny crack, but for some strange reason he is sensitive about his height of 6'6", as if it were something freakish or astronomical, and no one apparently can convince him that most of Hollywood's leading men would give a good right eye to approximate it.

Sonny Tufts, for example, is a tidy 6'5", yet I happen to know that Sonny actually wore "lifts" in his shoes for his scenes with Bill in "Miss Susie Slagle!" That ought to prove something to the "big guy," but doesn't.

Likewise I would suggest you never flick cigarette ashes on his mother's rugs, or the floor of his Indian tan convertible coupe. The careless habit gripes the bejeepers out of him, and cost one young glamour girl I know the chance to be Mrs. Bill Edwards.

Not many people in Hollywood, even at his own studio, Paramount, know Bill. Really know him, I mean. Everyone is well aware of his face and name, of course, and that his performance in "Susie Slagle" (his first real chance) has earmarked him for top roles in important pictures henceforth. JUNE BRIDE

Hollywood, Aug. 19—Screen players June Allyson and Dick Powell were married at the home of song writer Johnny Green, in the presence of a few friends. Judge Edward Brand officiated; Jane Wilkie was bridesmaid. It is the third marriage for Powell; the first for the 21-year old bride.

TO RECORD this romance between June and Dick is like writing a history of the Bedlam Asylum. It must have had its sweeter moments, but if so, they were in the minority, and incidental to the wacky goings-on between the two.

For instance, June—the incorrigible sentimentalist—hasn't yet gleaned a sentimental moment. For years she dreamed of the day the man in her life would slip the engagement ring on her finger. And it happened this way:

Dick picked her up at her dentist's office, drove to a quiet spot and stopped the car. He fished in his pocket, drew out a small box and opened it, to disclose a star sapphire, set in gold and surrounded by diamonds. June's eyes were misty—until he put the ring on the fourth finger of her right hand.

"Please," said June, "let's get the right hand. That is to say, the left."

The correction made, Dick leaned over to kiss her, and was startled when she drew away. He made a firmer approach, and drew away himself, even more startled.

"What is the matter with your mouth?" he said. "It—it slips all over the place."

"Novocaine," replied June sadly. "The dentist gave me novocaine and I'm out of control."

But to begin at the beginning. One starry night Dick Powell was driving home from his studio. He didn't particularly want to go home; there was no one there and nothing to do. When he passed June's apartment he noticed the windows ablaze with light. He had met June on the set of "Meet The People" and she had seemed a nice kid. So Mr. Powell made a quick U-turn and parked his car in her driveway.

He found the apartment straining its seams with June's crowd from the studio, and spent an hour stowed in a corner with the hostess's housekeeper-companion, (Continued on page 98)

as he is

A Continental look . . . quick sense of humor . . . delightful conversationalist . . . and added to all this, a very nice guy

By JAN WILSON

They met at the Stage Door Canteen and 'twas love at first sight.

An expert cameraman, too. Here, with Ella Raines.

CHARLES KORVIN just missed being born in America. His parents were packed and ready to leave Hungary, when his uncles returned—having been in this country—and persuaded them to stay where they were.

So they did, and two months later Charles Korvin put in his appearance.

It is difficult to picture what kind of man Korvin might have been, were he New York City-born, instead of in the village of Pastyen. One thing is certain, however: that his having lived such a gypsy life in so many countries gives him a personality that's thoroughly saturated with "continental atmosphere."

In addition to which—yes, he's one of the handsomest men to hit Hollywood in a long time. Six feet tall, on the button. One hundred and seventy-five pounds, dark hair streaked with iron gray, hazel eyes—he even has a dimple in his chin! And he has a quick sense of humor, is a delightful conversationalist . . . with an accent reminiscent of Boyer's, a decade ago. He's a nice guy, Charles Korvin. And girls, listen to this! He prefers American girls! He thinks they are by far the best dressed, that they have "the courage of color." French women, he says, always look as if they are going to a wake, swathed in dead black from head to toe.

And that brings us to tell of his marriage; the story which began about five o'clock one fine spring afternoon, in 1941. Helena Fredricks, actress, was making coffee at the Stage Door Canteen. Mr. Korvin, entering the kitchen on a new shift of busboys, spied the cute blonde wrestling wearily with the coffee urn, sneaked up behind her and whispered, "Hi, beautiful."

Helena swung with her towel; she thought he was fresh, and she said so. The Canteen cemented the friendship, however. And as Charles later told her mother, in phrasing that's characteristic: "Helena is one of the beautiful ones."

So they were married. They live now in a small, tastefully decorated apartment in Hollywood. One entire wall of the living room is lined with record albums, and the kitchen is well-stocked with strange spices and herbs—all necessary for Korvin's expert meddling in things culinary; he has a special dish for every country he's lived in, which adds up to quite a few dishes!

To start with, there was Hungary—although the town where he was born has been within the boundaries of Czechoslovakia since 1919. Korvin's father had only two years of formal schooling, but he made and lost three fortunes in his lifetime. The family moved about considerably—from Postyen to Budapest, where the elder Korvin owned a cafe, then to Lake Balaton for a shipbuilding project. There Charles learned to love ships, and everything about them; but after his mother's death, in 1926, the family moved back to Budapest.

Born in Hungary; traveled all over Europe 'til writer James Hilton persuaded him to try Calif. "As It Was Before" (Univ.) is his next picture. Mrs. Korvin was stage actress Helena Fredricks.

PLANNED FOR PLEASANT LIVING. The beautiful living room in 20th Century's "Laura" successfully combined the old with new, by highlighting modern informality with touches of English Victorian Baroque to give character and warmth. This is a movie trend enthusiastically followed by many decorators who consider modern furniture too impersonal. The result . . . livable living rooms that reflect the owners' personality and charm!

TO MODERNIZE OR NOT may be your question. There is something contributory to hospitality about the genuinely wholesome look of colonial furniture. An example . . . the up-to-date New England farmhouse in RKO's "The Passionate Ghost".

Rooms of improvement and homes with a future . . . what the movie decorators predict for post-war planned interiors

FORESHADOWING YOUR HOME

STREAMLINED EFFICIENCY is another accepted contribution to modern living, popularized by "movie set" homes. This modern kitchen is for "Be It Ever So Humble" (Univ.).

COMFORT PLUS CHI-CHI. Significant of the present indicative of the future . . . this living room from "Stork Club" is in accord with most post-war homes.

WITH all this talk of the home of the future—talk which glitters with push-button living, outside-inside rooms, disappearing walls and ad flabbergastium—it seems pertinent to query the men who create homes for the motion picture screen.

Phony though these homes may be, they have caused more human beings to sigh for home improvements than almost any other medium. Long ago a smart linoleum promoter sold studio art directors and interior decorators on presenting stylized linoleum in entry halls, nurseries, recreation rooms and even drawing rooms. (Continued on page 78)

Time is Telling

Did Jennifer Jones really deserve the Oscar for her Bernadette? That was the question . . . now we know!

By RAE PICKETT

WHEN Jennifer Jones was awarded the Academy Oscar in 1944 for her portrayal of the little peasant saint in "The Song of Bernadette," Hollywood split up into a dozen camps expressing all shades of opinion between the two opposite views (a) that Jennifer definitely did, and (b) that she definitely did not deserve the Oscar.

Jennifer herself was among the latter. On the night she received the award, as she walked back to her seat, carrying the Oscar, she stopped to say to Ingrid Bergman (who had also been a candidate for her Maria, in "For Whom the Bell Tolls"): "I'm sorry. You should have had it." Ingrid smiled and shook her head, saying, "No, Jennifer, your Bernadette was greater than my Maria." Afterwards, Jennifer always maintained that she had won the award on other people's work. She gave all the credit to Henry King, who had directed her in "Bernadette," and to others connected with the production.

Granting that no award ever satisfies everybody, this one to Jennifer stirred up more of a hornet's nest than usual. Nobody denied the beauty of her performance, but the theme of the oppositionists ran something like this: "The Academy Award is supposed to be for the best performance. And how do we know that 'Bernadette' was a performance? Jones may be just a natural type for the part. Until we see her in other parts, it's impossible to tell whether she's an actress or just being herself. Only time will tell."

On the other hand, it was argued that the Academy award was based on quality alone, apart from all considerations of length of experience. On that basis, a girl who could begin her screen career with such a portrayal had as much right to the award as anyone else. Time would tell, they also said, that Jennifer had it in her to give many award-calibre performances; so let her win as many Oscars as she could, and more power to her!

Jennifer's right—or non-right—to the Oscar for that performance has been a popular gossip topic ever since, though the line-up as to who thinks what is constantly changing. Meanwhile, Jennifer goes serenely on her way, giving one outstanding performance after another, in roles as widely varied as opinions about her ability. And as everybody said it would, time is telling.

But the experts didn't have to wait for time. They recognized Jennifer's potentialities early in the game. For instance, Director Henry King, who's in a position to know, had this to say: "Jennifer Jones definitely is an actress, a very rare kind of actress. She had to be, to play the role of Bernadette. Nobody could have injected Bernadette into her. Bernadette had to come out of her. She is like a very sensitive musical instrument which, with very careful manipulation, will produce wonderful effects. Contrary to popular belief, she was not selected because she was an unknown. She was selected because she was the best actress we could find for the part."

Those who predicted a quick fade-out for Jennifer after "Bernadette" (remembering Betty Bronson's eclipse after "Peter Pan" and Charlotte Henry's after "Alice in Wonderland,") reckoned without the shrewd management of David O. Selznick. To prove that Jennifer was neither a flash in the pan nor a natural Bernadette-type, he cast her, immediately after that, as Jane, a sweet, wholesome girl in these United States during this World War II, in "Since You Went Away." This picture brought her back from the remote and hallowed niche she had carved for herself as Bernadette, and established her as "the girl next door."

Next came "Love Letters." Producer Hal Wallis borrowed Jennifer to play the part of an idealistic girl, who, as a result of severe emotional shock, becomes a victim of amnesia. An intensely exacting role this was, and handled with such skill you could not remember, while seeing the picture, that here was acting being done. It was even difficult to believe that this was the same girl whom you had seen in the two previous pictures.

When asked why he selected Jennifer (Continued on page 59)

Friendly competitors in '44, now both are "winners."

Off-screen, Jennifer is shy, somewhat naive, but very gay.

GREETINGS, boys and girls! Lots of music news this month, so let us be off!

Guy Lombardo and his band have started work on Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer's new musical, "No Leave, No Love." Though the picture stars Van Johnson, the story is really centered around the life of the Lombardo family, so Guy and his brothers will have some acting to do, with plenty of dialogue, in addition to their musical duties.

Walt Disney has signed some big musical personalities for his next production, "Make Mine Music." The picture will be in technicolor, and all-cartoon, with a voice or a band behind every number. And the cartoon characters will be new ones. So far, Disney has nabbed Dinah Shore, Nelson Eddy, Benny Goodman, Cozy Cole, Sid Weiss, and Teddy Wilson, with more big names to come.

Tom Breneman's "Breakfast In Hollywood," which has been one of the most popular daytime radio shows, is being made into a movie, and will be released by United Artists. They say the film, though based on the program, will be more of a variety musical. The rhythmic chores will be handled by Andy Russell, The King Cole Trio and Spike Jones And The City Slickers.

Frankie Carle and his orchestra will have five numbers in R.K.O.'s "Riverboat Rhythm," including his famous "Sunrise Serenade."

Harry James told me just before he left New York that he hopes his next picture will be "Young Man With A Horn." The screenplay of the famous novel formerly owned by Paramount, at one time was to have starred Burgess Meredith. An independent producer, Bruce Manning, now has the rights to the story, and Harry says he and Manning may make a deal. Of course James still owes Twentieth Century-Fox two pictures on his contract with them.

FIRST, those smoothly tapered, gently rounded ends that assure easy insertion. You can tell at a glance that FIBS must be easy to use.

SECOND, the "quilting" that prevents cotton particles from clinging to delicate internal membranes. It's a feature fastidious women are quick to appreciate.

FIBS quilting also contributes directly to your comfort... keeps Fibs from fluffing up to an uncomfortable size, which might cause pressure, irritation, difficult removal. No other tampon is quilted!

record you Sinatra-atics have been waiting for, and it's a goodie. Frank and Xavier Cugat's orchestra together on "My Shawl" and "Stars In Your Eyes." Now, don't rush, kids. On second thought, maybe you'd better.

If they're all gone, maybe you'll settle for "Cugat's Favorite Rhumbas," an album of Cugie's pet Latin-American dities, including "Begin The Beguine," "Green Eyes," "Besame Mucho," and others; eight sides in all.

Then there's a single Cugat disc, "No Can Do," and "You Forgotcha Guitar." Both vocals are sung by radio singer Leah Ray, who got her start in the music business several years ago as Phil Harris' singer.

The Modernaires, with Paula Kelly, have done their usual good job on "The Night Is Young And You're So Beautiful," and "Jog Along," with Mitchell Ayres' orchestra.

"I'm Gonna Love That Guy," and "Till The End Of Time," are the songs Ginny Simms has chosen for her newest record; and the titles are timely, inasmuch as Ginny is a brand new bride.

Count Basie jumps in with two instrumentals, "Feather Merchant" and "Ain't It The Truth."

"Along The Navajo Trail," and "A Tender Word Will Mend It All" have been waxed by Gene Krupa and his band, with Buddy Stewart in for the lyrics. You'll hear some of Charlie Venturo's tenor sax on both tunes.

Benny Goodman offers "It's Only A Paper Moon," and "I'm Gonna Love That Guy," with vocals by Dottie Reid. Dottie has since left the band.

Harry James' "11:60 P. M." has been a big hit, but his new one is going to furnish some competition. It's "Autumn Serenade," and "It's Been A Long, Long Time," with a Kitty Kallen vocal.

A new recording star on the Columbia label is a young lady by the name of Pearl Bailey, and her first record is "Tired," and "Fifteen Years" (And I'm Still Serving Time). I'm sure most of you have never heard of her, but unless I miss my bet, you will. I predict she'll be the next vocal sensation. Her style is completely unlike anyone else's.

DECCA:

If you like Gershwin music, (and who doesn't?) you'll want the album, "Porgy and Bess," with the Los Angeles Philharmonic Orchestra under the direction of Alfred Wallenstein.

Dick Haymes has recorded two of the tunes he sings in his latest picture, "State Fair." They're "That's For Me," and "It Might As Well Be Spring," with Victor Young's orchestra. (Music and lyrics by the famous Hammerstein-Rodgers team.)

Russ Morgan and his "Music In The Morgan Manner" are represented with "Remember When," with a vocal by Marjorie Lee; and "The Wish That I Wish Tonight," from the picture "Christmas In Connecticut." Russ sings this one himself.

Les Paul and His Trio are heard on "Begin The Beguine" and "Dream Dust." This is one of the very best trios, consisting of two guitars and bass fiddle, with piano accompaniment.

Eugenie Baird and Mel Torme and his orchestra have a pleasing duo in "Am I Blue?" and "I Fall In Love Too Easily."

The Andrews Sisters' latest platter should bring plenty of nickels into the nation's juke boxes. It's "The Blond Sailor," and "Lily Belle." The "Sailor" tune is an adaptation of an old Bavarian melody, and sounds like it will ring the hit bell.

Randy Brooks has Marian Hutton as the vocal lass on his second record for Decca. The tunes are "I'm Gonna Love That Guy," and "No More Toujours L'Amour." The latter tune is the

BIG BILL (EDWARDS)

They know he is exceedingly handsome in a clean blond way, friendly enough on the surface, and a thorough-going gentleman given to the habit of drawling "We-e-ll, I don't know-o-w!" so frequently that it has become his trademark around the studio.

Few people, however, know what makes him tick as a person, and the fault is entirely his own. Almost painfully reticent by nature, he refuses to lower his guard until he knows you well and believes you like him. This trait, naturally, is somewhat baffling to those many souls given to calling everyone "Darling!" within 10 minutes of a casual introduction, and hence often is misinterpreted as conceit on his part. Actually Bill has surprisingly little conceit, especially in view of his youth, good looks, and great appeal to women, who have a tendency to throw themselves at him. When that happens, I might add, Edwards has a tendency to run!

Once his guard is down, the stiffly polite and reserved Bill turns into a fun-loving young man with a grand sense of humor and unexpected wit, excellent company, and a devoted and thoughtful friend. Like everyone else, I had to discover that the hard way; when I first met him I honestly thought he was a stuffy stupe! So did his fellow actor, sophisticated Billy DeWolfe, who now is his closest friend and biggest booster. Billy, incidentally, has done much towards giving Bill a certain poise, suavity and self-confidence he badly lacked.

One of the things I like best about Bill is the way he is neither self-conscious nor (praise be!) noble now about all the tough raps he has taken from life in getting where he is. Some of those raps were heartbreakers, believe me, and for years it was nip and tuck just to keep eating. On one occasion, when he and his mother were returning from an ill-fated trip West, they drove straight through, day and night; their limited funds made it necessary to choose between eating and the price of lodgings for the night. They chose to eat.

Another thing I like is the lack of Hollywood ham in him. He never struts or poses, in or out of public, and actually is embarrassed when some little incident draws attention to him. Even at home base, the studio, where "gestures" of various sorts are the expected thing, Bill bends over backward to escape being thought actor-ish. The other day, for example, we were walking to the commissary for lunch, and a boy from the fan mail department thrust a large package of the week's fan letters into his hands. As if they were hot potatoes, Bill dumped them in my arms.

"Please, for Pete's sake, will you carry 'em?" he asked, blushing guiltily. "Somebody might think I was trying to show I was good enough to get fan mail!"

Shades of Hollywood! And the guy really meant it!

Perhaps best of all I like Bill's quiet, selfless devotion to his mother, May. That devotion comes straight from the heart, not from any sense of filial duty; they have faced the world together since he was a kid of 7, and together took whatever hard knocks came their way.

Incidentally, someone recently wrote that you "either want to neck Bill or mother him". Baloney! Even May doesn't mother him in the conventional sense. They are, rather, the greatest of pals, who love each other, understand each other, and because laughter helped them over many a bad break, rib each other in good-natured fun. Recently, among Bill's fan letters was one effusive bit of mush about his eyes "like deep pools of sapphires", his teeth, "like stars", and his (wow!) "3 ft. wide shoulders and wavy hair!"

"What a dream boat," May sighed, "and to think you're all mine!"

Mother Edwards is no slouch herself when it comes to good looks and charm. Alongside of Bill she looks tinier than she is, and is friendly and latest composition of one Hoagy Carmichael.

Here's another fine album from the Brunswick Collector's Series. It's the "Frank Teschemacher Jazz Album," and includes such old goodies as "I've Found A New Baby," "There'll Be Some Changes Made," with such artists as Eddie Condon, Red McKenzie, and "Wingy Manone." If you're a jazz fan, this will be a must on your list.

VICTOR:

Freddy Martin and His Orchestra have two new ones, "Lily Belle," sung by Gene Conklin and the Martin Men, and "And There You Are," with an Artie Wayne vocal.

"Stephen Foster Favorites." That's the name of the first solo album Sammy Kaye has made. The "Swing and Sway" maestro, with Billy Williams and the Five Kaydets, have recorded some of the best loved Foster melodies. There are ten sides in all, with such favorites as "Old Kentucky Home," "Swannee River," "Old Black Joe," and "I Dream of Jeanie With The Light Brown Hair."

Sammy is also in with a single platter, "Promises," sung by Billy Williams; and "I'll Be Walkin' With My Honey" (Soon, Soon, Soon) with Billy and Nancy Norman dividing the vocal honors.

Vaughn Monroe has done the novelty tune, "Down In Chi-Chi Hotcha Watchee," backed up by "Something Sentimental." Vaughn and The Norton Sisters capably handle the lyric department on both sides.

"That's For Me," and "Yolanda" are the numbers selected by Artie Shaw for his new one. They're both ballads with vocals by Hal Stevens.

Tommy Dorsey's ever popular "Boogie Woogie," has been re-issued on his latest platter, backed up by "There You Go," with Stuart Foster on the chorus.

CAPITOL:

Lots of good things from the Capitol Corner this month. First off we find Jo Stafford's "That's For Me," and "Gee, It's Good To Hold You," with a beautiful trumpet chorus by Billy Butterfield, now Private B.B., of the U. S. Army.

Betty Hutton bounces forth with a coupling that is sure to be popular with her fans. She does "What Do You Want To Make Those Eyes At Me For?" from her recent picture, "Incendiary Blonde." On the flipover she whips through "Doin' It The Hard Way," which she does in the forthcoming "Duffy's Tavern." This one is a worthy successor to her sensational "Rocking Horse."

Cootie Williams and his Orchestra make their bow on the Capitol label with two powerful instrumentals, "House of Joy," and "Everything But You." And Cootie's trumpet is very much in evidence.

Margaret Whiting and Paul Weston have joined forces for "How Deep Is The Ocean," (which is being revived in the movie "Blue Skies,") and "It Might As Well Be Spring."

Capitol has a fine series of albums entitled, "The History Of Jazz." There are four volumes, "The Solid South," "The Golden Era," "Then Came Swing," and "The Modern Age."

Many of the all-time greats in the jazz field are represented with their recorded work; such artists as Zutty Singleton, Rex Stewart, Eddie Miller, Coleman Hawkins, Benny Carter, Jack Teagarden, Red Nichols and others.

Johnnie Johnston's waxing of "Wait and See," and "Autumn Serenade" certainly will not make his fans unhappy. Paul Weston did the fine arrangements and Carl Kress handled the baton.

JAM NOTES:

Carl Ravazza is a clickeroo at the Roxy Theatre in New York, where he has been signed for six months as a vocal soloist and M.C. Carl gave up his dance band and sold his library to Harry Cool, who decided to become a leader instead of a radio singer. Of course Harry is handling some of the vocals with his band, and has been very successful at the Blackhawk in Chicago. A neat trade that has worked out O.K.

. . . Moe Zudicoff, well-known trombonist, formerly with Jimmy Dorsey, is planning his own band, and will call himself Buddy Morrow . . . Marjorie Hyams has left Woody Herman . . . The head man of the Herd may land a big radio commercial soon. . . . When the Hotel New Yorker in the big city signed Chuck Foster, it marked the first time in over five years that they had featured a sweet band. . . . Monica Lewis, who became Mrs. Bob Thiele during the summer, may record for her husband's company, "Signature."

. . . Bob Chester is reorganizing a band styled somewhat like the old Glenn Miller outfit, which wouldn't be bad, at all, at all. . . . Speaking of Miller, when his Army Air Forces Orchestra returned to the States, they were all given a thirty-day furlough, but before being processed, they were guests at a special show at Camp Shanks, N. Y., and their old friend, Marion Hutton, was the surprise star. . . . It looks like Frank Sinatra said "So Long, Max Factor," and "Hello, Old Gold," in a quick switch of radio sponsors, which was all very amiable. . . . Jane Froman and Hal McIntyre have extended their overseas tours. . . . Eileen Barton is the happiest girl in New York because she is being starred on her own program, "Teen Timers Canteen." . . . Carlos Ramirez has been breaking all kinds of records in his concert tour through South America. . . . Ella Mae Morse landed a part in P.R.C.'s new movie, "How Do You Do?"

. . . Martha Tilton will soon make her third starring picture for the same company. . . . Johnny Bothwell, outstanding alto saxophonist with Boyd Raeburn's band, has left Raeburn, and may front his own group. . . . Nancy Norman swears she will retire from the Sammy Kaye aggregation as soon as she becomes the bride of crooner Dick Brown. Funny thing about this romance, it started out as a publicity gag, but became the real thing. Good luck, kids.

. . . Rumor Department: (And I'm only asking!) Is Buddy Stewart going to leave Gene Krupa? Will Joan Edwards do a fade from the "Hit Parade" program soon?

Well, Kiddies, that does it for now. See you next month. In the meantime, if you have any little musical puzzlers, send them along, and I'll do my best to answer you. But please, not too many questions, and be sure to enclose a SELF-ADDRESSED STAMPED ENVELOPE. Just write Jill Warren, Movieland Magazine, 1476 Broadway, New York City 18, N. Y.

easy to know. My favorite story about the two of them dates back to Bill's early days in Hollywood when the going was tough and the future looked anything but promising.

Once a week it was their custom to treat themselves to a movie on Hollywood Boulevard. They always rode the bus to the theater in order to get in before the evening price change, but walked the 4 miles back to their small apartment. Enroute home they always stopped at a drive-in for a cup of coffee and, being on foot, naturally had to sit at the inside counter. Sipping their coffee, they would watch with envy as people drove up, beeped their horns, and were served in their cars.

"Gosh," they would say longingly, "do you suppose we'll ever be able to do that?"

You can guess, therefore, where they went first on the day Bill acquired his first car—a second hand jalopy. Straight as an arrow they drove to that same drive-in, and believe me it was a good loud beep they sounded on the horn. No coffee ever tasted better, either, they still agree.

Bill was born in Closter, New Jersey, shortly before the end of World War I, and spent his early youth in a succession of small New Jersey towns, graduating at 16 from the Englewood, New Jersey high school. Horses were his consuming passion from the time he was a sprout in knee pants, and therefore May was not as taken aback as she might have been when he acquired his first one, Bessie, at the ripe old age of 10. Bessie became his property via the trade of a rifle and $12, his lifetime savings. After Bessie, also via the sharp trade route, came Star, an ex-circus horse; Snippy, who was a glutton for carrots; and Mona, a polo pony of questionable merit.

"Then we went broke," Bill explains the end of his horse-owning days.

Currently Bill's hobby is tropical fish (if you're a fish fancier you'll know the varieties he has, and if you're not, you don't care about the names anyway), and it seemed a harmless enough interest until the other day, May returned at that time to find their apartment swarming with mosquitos. Bill, it developed, had bought a lot of mosquito larvae for fish food, and the whole darned mess suddenly had hatched! At that it wasn't quite as disconcerting as a little habit of Snippy's; after Bill had watered her each morning, Snippy would open the back door with her teeth, and walk right in looking for carrots!

During his high school days Bill earned a few dollars now and then by exercising a string of polo ponies belonging to a townsman. This experience, coupled with a summer spent working as a wrangler and guide for hunting parties on a ranch near Cody, Wyoming, resulted in his becoming an excellent horseman. Therefore, when he was faced with the necessity of earning a living upon being graduated from high school, he joined the Hertz rodeo and spent a year with it on tour. A bad spill from a bucking bronc resulted in a broken leg for Bill, but when it was healed, he again joined a Wild West troupe. Just as he was beginning to win something of a name in rodeo circles, a second spill again sent him to the hospital, this time with a broken arm, several cracked ribs, and what he thought at the time was only a wrenched back. Not until 5 years later, shortly after his advent in Hollywood, did he learn the injury in reality was a broken back! Properly treated and braced, the fracture finally mended, but it made any military service impossible. Bill still is supersensitive about that too. The Red Cross Blood Bank, by the way, knows him as a regular donor.

The two injuries discouraged him from further exhibition riding, and he turned his ambitions toward an oddly contrasting field, art. Although none of his forebears had been artists, except one aunt whom Bill says "painted flowers on teapots", he had liked art from the time he was a kid, and alwas had been good at it in school. By 1939 he had finished his studies at the Art Students League in New York and was trying to establish himself as a commercial artist in that city.

Bill was, and is, a good artist, which gives him a sound second string to his fiddle in case his Hollywood career should hit an unexpected slump, but it always is difficult for a newcomer to get started. To supplement his rather meager earnings from occasional book covers, magazine illustrations, and drawings for ads, Bill took whatever jobs he could get—clerking in John Wanamakers, office boy for an advertising company (May was receptionist at the same company for a time, and together they earned $30 a week), guide at the World's Fair, barker for the Heinz 57 and Swift Hams exhibits, and model for several illustrators and photographers.

It sounds easy enough in the telling, and I'm sure neither of them ever thought their lot was to be pitied, but there literally were times when Bill and May did not know where their next meal was coming from. There was one time when they had exactly 6 cents and their faith left; everything else had been hocked. May had been contemplating borrowing $1 against her next week's salary in order to buy their dinner that night, and had decided against it when Bill telephoned. He had gone to their drab little furnished room (with its two daybeds and a gas ring for a stove) on the off chance that maybe a miracle had taken place and one of his drawings had sold.

"Maybe it was a miracle at that, but there in the mail was a check for $10 for a picture of a typewriter I had drawn weeks before," Bill recounted. "To celebrate we had the $.60 dinner that night!"

It was one of the magazine art layouts for which he posed that led Bill to Hollywood, and even that event seemed destined at first to prove a dud. The layout was an advertisement for an island resort, and with the lovely blond model, Kay Williams, he illustrated the theme of "Love On An Island." Some time after its publication Bill was dining in style at the swank Copacobana; the photographer who had shot the pictures was entertaining an out-of-town client, and the client had a daughter, so Bill got a hurry-up call to play escort. Joe Pincus, N. Y. talent scout for 20th Century, happened to be there that same night and spotted Bill.

"Ever thought of being in pictures?" Pincus asked after an introduction had been arranged.

"Yes and no," Bill answered honestly. "I've never thought of it, but the man at the corner drug store, and the lady in the delicatessen on 58th keep saying I ought to go to Hollywood."

"I think so too," Pincus replied.

YES, THIS big new 450-page best-seller, yours for a 3c stamp if you accept this offer! Not for many a year has there appeared such a rich, flamboyant adventure-romance as LUSTY WIND FOR CAROLINA—an epic novel that takes you back to the days of duels, thrilling sea battles and rough, bawdy living on the fringe of the American pioneer wilderness. In its pages a whole gallery of fascinating characters come to life—Anne Bonney, celebrated pirate queen, whose exotic, untamed beauty was matched only by her devilish cruelty—swarthy libertine Stede Bonnet, Anne's paramour in passion and tool in crime—Gabrielle Fountaine, captivating French heroine, and her handsome soldier lover, David Moray, who found romantic fulfillment in the New World.

All these and a host of other colorful, devil-may-care characters crowd a huge story-canvas packed with hair-raising exploits on sea and land, tender and passionate moments of love. This book will be sent to you for a 3c stamp as soon as you join the Dollar Book Club—which you can do merely by mailing the coupon below.

"Come around and we'll make a test."

The test was made but nothing happened except Pincus advised Bill to "get more experience" (at what?) and they would make another test in 6 months. Unperturbed, Bill went back to his old jobs, art work, and problematical meals.

Fortunately, Agent Buster Collier in Hollywood had seen the same magazine layout, and offered to take the completely unknown young Edwards on as a client. The Collier wired offer arrived at a time when the family finances had hit a new low, so Bill and May decided to gamble. They hocked the last of their respective hockables, caught a free ride across country in a friend's car, and arrived in Hollywood with the grand total of $35.

"Fools rush in, etc." May observed, looking back at that time. "I shudder now at our audacity."

The $35 stood up, however, for Bill was steered at once into a minor role in "The Bugle Sounds" with Wallace Beery, for which he got $100 a week for 6 weeks. After that nothing happened, and in great quantities. The question of eating again was becoming a pressing problem, when Warners signed him to a stock contract at the regular figure of $50 a week to start. He spent almost a year there, doing tests and walk-ons for the most part. In "Air Force," for example, he had just one line to speak, and then that was cut from the finished version. Bill thereupon decided it was no way for a young man to get ahead, and asked for his release.

It was early in 1943 that Paramount tested Bill, liked the test and signed him to a 7-year contract. It was 8 full months, however, before he was asked to step foot in front of a camera, and the old gag about the studio gateman not recognizing him as a member of the studio's family really was true.

"Oh boy, here I go again," Bill thought as the months dragged by.

Then action started with a bang. He was given the interest-catching role of the home town stuffed shirt in "Hail The Conquering Hero," and before it was completed, started work as the romantic lead in "Our Hearts Were Young and Gay." Not too long after that came his first chance at a real acting part, the famous doctor's son in "Miss Susie Slagle," and hard on its heels, the role of the city slicker in the new version of "The Virginian." (Most recent was another romantic role in "Our Hearts Were Growing Up" and slated next is a fat part in the technicolor biggie, "California.")

Incidentally, it is mostly because of his Hollywood experiences that Bill is so sensitive about his height. He has lost chances, many of them, at good roles because his height tends to make other men in the picture look too much shorter by comparison. Alan Ladd, for example, isn't exactly a midget, but he looks short alongside of Bill. Therefore Bill didn't get a good role in the forthcoming "Calcutta." The same thing happened on a prospective Errol Flynn picture. Tall leading women, of course, adore to play opposite him, but even they present a disadvantage to Bill.

"They have to look up to me, which gives them a good firm chin line," he observed. "I have to look down to them, and that gives me a fine double chin!"

Oh well, as he says, he can always see a parade!

On screen ("Our Hearts Were Growing Up"), or off—Diana and Bill are a good team.

To his friends, Bill's outstanding trait is his sincerity, and a defection in this respect in others always shocks him. His theory on this is the reverse of the old one about a criminal never trusting another criminal; Bill takes it for granted a friend can always trust another friend.

To May, his outstanding trait is his absolute honesty; from the time he was able to talk, a lie has been abhorrent to him. "Even as a child, when I asked him something he didn't want to answer, he would not lie about it. He'd just stand and look at me. He still uses the same tactics, I might add, but now there's a twinkle in his eye," May revealed. He has his faults, of course. Procrastination is one of them. Leaving the bathroom in an unholy mess after a shower is another. And he refuses to plan ahead, which means he sometimes gets left in the matter of dates. And does it burn whatever lady fair he is pursuing at the time!

As you might expect, Bill has some pretty definite ideas about girls and marriage. He likes his girls to have that scrubbed look, and be sparing in their use of makeup, but he doesn't give a darn if they are beautiful or not. He doesn't like moody women or the clinging vine type. He wants to marry and have a couple of kids, but not until he is financially able to guarantee they won't have the struggle as he did. As for a wife, he doesn't think an actress is a very good bet. Twice in his life he was on the verge of marriage, but each time that old bugaboo, careers, wrote finis to love's sweet dream.

"A girl who is an actress won't place you first in her life," he observed. "And when you take her out, she wants to go places just to be seen, not to have fun."

Plenty of young ladies, actresses included, are jingling the Edwards telephone these days but May always answers the phone. Bill, it seems, gets a bit flustered at such times, whereas May has exactly the right touch, sympathetic, charming, and firm.

The first time such a call came through, Bill was almost aghast. "Shucks," he bumbled, "what could she want from me?"

May eyed her son in disbelief. "Are you kidding?" she said.

BLESSINGS IN DISGUISE

left the hospital, and now tops everybody's at MGM—or maybe anywhere else.

Not that I recommend accidents. Take your Red Cross courses and learn how Not to have one. Still and all, look at Frances Rafferty, now making a place for herself at the same studio.

Frances studied for eleven years to be a ballet dancer. A mere baby when she enrolled at Edith Jayne's School of the Dance, she was star pupil when she graduated into roles with the Los Angeles Civic Opera. Then she became understudy to Zorina, who was starring in ballet at the Hollywood Bowl. One day at rehearsal, Frances was clowning around between numbers, doing some highly original leaps, when she came down hard and her knee went out of joint. It was a trick knee; always before Frances or a pal could rotate it back into position, but this time the injury was serious, and the young dancer was directed to stop all exercise for eighteen months.

The young redhead had always kept herself in top form by dancing, and now she began to go to pieces. Rumors of her plunge into black despair reached Alexis Smith, who had been star pupil at Jayne's the year ahead of Frances. Alexis stopped by to see the invalid.

"Pull yourself together," she recommended. "I'm not doing so badly, am I? Why not study drama until you can dance again? Audiences don't storm in to see ancient ballerinas, but they put up S.R.O. signs when Ethel Barrymore comes to town."

Frances studied drama with Madame Ouspenskaya. The next thing you know, she had a contract with MGM and was being given critical attention for her work as the tragic young Chinese wife in "Dragon Seed."

Maybe it's a natural handicap that has you worried. Come on, look over here. . . This glamour girl is Betty Hutton, who used to be a very homely little thing with freckles, thin hair and a scar on one cheek where she once hung from a pier on a rusty nail. To crown it all, Betty had a beautiful sister Marion, with lovely skin, thick blonde hair and wonderful eyes. Boys flocked after Marion in throngs, while girls (let alone boys) had nothing to do with Betty.

The homely child longed for friends, and finally decided she'd have to earn them. People like to be entertained, said she to her best audience—herself. So she learned to sing, developed that odd comedy style, and got a job with a band. Once she had arrived, she discovered what to do about hair, skin and scar; but looks didn't matter so much by that time.

To Ingrid Bergman, it was deep tragedy to have to live with uncongenial relatives after her parents died. The silver lining was a dream world into which the little girl retreated. Ingrid used to shut herself in her room, put loud records on her small victrola, and act out big dramatic scenes. Ultimately, the silver lining burst through the outer cloud and revealed her as a great actress.

But don't retreat too far from life, or you're likely to miss something. Take Irene Dunne. . . As a newcomer to New York, she was so earnest about her career that she vowed nothing should interfere with the French lessons she took every Thursday night. One day, a nice boy asked her to go to a special party on June 25th, and she accepted. A little later, Irene looked at her calendar; the 25th was a Thursday! She telephoned to break her date.

"You said you'd go! Just this one time! Oh please, please!" He was so disappointed and so insistent that Irene gave in.

Wasn't it a good thing she did? That's where she met Dr. Francis Griffin, the man she married. If she hadn't gone to that particular party, their paths might never have crossed, for they knew none of the same people!

Scan those party invitations carefully before you make up your mind not to accept them. Here we have Tom Conway, who swore he was too tired to go to Seymour Nebenzal's party after a hard day as the "Falcon." However, Mrs. Conway had a new hair-do which she didn't intend to waste, so she dragged Tom out. He had to go, but he didn't have to like it. Tom imbibed cocktails and found himself relaxing. He didn't know his host, so wasn't aware that the fellow whose name he hadn't caught was Nebenzal, the producer. They had a marvelous time together. Next day, the gentleman telephoned to say he had exactly the right role for Tom in his big production, "Whistle Stop."

Let's look around Mr. Nebenzal's sets a minute. Here's George Raft, who was born in Hell's Kitchen, where gangsters thrived in prohibition days. George grew up the hard way, rubbing elbows with crime. Pretty grim, yes; but it paid out, for George's screen gangsters were so true to life that he has been a star for ten years and is still going strong.

There's Ava Gardner, the leading lady in "Whistle Stop."

Ava visited her sister in New York the Easter she was fifteen, and was taken to her first night club. A band leader noticed her, and came to their table to ask if she sang. Ava's sister replied for her, since Ava was too overcome to utter a sound, with a brief: "No, thank you." The b. l. suggested that Ava come for an audition next day, as he was looking for a singer to go on tour with the band. Ava took the audition, trembling all over. He told her she hadn't a great voice, but perhaps she could learn to put songs over.

"I had to go home to school," recalled Ava, "but he wrote to me and sent me songs to learn. My mother objected to the whole idea, but I kept dreaming. Finally I managed to get back to New York. I was so excited about my career, and my sister and I spent hours getting me prettied up to go to see him. He brushed us off, like that! He already had a girl!

"I thought I'd die of a broken heart. Which shows how silly I was, for right away MGM tested me and sent

YOUNG MOTHER DELIGHTED WITH WRITING SUCCESS

"After taking the N.I.A. course, the first article submitted to a top-flight woman's magazine, resulted in its prompt acceptance. Despite my domestic duties, including the rearing of a small daughter, I have found time to write a dozen stories, all of which have been accepted. All potential writers should sign up with N.I.A."—Marela Audrey Garden, 2302 West Main St., Richmond 20, Va

Why Can't You Write?

It's much simpler than you think!

SO many people with the "germ" of writing in them simply can't get started. They suffer from inertia. Or they set up imaginary barriers to taking the first step.

Many are convinced the field is confined to persons gifted with a genius for writing.

Few realize that the great bulk of commercial writing is done by so-called "unknowns."

Not only do these thousands of men and women, produce most of the fiction published, but countless articles on social matters, budgets, household affairs, hobbies, human interest stories, local, club and church activities, etc., as well.

Such material is in constant demand. Every week thousands of checks for $25, $50 and $100 go out to writers whose latent ability was perhaps no greater than yours.

The Practical Method

Newspaper work demonstrates that the way to learn to write is by writing! Newspaper copy desk editors waste no time on theories or ancient classics. The story is the thing. Every copy "cub" goes through the course of practical criticism—a training that turns out more successful authors than any other experience.

That is why Newspaper Institute of America bases its writing instruction on the Copy Desk Method. It starts and keeps you writing in your own home, on your own time. And upon the very same kind of actual assignments given daily to metropolitan reporters. Thus you learn by doing, not by studying the individual styles of model authors.

Each week your work is analyzed constructively by practical writers. Gradually they help to clarify your own distinctive style. Writing soon becomes easy, absorbing. Profitable, too, as you gain the "professional" touch that gets your material accepted by editors. Above all, you can see constant progress week by week as your faults are corrected and your writing ability grows.

Have You Natural Ability?

Our Writing Aptitude Test will reveal whether or not you have natural talent for writing. It will analyze your powers of observation, your imagination and dramatic instinct. You'll enjoy taking this test. There is no cost or obligation. Simply mail the coupon below, today. Newspaper Institue of America, One Park Avenue, New York 16, N. Y. (Founded 1925).

me to Hollywood with a contract. If he had accepted me, I'd have been on tour when MGM's scout came along."

Well, if there isn't Victor McLaglen! Vic's disguised blessing is one of the more dramatic. Vic has a huge ranch up north, where he raises food, and he was in a rush to get up there to help with the harvest. Was he furious when, after packing his station wagon with urgently needed supplies for the ranch, came a call for retakes on his picture!

"You go on ahead," he instructed his chauffeur. "I'll get up the best way I can."

The chauffeur drove off; up in the mountains he must have taken a wrong turning, for over a cliff he went, car and all. If Vic had been with him, he might have been killed, too.

In these days of housing shortages, maybe you, like Ruth Hussey, have shed tears at losing a home. Ruth and husband Captain Bob Longenecker rented a little honeymoon house. They were so happy in it that when their landlady said she was offering it for sale, they wanted to buy the house. The price seemed high, though, and while they thought it over, someone else paid cash.

"We were so upset, we were all but inconsolable," remembers Ruth. "But all was for the best, thank heaven. Two weeks later, by a miracle, we found another house, less expensive and much larger, with plenty of room to accommodate the family we hope to have!"

Ida Lupino was just getting launched on her film career when she was stricken with infantile paralysis. The black disaster overwhelmed her for a time. Then she looked for something to relieve the long days, discovered that she had a gift for composing music, found she could put words to the music, and came out of her illness with a hobby that has proved invaluable on army camp and hospital tours. One of her more ambitious compositions was played in Hollywood Bowl.

And see Constance Moore and June Clyde! Both of them lost roles that seemed at the time the only way out of tough luck. Connie had been having a bad time when Paramount offered her a good role in a "B" picture. And what did Connie have but a case of hives! While she sat at home, gently cursing her spots, a call came from New York for the play "By Jupiter," which proved a big success and elevated Connie to stardom.

June's experience was different. The part she wanted was in "Whoopee," Eddie Cantor's 1930 success, which started so many girls on the way up. Director Thornton Freeling made tests for the picture. He came to June after he had seen hers. "Little girl," he said gently, "I'm afraid you just aren't suited to the part."

Little Girl burst into tears. Mr. Freeling comforted her. Six months later, she married him.

Losing roles seems one way to showers of blessings. Here's Robert Shayne, whom you've probably seen in "Mr. Skeffington" and "Christmas in Connecticut." Bob had a desperate time in New York when he began his acting career. The big opportunity came: because of illness, another actor had to give up an important role in "Many Mansions," and Bob was given the script a few days before the play was to open. He put his whole heart into the part during rehearsals, working frightfully hard; and then, half an hour before curtain time, the first actor recovered and came back! Bob could have cut his throat.

Don't go around cutting throats—your own or anybody's—because if Bob had had that part he wouldn't have been available for Rennie in "White Oaks" opposite Ethel Barrymore. That play ran eighteen months and established Bob as a dramatic actor.

Did I tell you about George Murphy? He's the boy who won a Columbia contract after creating a dancing sensation in the musical "Of Thee I Sing."

Once on the Coast, Murph was put into dramatic films instead of musicals, and—let's face it—he was pretty awful. Then Columbia loaned him to another company, who allowed him to sing and dance and be hailed as a smash hit. Harry Cohn sent for him. "Why did you hold out on me?" he wailed.

But what we started to say was that all that dramatic experience he acquired at Columbia while he was kicking and growling turned out to be a blessing to Murph, for now MGM lets him do any type of picture. And when musicals go out, as they have a nasty habit of doing, Murph won't go out with them!

If Gregory Peck hadn't had to work his way through college, he'd now be an ornament of the medical profession, and probably would never have set foot on any stage. Besides the actual medical courses he was taking, Greg needed additional credits in order to graduate. His outside jobs took up a great deal of time, so he looked around for an easy way of winning through.

"Take dramatics," recommended another student. "You can walk through that without studying, and it gives you heaps of credits. Maybe you can even catch up on your sleep."

Greg didn't catch up on his sleep, because he became so interested in acting that he decided to give up the medical profession.

TIME IS TELLING

for this role, Mr. Wallis said, "The part of Singleton in 'Love Letters' called for a girl of keen sensitivity, a strange and quiet beauty, together with strong dramatic ability—and as I read the story, I kept thinking that the girl should be played only by Jennifer Jones."

Following that, she went into "Duel in the Sun," again under the Selznick banner, in which she plays a half-breed Indian girl who comes to a tragic end. Her director, King Vidor, has this to say of Jennifer's performance in "Duel": "Since the day we made the first tests on this picture, I have been constantly amazed and highly pleased at the strength and beauty she has given to her performance. It seems incredible that an actress who so convincingly played Bernadette in 'Song of Bernadette' and Jane in 'Since You Went Away' could portray the wild excitement and brooding temperament called for by the part of Pearl Chavez in 'Duel in the Sun.'"

With just barely time to catch her breath after that heavy role, she went back to Twentieth Century, where she turns comedienne in the acting plum of the season, the name role in "Cluny Brown" for Ernst Lubitsch. Any top actress in Hollywood would have given her eye teeth for such an opportunity. Mr. Lubitsch, who knows what he wants and has a way of getting it, also knows why he wants it. Said he, of his choice of Jennifer for this role: "The role of Cluny Brown requires great, deep humor, not just a technical humor, not routine comedy with double-takes that the audience knows are coming three steps ahead. Jennifer Jones is capable of this rare humor, and that's why she will play Cluny Brown. I welcome the fact that this will be Miss Jones' first comedy role, for it will provide a fresh performance." If you've read the book, you know what a departure this part will be from any other that Jennifer has done—but then so was every other!

But Jennifer, not half so concerned with awards for excellence as she is with achieving the excellence, is constantly working and studying, striving for the perfection of that dramatic urge which has been the strongest force in her life from childhood. She can't remember not wanting to be an actress, and a good one.

Jennifer's own feeling about the success that has come to her can just about be put into one word: gratitude.

"I feel I'm a very lucky girl," says she, "to have had the opportunity to play such distinct and varied personalities in the four pictures I've made, and this variety has widened my scope tremendously. Also, the research for each picture has given me many new ideas. In 'Love Letters,' for instance, I play a girl who has lost her memory. In order to do that, I had to find out what the reactions of such a person would be to new situations, so I talked with a psychiatrist. I found it would be as if you were a child. Having had no experience with the bad part of people, you'd be always happy, and frightfully honest.

"There are so many things that go into picture making that I can't put my finger on any one particular thing that's outstandingly helpful. But each picture, and all the people connected with it, contribute to one's development. It's just like practicing the piano. If you keep on doing all the exercises they tell you to, you eventually develop to the point where you can play the things you want to. You can't say which exercise has helped the most, but you know that each one is extremely valuable."

But if you want the real lowdown on how Jennifer works and what she thinks, the person to talk to is Anita Colby, who is probably her closest friend. Anita is a veritable gold mine of information on Jennifer.

"Jennifer realizes," says Anita, "that her success has come to her very young, and that because of her youth, she has to work all the harder to deserve it. Success to her is not anything to be conceited about; it's something to earn. She has great respect for her success, feels that she has a great responsibility toward it.

"She's very serious about her work, gives her best to everything she does, and is never satisfied with anything she does. In preparing for her roles, she's amazingly thorough. Before beginning 'Duel in the Sun' she spent two weeks studying how to walk like the Indian girl, until she got it down to perfection. She took dancing lessons to prepare for the dance she does in the picture, and voice lessons to acquire that low-pitched, sexy voice she uses. She worked hours on end every day to perfect every motion, mannerism, and inflection she could possibly need.

"She has terrific drive and concentration when she's working—so much that people who don't know her find it hard to understand her sometimes. Her mind is absolutely one-track, and when she's absorbed in her work, she's likely to be oblivious to other people, or do absent-minded things, such as passing by somebody she knows without speaking. Being very thoughtful of others by nature, she's always disturbed and sorry when she realizes she's done anything that seems thoughtless.

"But those who have worked with her, and understand her, simply adore Jennifer. She's natural and sweet toward everybody on the set, and so thoughtful. At the close of a picture, she always has gifts for all her coworkers. She goes to a lot of trouble to find out what would really please each person, and then selects the gifts personally if she can, or if time doesn't permit, gets her mother to do it for her.

"While we were in Tucson, she heard the wardrobe girl talking one day about a bracelet she had admired in a shop window the night before. Jennifer listened closely, and later asked her hairdresser to find out where the shop was, then sent her mother to buy the bracelet and gave it to the girl. And while I was in the hospital there with pneumonia, she kept bringing me gifts—nighties, perfume, books—and spent a lot of her spare time visiting with me. She's always doing thoughtful and kind things for people who are ill or in any kind of trouble. She really spends more than she should on other people, but she wants everybody to share in her good fortune. She's often said, 'If I had a dollar, I'd live on it. If I had a million, I'd live on that.'

"She has a shyness that's refreshing, but there's a lot of gayety within her. She loves to be around gay people; she needs gay people to draw her out. When she came back from the Arizona location, the crew at the studio fixed up her dressing room with all sorts of gag gifts, and signs like 'Poil, youse is a great goil!'—and she simply adored it.

"She's absolutely hungry for learning of all kinds, and is always studying something. We're taking French lessons together now, three times a week. And then, she absorbs from everybody she talks to. You see, Jennifer knows that she hasn't the sophistication that comes from meeting all kinds of people, and from travel and study. Those things normally come to a person before success does; but with her work, her early marriage, and her children, Jennifer hasn't had much time nor opportunity to branch out in that way.

"She's just like a younger sister to me, and it's been fascinating to me to watch her development. I get such a kick out of being with her. She's cute, she's fun, she makes me giggle inside. She always has a lot of things to tell me—about where she's been, whom she's seen, what she's been doing. I always ask her a lot of questions, tease her, treat her like an imp—and she loves it.

"She's trying very hard to acquire everything she feels she lacks. When I tell her stories about my pals—people like Hemingway, Quentin Reynolds—she listens wide-eyed. And when we've been in New York together, and she's met those people at parties, she simply hangs on every word they say.

"She's very naive in a way, and yet in many ways she has wisdom far beyond her years; a tolerance and breadth of vision that you don't expect in such a young person. I remember one time when we had just heard news of some fresh horror in Europe and I said, 'They ought to take those Nazis and kill off every one of them!' she looked at me and said quietly, 'Oh, no, Colby—we can't do that. The whole world can't be Nazis.'

"Jennifer's greatly in demand by hostesses here, though she doesn't have time to attend many parties. But she's a delightful guest, and whenever we've gone to parties together, I've had a lot of phone calls the next day from people who want to tell me how charming they think she is, and ask for her phone number.

"Once at a party at Cobina Wright's, she met Lucille Leimert, who has a society column. And afterwards Lucille wrote that Jennifer was one of the most charming and polite girls she'd ever met. She expressed it something like this: 'While talking to me, instead of looking longingly over my shoulder at somebody she'd rather talk to, Jennifer looked me straight in the eye and gave me her complete attention, as though I were the only person in the room.' It's that interest in other people that makes her such a good guest.

"Between doing one picture practically on the heels of another, her work as a Nurses Aide, and her children, Jennifer is a very busy girl, though she never gives you that impression. She always seems to have all the time in the world. That's because she has her life worked out so that there's order and ease in whatever she's doing. By eliminating confusion and weeding out unimportant details, she has everything under control at all times—her home and children, her work, her whole life. It's truly remarkable!

His performance in "Lost Weekend" is tops. The Millands, Mrs. Cooper (Gary's mother).

"She's that way about her clothes. She's very interested in clothes, but she doesn't like clothes to be a problem or phobia. What she likes to do is buy a full wardrobe at one time, so that she'll have every occasion provided for, and not have to be bothering about clothes all the time. There's never any need for her to go dashing out at the last minute to buy a dress for some party; no frantic running around, all out of breath, that comes from that 'got-to-get-a-new-dress' feeling. Of course, if she happens to see something she likes, she'll get it, but never under pressure. She's never in a mad scramble about things, as most of us are—and as would be more expected than not, in the case of a movie star.

"Because she is reluctant to talk about herself and refuses to exaggerate for the sake of good copy, she is the despair of publicity people. Lots of times after we've been somewhere together and I start telling about it afterwards, if I get too enthusiastic she stops me with, 'Oh, no, Colby, it wasn't that way!' She plays down everything she does and likes to stick right to the facts.

"One thing about Jennifer that you can say about very few women—she's very close-mouthed, and you can absolutely trust her with any confidence. She appreciates a confidence, and will never betray it.

"And I'll tell you something else," added Anita. "With all Jennifer's intense desire to be a good actress, and her constant striving for improvement, don't let that fool you. Her first and paramount interest in life is her children. One time we were talking, and I said to her, 'How about this "the-show-must-go-on" business. Suppose it came to a showdown—your children were sick or for some reason needed you at the same time your work needed you. Would the show go on?'

"She laughed and shook her head. 'No,' she said, 'in a case like that, I would have no choice. My children would come first.'"

THE FLYING FRENCHMAN

The next picture set for Jean Pierre will be "Heartbeat". Co-star is Ginger Ragers.

It's hard to get the attractiveness of Jean Pierre Aumont down on paper. So much of it depends upon his warm friendliness, his rapidly changing facial expressions, the inflections in his voice, the grace of his hands. Perhaps most important of all is the whole-hearted attention he gives to each person he talks to. He makes you feel that you're exactly the person he wants to talk to at this moment. There ought to be a special word for what all this adds up to. The Greeks probably had one, but as for us, we'll just have to stick to "charm" until a better word comes along.

Luncheon ordered, Jean Pierre exclaimed, "My father is here, did you know? No, no, not here—in New York. He called me last night. He wanted to come out to see me, but he cannot get transportation, and so he said, 'Well, it is too bad, but I will just have to see you the next time I come.' I said, 'How can you be so calm about it? You haven't seen me for two years, and now you say, 'Well, I will just have to see you the next time I come!' But, of course, it can't be helped. I was so excited I forgot to ask him what his plans are, how long he will be here. I will have to call him again tonight!"

As you listen to this effervescent young man, it's hard to think of him as one who has known first-hand, the bitterness of war and the difficulties of readjustment. Yet he has made the change from civilian to military life, and from military back to civilian life not only once, but twice. He was fighting with the French tank corps when the Germans invaded France in June, 1940. Escaping to unoccupied territory just ahead of them, he gradually made his way to New York by a roundabout route which led him first to Algeria, Tunisia, Morocco, and Lisbon.

After several stage appearances in this country (one opposite Katharine Cornell in "Rose Burke") and two motion pictures ("Assignment in Brittany" and "The Cross of Lorraine"), and shortly after his marriage to Maria Montez in July, 1943, duty called again, and Jean Pierre sailed to join the Fighting French Forces, as a lieutenant.

A few months ago, the French government sent him back to the United States on a military mission. Maria, knowing that he was coming—though not the date of his arrival—went to New York and waited for him. They came back to California together, and Aumont went on to San Francisco and Montreal to accomplish his mission. Then, just as he was preparing to return to France, Germany surrendered, and he was notified that it was unnecessary for him to return. His honorable discharge papers were forwarded to him here, and as suddenly as that, the way was cleared for continuing with his career in movies.

Most people have to really work at it to accept such radical changes in their lives. But not Jean Pierre. He's blessed with a remarkable flexibility in his nature which enables him to adjust to new conditions with the greatest of ease. Another thing that helps him is his intense interest in immediate surroundings. Curiosity, he calls it.

"I am very curious about everything," he said. "Maria always asks me, 'Why do you ask so many things to people?' Well, I do that because I am very much interested in every little thing about people."

Asked whether he felt any homesickness for the theater when he first joined the French Army, he shook his head.

"When I am in the Army, I forget all about the theater and am a soldier; and when I am out of the Army, I forget all about the military things and am an actor again," he explained. "I am not a military man, you know. It would never occur to me to be a soldier, except when war comes and it is necessary. I am not a tactician by nature, but I became greatly interested in military things and all that was going on. In the war, I learned much that fascinated me. Especially I enjoyed coming in contact with all sorts of men that I never would have known without that opportunity.

"I think it is better," he added thoughtfully, "if you find yourself in any situation that doesn't seem quite natural, to be interested in things. It's just easier to make the best of things than to be bored, or to moan and say, 'Oh, gosh! How can I stand this!'"

This gift of being completely absorbed with the here and now is worth cultivating, you realize when you see how gracefully Jean Pierre Aumont has taken the hurdles. No trouble with unhappy memories for him nor worries about the future, because what's done is done, and what's about to be, is assumed to be pleasant until proved otherwise. What a million dollar philosophy!

All this, and modesty, too. When Jean Pierre returned from France, he wanted to go to the studio to see his old friends. Fearing they wouldn't remember him after so long an absence, he phoned a friend at the studio and asked her to meet him at the front gate. This she did and gladly, but she was soon lost in the shuffle, for everybody, from gateman to top executives, fell on his neck and greeted him with a joyous shout, "Jean Pierre!" His trip around the lot looked like a rehearsal for "The Pied Piper." In the comparatively short period that he had worked at Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer, Jean Pierre Aumont had built genuine friendships with all classes of people on the lot; and as he went around that first day, renewing acquaintances, everybody, from the most enthusiastic to the most cynical, kept saying, "What a sweet guy!"

His soldier days being over, Jean Pierre immediately put his attention back to peacetime pursuits; the first thing being to buy a home in Beverly Hills large enough to accommodate his increased family. For during his absence, Maria brought her three young sisters (aged 16, 17, and 18) from Santo Domingo to make their home with her. Jean Pierre had never met the girls till his return from France. But he's delighted to have them here, and they adore him.

"They are charming girls," he smiles. "They wait on me hand and foot; they are my slaves, if you can imagine that!" (Easily.)

His friends love to kid him about his "harem." And it's a sight to make folks stop, look, and whistle when handsome Jean Pierre and the gorgeous Maria step out of an evening, accompanied by the three young beauties.

The new house provides ample quarters for the family as is, and for any future additions. Jean Pierre and Maria both want babies—lots of babies. The more the merrier.

With the housing problem settled, the next thing was to get to work again, and Jean Pierre's first assignment was opposite Ginger Rogers in "Heartbeat" for which Metro loaned him to RKO. He said of the picture, "It's a charming romantic comedy; the sort of thing Gary Grant, Robert Montgomery, Irene Dunne have made. In this story, Ginger Rogers is a little thief, and I am a young diplomat. I won't tell you the whole story, but we meet, we fall in love, and little by little, she becomes an honest girl."

"Heartbeat" will be his first light romantic comedy in this country. Both "Assignment in Brittany" and "The Cross of Lorraine" were made when the time was right for war stories, and both had a very serious tone.

"I like light romantic parts," he added. "That's what I played all the time on the stage, but it's funny, I never did that on the screen. Always I played in the serious roles."

It's not likely that Jean Pierre Aumont will ever be issuing ultimatums as to what type of role he will or will not do on the screen, because he's interested in all types, and fully understands the importance of variety. Just so he's busy, that's the main thing.

With all his animation and enthusiasm, his friends all agree that Jean Pierre is not moody, is not a worrier, has no strong likes or dislikes, never gets terribly unhappy nor bored.

"Oh, but there was one time when I was bored," he insists, "and I was a bore, too. It was when they were getting ready to start 'The Cross of Lorraine' and I was so eager to get to work. Every day I would come to the studio and say, 'When are they going to start the picture? When are they going to start?' And they would smile and tell me, 'Jean Pierre, this is the picture business, and this is the way things go. You'll just have to learn to wait.'"

Jean Pierre cannot remember the time when he didn't want to act. His great-uncle being the celebrated Georges Gerr, of the Comedie Française, Aumont's family was already conditioned to having an actor in the family, so his theatrical ambitions did not meet with any parental opposition. He studied at the National School of Dramatic Art in Paris for two years, and then was engaged by Louis Jouvet, a producer, to be in one of his plays. That was the beginning of a busy career on the French stage and screen. Besides starring in more than 15 films, he appeared in French adaptations of many American plays, including "Romance," "Outward Bound," "Her Cardboard Lover," "White Cargo," "Design for Living," as well as classics like "Oedipus" and "As You Like It."

To a question about his countrymen, Charles Boyer and Jean Gabin, he replied, "No, I never worked with Charles Boyer in France, but in 1934, when he was making 'Caravan' in this country, he kept cabling me, 'You ought to come over and be in this picture.' But I was playing in 'Oedipus' at that time and I couldn't get away. Of course, I always admired his work on the screen very much, and always he was very nice to me."

"But I did make two pictures with Jean Gabin in France. One called 'The Messenger' was a wonderful story. I'd like to do it again. It would be a wonderful story for Spencer Tracy and Katharine Hepburn. It's about two men working in the mines. The older one talks all the time about his wife, and the youngest, from hearing about her through the other man, becomes in love with the wife without knowing her. He gets under the spell of the other man's love for his wife. Then because he is sick, he goes back to Paris, and goes to see the wife. And she starts being in love with him; not on account of him, but because of what he tells her about her husband, for she is very much in love with her husband.

"Then the husband comes back, and he feels something in the atmosphere, in some way senses the situation. But one day the wife comes to him and says to him, 'You need not be troubled any more.' And that is because I (as the other man) have killed myself and left a note saying, 'I know that I was only a link between you.'

"It would be a wonderful story for Spencer Tracy. I would like to do it with him." The more he thought of this, the better he liked the idea. "Yes, I think I will talk to somebody about that. I think I will talk to Tracy about it very soon."

Mr. Aumont has found no great difference between American and French audiences.

"I expected there would be some difference when I first came here," he said, "but I was amazed to find the reactions of audiences here so much the same. When I was appearing with Katharine Cornell in San Francisco, I noticed that they laughed at the same kind of things they had in France, they were moved at the same things. The most wonderful thing for an actor is when you feel that great silence and you know you have them with you."

"The main difference, of course, is in the size of the theatres; your theatres are so much bigger than ours.

That doesn't seem to affect the public's reactions, but an actor has to think of reaching the people in the last row as well as those in the first row."

When asked if he had any ambitions toward producing or directing, he said, "Not producing—I have not the necessary business ability for that—but I would love to direct. I directed a few stage plays in France, and there are one or two French classical plays I would like to put on here. The French public is well acquainted with Shakespeare, Sheridan, and many English playwrights. I would like to do some of the French classics for the American audiences. Maybe that idea wouldn't succeed—maybe it doesn't have the required quality—but I think it is worth trying.

"And I'd love to write. I wrote a great deal the last two or three years. Not plays, but novels and short stories. I haven't tried to get anything published yet. Every time I read over something I wrote, I think, 'Oh, this is rotten!' and then I put it away again."

Such modesty doesn't grow on every bush in Hollywood or anywhere else, and it's a refreshing trait, especially when accompanied by Jean Pierre's gay humor.

Another thing he hopes to do some day is to make a picture with his wife, Maria Montez; though there is no immediate prospect of it, what with Maria under contract to Universal and Jean Pierre to Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer.

"The play I would like very much to do with Maria," he explained, "is 'The Pirate.' The girl in that play is from Santo Domingo, which is Maria's birthplace. But there is also a sentimental reason. You see, the first time Maria and I ever met in New York, we went to see that play together."

All these plans he regards as pleasant possibilities for the future, but he's not eating his heart out about any of them. His contract with Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer has four years to go, so for that period, he feels his career is in their hands. Unless the studio should send him, he doesn't expect to return to France to make pictures, though he would like to go over for a visit sometime.

Jean Pierre is too absorbed with the present to be very much concerned with the future. Anyway, whatever happens is bound to be interesting.

you, shows that he has not the commonsense and stability to insure your future happiness, and I am sure you would regret it in a short time.

Listen to your mother in this case, she is, absolutely right.

Jane Wyman

Dear Miss Wyman:

To you this may seem a trivial problem, but to me it's the stake to my future happiness.

I am a young woman of 29 who has been married and divorced. I have an adorable little girl of 3.

Six weeks ago, I put my child in a home and started to work in the PX of a nearby Army Camp. Since I have been there, I have fallen madly in love with an 18-year-old fellow. He has asked me to marry him immediately. Even though I think the world and all of him, do you think it wise for us to marry now, or should we wait until he is at least 21? He expects to be moved to another camp soon, and would like to have me with him. What should I do? And what about my little girl?

Please send me your advice, I'm in desperate need of it.

Rilla

Dear Rilla:

So far as I can see, Rilla, if you would use a bit of common sense and think out your problem, you would find that you had none.

First, an acquaintanceship of less than six weeks, regardless of age, is surely not enough upon which to base a marriage. Second, a woman of 29 should think twice before loading the responsibilities of marriage and the care of a three year old child upon the shoulders of an 18 year old.

Jane Wyman

Dear Jane:

I'll soon be fourteen. My parents want to get a divorce and I know if they do, I'll have to go with one of them. But I don't want to live with one, I want to live with both of them.

Jane, can you please tell me what to do about this problem? My parents are both good, lovable and kind to me. Please help me.

Rusty

Dear Rusty:

I am afraid that there is little you can do to solve your problem, since the decision is completely out of your hands.

When parents reach the point of separation, they seem so saturated in their own grievances against one another, that the responsibility they owe the child they brought into the world seems completely crowded out.

They forget that the happiness and welfare of this child should be paramount; and fail to take into consideration what the effect of a broken home, the division of loyalty, the loss of the companionship of one parent, and the heartbreak of divorce will be on such happiness and welfare.

Your parents might better understand if they could read your touching letter; it certainly would not be comforting to them to know that their contemplated action had wrung such an urgent plea for help from you. Why don't you let them see the letter you wrote me, then explain to them what it means to you. It may cause them to consider before taking a final step.

My sincerest wishes that you keep your home as you want it to be, Rusty!

So he advertised it, and was instantly deluged by such a flood of letters that his real estate agent, the studio, and even the impressive physique of The Moose himself could have been buried under the flood of envelopes. Mr. Gable studied the paragraphs of those who wanted to buy his ranch and came to two conclusions: he was sole owner of a treasure in the first place, and it was going to be a ghastly job to sort out prospective purchasers in search of the right one, in the second. So he withdrew the property from the market and continued, happily, to drive from Encino to Culver City each day.

P.S. He may sell off four acres.

AS TIME GOES BY:

When Peggy Ann Garner, the 20th Century-Fox sub-deb, went East on a personal appearance tour, she took with her two huge pictures of Lon McCallister, who is the No. 1 Garner dream man.

Discussing her enthusiasm with a friend, Peggy Ann explained in an analytical tone, "There is a great difference in our ages at present . . . I'm 13 and Lon's 21. But when I'm 18, Lon will only be 26—and a glance at the list of marriage licenses issued any day in Los Angeles will indicate that there are plenty of men 26 years old who are marrying girls of 18."

GOLDURNED MODERN CONTRAPTIONS:

Gregory Peck, home from two months spent in Florida on location for Metro's film version of the Marjorie Kinnan Rawlings novel, "The Yearling," is regaling his friends with a series of fascinating stories.

One goes like this: seems that an elderly farmer, living deep in the Florida scrub, heard about the motion picture company that was employing local gentry to work as atmospheric background. The project appealed to our hero as an honest method for an enterprising landsman to pick up a few soft dimes, so he hiked many, many miles to the location spot to offer his services.

He was billeted in a small, modern room behind an auto court where the rest of the Hollywood company were living. The first morning at work, the twinkling character admitted that motion picture work struck him as being rather easy, and he knew he shouldn't be tired—but he hadn't slept very well the previous night.

No one questioned him about this statement, but the following morning, the little man was standing on the veranda as Gregory went by. He beckoned . . . "Excuse me, son," he murmured, "but I'd appreciate some help from you. How does a man put out them lights?"

The electric lights had burned in his cabin for approximately 40 hours.

Gregory explained about wall switches.

POW WOW:

Barbara Stanwyck's young son Tony (neé Dion) dashed into the room where his mother was reading and shouted, "Look at me!" With a razor he had shaved his pate, leaving nothing but a scalp lock.

His imperturable mother lifted an eyebrow. "Working in a remake of 'The Last Of The Mohicans', I presume," she said.

see her again with the same kinetic Mr. Kaye in "The Kid From Brooklyn," in which she again dances with impressive agility.

Vera-Ellen, legally Mrs. Robert Hightower, is wife of Lt. Hightower who is currently flying a P-38 in the South Pacific. But she was born Vera-Ellen Rohe (pronounced Roe), daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Martin Rohe of Cincinnati. Her childhood friends call her Bunny.

She is 5 feet 4½ inches tall, weighs 111 pounds, has maple-sugar blonde hair and brown eyes. She is utterly without artifice and filled with good common sense. If you met Vera-Ellen without knowing anything about her, it would never occur to you that she was an actress. Your appraisal would be, "What a swell girl—simple, natural, sincere. That Hightower is a lucky character."

Vera-Ellen's dad was a piano-tuner, when she was a youngster, so it seemed like a good idea for her to take piano lessons. Meanwhile, she was maintaining a straight A average in school, so her mother decided that she should have physical exercise. "Sitting at a piano for two hours a day, practicing, isn't giving you muscles and rosy cheeks," she opined. "Let me see . . . how about some dancing lessons?"

That did it. By the time she was ready to enter her senior year in High School, Vera-Ellen had danced before practically every available audience in Cincinnati. Mrs. Rohe heard one sentence over and over again until she could spot the first syllables at eighty yards: "You should take your daughter to New York or Hollywood —she's so talented." Mrs. Rohe decided on New York.

In those days Major Bowes' amateurs were hot stuff. In New York Vera-Ellen appeared on the radio on "Cincinnati night." She and her mother had warned everyone in Cincinnati exactly at what hour, over what station the program was to be heard. In discussing it afterward, Vera-Ellen grinned, "Everybody in Cincinnati wrote in, voting for me, so naturally I got a job."

The job was a spot at $50 per week in a Major Bowes unit, set to open in Cincinnati. Local girl comes home. Local girl gets ovation. That's what Vera-Ellen thought; only it didn't happen that way. The Ohio River, never letting anyone steal a scene from it, arose in one of the worst floods in history and the Major Bowes performance couldn't be held. An ovation-less Miss Rohe had to move on to St. Louis with the show. As a result, Vera-Ellen has never appeared in her home town. She hopes, however, that Mr. Goldwyn, her contract-holder, will decide at some time to have Cincinnati premiere a picture in which she dances.

When the Bowes unit completed its tour, Vera-Ellen enrolled in New York in the Sonia Serova Dancing School. Her mother took a secretarial job in the same organization. One day a telephone message arrived for Ted Lewis—who happened to be auditioning in the building—so Vera-Ellen, who happened to be passing with her Fairy Godmother sitting on her shoulder, was sent to the auditioning room to deliver the message. She stayed to become a member of his road show, doing a tap and toe number called "Estrellita." Little star, to you, with augmentation about to set in.

After that tour closed, she danced in the Paradise Restaurant, International Casino, and for Billy Rose in the Casa Manana; then had a line in "Very Warm For May." Her meeting with Mr. Rose is notable. It happened the day after she was 18, hence was eligible to work in a night club. Mr. Rose had asked a huge group of girls to try out. They were doing a time step and a high kick for him, being catalogued and dismissed. It was the first try-out Miss Vera-Ellen had ever attended and the entire proceeding struck her as being highly lax and inefficient. How could a man tell about a girl's ability from so small a demonstration of it? To this day she swears that, had she known the routine followed in try-outs, she wouldn't have spoken up. Which fact illustrates the advantage of being a novice!

When it was her turn to perform the simple formula, she spoke up—loud and clear—to wit: "I don't see how you can judge a girl's ability by so little demonstration. I don't want to be in the line; I want to do a specialty."

Said Mr. Rose drily, "It has been our good fortune in the past to have the specialties done by people like Zorina, Paul Draper, and Eleanor Powell. But if you wish to be seated and dance for me later, you may."

She got the job.

When Vera-Ellen went to work in "Higher And Higher," she noticed, during morning rehearsal, an active gentleman who was turning cartwheels across the stage. "Hmm," she thought, "what a character! Who does he think he's impressing?"

This pinwheeler, limbering himself but not seeking to impress anyone, scrutinized the haughty profile of Miss Rohe and thought, "Well, well, hail the ka-ween! Wonder who crowned her?."

This should have been a warning to both of them. A year later, during the run of "Panama Hattie," they were married.

After that she worked in "By Jupiter," dancing with Ray Bolger; then she signed to dance in "The Connecticut Yankee." Goldwyn saw her on opening night, signed her without a screen test, and expects to see the name Vera-Ellen blazing in star-sized letters on every marquee in America.

Incidentally, her engagement and wedding rings are interesting. The solitaire is mounted in a heart-shaped setting, and the wedding band consists of a circlet of tiny hearts, with a perfect blue-white diamond in the center of each. The heart is Vera-Ellen's motif: her dressing room mirror is a heart, her comb and brush set are heart-shaped, the decorations on many of her dresses are hearts. Don't be astonished if she dances her way into your heart.

Marc Platt was born Maurice Leplat in Pasadena, California, the son of the late Maurice Leplat, concert violinist; and Henrietta Lemuth Leplat. When his father passed away, Marc and his mother were in Seattle, where they settled. His mother was working and 12-year-old Marc was suspected of being a candidate for mischief. Mrs. Leplat had a friend who was running a dancing school, and this friend (Mary Ann Wells) suggested that the tall, lightning-eyed, blonde youngster be employed as a messenger boy.

This was to keep him busy after school, and to give him a chance to earn some pocket money. For several days he dashed around, paying light bills, buying bring-in sandwiches, buying music, and otherwise making himself useful. During idle moments he lounged around the studio, watching a chorus of industrious little girls going through the initial flexings of the ballet. There was one little girl with personality heretofore unsuspected by Marc in the feminine gender. He said to Miss Wells one day, "When you don't have anything for me to do, could I dance with the pupils?"

Once again this proves the power of love, actual or incipient: it can lead to anything. In the case of young Leplat it led to an unexpected interest in the ballet. He discovered almost at once that he could do anything that the rest of the pupils could do; but he could do more of it, faster, higher, with greater elan. "This is for me," quoth Marc. He began to assist in the teaching.

But all the time, in his secret heart, he planned to combine acting with pirouettes, so at 13 he got a job with the Henry Duffy players. From that stint he went into stock in Seattle with the Repertory Playhouse, doing some radio work on the side.

When Colonel de Basil's Ballet Russe played Seattle, our enterprising hero went backstage and asked for an audition. He got it, was accepted as a member of the troupe, and was re-baptized. Because everyone in the troupe was supposed to be Russian, and since the American public believed that no one trained west of the Muscovite border was capable of anything more agile than the waltz, his name was changed to Marc Platoff. People soon were taking their hats off to Platoff.

Three years later he joined the Ballet Russe de Monte Carlo, with Leonide Massine, and his experience on tour established some sort of rhythm for his life. For instance, the troupe was in Barcelona during the big strike that preceded the outbreak of the Spanish Civil War. They were unable to find housing, but a tip from a hazy-looking character on the street sent them to a remote hotel. They were admitted in the good old "Shh . . . I know Louie" style, and learned afterward that, had the situation been discovered, a flock of people would have died of lead poisoning.

That was his first experience with strikes. The second occurred in Hollywood, that rendezvous of world mishaps. Marc was all set for his second picture. His first was the Technicolor triumph, "Tonight And Every Night" with Rita Hayworth. His second was to be "Tars & Spars," the Coast Guard Show. When a hot first picture is followed by a caloric second, a dancer like Marc is set. But really set!

Just at this time the set designers' strike was called. Since so lavish a production as "Tars & Spars" can't be filmed without extensive new sets, the picture was delayed.

The Barcelona episode was Marc's first experience with war. His second was not long delayed. He was in Monte Carlo when Germany invaded Poland in 1939. Because he was a citizen of a neutral nation, he was allowed—after appropriate delays—to leave. Certain other members of the troupe had to be smuggled out.

His next professional step was a flier on Broadway, distinguished by three near misses and a hit: "Oklahoma." During rehearsal of this play, Marc sprained his foot so badly that indications were he wouldn't be able to go on opening night. "I'm going to dance the premiere if it kills me," said Mr. Determined Platoff . . . er, Platt. So a physician anesthetized the foot and Mark danced; chancing with each step the breaking of his leg. He finished the performance, then was out of the theatrical cast for three weeks, and into a plaster one.

After a year in "Oklahoma," he was signed by Columbia and brought to Hollywood. He is married to the former Eleanor Marra, whom he met while they were dancing in the Ballet Russe. They have a son, Marc, Jr., who was born on February 29, 1944.

Remember the sailor in "Bring On The Girls" who leaped over grand pianos, did time steps around mop buckets, and generally reduced audiences to a rhythmic tizzy? That was Johnny Coy, born John Ogilvie in Montreal. He took the name Coy because he knew it would be easier to spell and more convenient on the theatre marquees he hoped one day to populate with the letters of his label. Coy is a shortened version of McCoy, the name of a family of dancers much admired by John Ogilvie.

Johnny's career was not only an

Relieve TEETHING Pains

When Baby's Cry
Rips Off The Roof
Rub NUM-ZIT On That Coming Tooth

This new, modern formula relieves teething pains quickly. Just rub a few drops on sore gums. Effective! Non-injurious! No dosing. Does not upset baby's stomach. Costs little. Buy it at your drug store.

accident, but in its early stages his greatest burden. The only boy in a family of seven children, Mr. Johnny was earmarked to carry on the family Highland tradition. First he was taught to play the bagpipes, then to dance the Highland Fling, the Sword Dance, and other ceremonial antics. All this complete with kilts.

Half-a-thought will tell you what would happen to an American youth, aged nine to 13, who appeared on the streets in kilts. Conditions are no different in Canada, which explains why it would be a bad idea to insult Mr. Coy.

While defending his fistic honor, Johnny was also winning other competitions. In his first three contests, Johnny won three gold medals, winding up in New York as the winner of the North American Highland Fling championship. It had been a hard battle, bitterly fought and bitterly won. Johnny's mother suggested that he make a choice: he could return to Montreal and enter college, or he could continue his dancing studies in New York.

Johnny, regarding his callouses and his trophies, decided that he had served one apprenticeship; why chance another? He did a stint in vaudeville, then was booked into the Copa. There Mary Martin saw him, signed him for "Dancing In The Streets." Despite the talent in the musical, the book was bad; so DITS played for only three weeks. During that time, however, Johnny was seen and snapped up by Paramount, which promptly cast M'sieu Coy as a Brooklyn sailor in "Bring On The Girls." After that he did a part in "Duffy's Tavern," and currently there is great talk of boosting Johnny to stardom.

It couldn't happen to a nicer human being. Johnny is five feet five inches tall, weighs around 150 pounds of fatless muscle. His hair is chestnut and curly; his eyes are something to swoon over. He isn't married, dates Olga San Juan occasionally.

Of the three new dancers enchanting Hollywood, Johnny is the only one who plans his own dances, perfecting every step, every routine. But, like the other two, he has every needed attribute for success: experience, ability, personality and charm.

The Window") and Jess Barker, Margaret Lindsay, and Samuel S. Hinds.

THE FUGITIVE is another Sherlock Holmes story with Basil Rathbone, Nigel Bruce, and Marjorie Riordan. (Perhaps this will be a good-luck part for Marjorie, who has had trouble since her Warner option was dropped.)

OUTLAWS OF TWIN FORKS is the current Universal equine saga, with Kirby Grant, Fuzzy Knight, Poni Adams and John Kelly.

AT WARNER BROTHERS:

CONFIDENTIAL AGENT is the Charles Boyer-Lauren Bacall picture for which you will stand in line for hours and hours and hours. Also cast: Katina Paxinou (remember her brilliant Pilar in "For Whom The Bell Tolls"), Peter Lorre, Dan Seymour, Victor Francen, Wanda Hendrix, George Coulouris, and Miles Mander.

NIGHT AND DAY is being shot in Technicolor with Cary Grant, Alexis Smith, Jane Wyman, Monty Woolley, Henry Stephenson, Donald Woods, Selena Royle, Eve Arden, Sig Ruman and Alan Hale.

NEVER SAY GOODBYE is Errol Flynn's present vehicle, with Eleanor Parker, Lucille Watson, Hattie McDaniel and S. Z. Sakall.

THE MAN I LOVE is the Ida Lupino starrer with Robert Alda (the first picture he has made since "Gershwin") Andrea King, Martha Vickers, Dolores Moran, John Ridgely, and Monte Blue.

HER KIND OF MAN is a gay comedy with Zachary Scott, Janis Paige, Faye Emerson, Dane Clark, and George Tobias.

AT PARAMOUNT:

CALCUTTA is the adventure story starring Alan Ladd, Gail Russell, Bill Bendix, June Duprez, Edith King, Lowell Gilmore and John Whitney.

TO EACH HIS OWN (bad title) is the story of one Miss Josephine Norris in bombed-and-blasted London. There are five men in her life, which is nice work for Olivia de Havilland, John Lund, Mary Anderson, Philip Terry, Bill Goodwin, Alma Macrorie, and Frank Faylen.

THE BRIDE WORE BOOTS is a zany comedy about a girl who adores horses (Barbara Stanwyck) and a man who abhors them (Robert Cummings). Assisting in administering the well-known horse laugh are Diana Lynn and Patric Knowles.

BLUE SKIES is the Technicolor picture hung on the framework of Irving Berlin songs that have been popular during the past quarter century. Bing sings, Paul Draper dances, Joan Caulfield looks beautiful, and the cast is further enhanced by the presence of Olga San Juan (our next Rita Hayworth) and Billy De Wolfe.

AT MONOGRAM:

SWING PARADE is in its first month with Gale Storm, Phil Reagan, Connee Boswell, the Three Stooges and Louis Armstrong.

"It's EASY and it's FUN!"

—says Mrs. Lois Clarke of St. Paul, Minn.

Wife and mother tells how she lost 53 pounds and "that middle-aged look."

"If only I had known how easily I could become slender," says Mrs. Lois Clarke, "and what fun it would be, I could have saved myself years of unhappiness. I read again and again about women who had taken the DuBarry Success Course, but I felt that somehow they must be different. So I went on—tired, irritable, overweight. Self-conscious about my looks, I dropped out of the Parent-Teachers Association and the Red Cross—just stayed home.

"At last, finding myself so out of proportion that I had to buy matronly dresses in size 42, I desperately decided to do something. That was when my mother, worried about my health, gave me the DuBarry Success Course. With her encouragement and my husband's tongue-in-cheek approval, I sailed in—went through the Course twice. Results: Down from 181 pounds to 128. Down from size 42 to size 14. That "middle-aged look" is gone. My skin is fine and clear, and my hair, once so stringy, is now truly lovely. As for the Success Course, I want to say that Ann Delafield should have an extra-special star in her crown for bringing health and beauty to so many women."

Above, a snap-shot of Mrs. Clarke when starting her Course. At right, the lovely Lois Clarke of today, looking far younger than her 35 years.

THREE STRANGERS (W.B.) is still another mystery in the "Maltese Falcon" tradition. Fans who are chilled by the mesmeristic antics of Sydney Greenstreet and Peter Lorre will cringe at this one. The air-tight plot revolves around a sweepstakes ticket which is the clue in a murder involving three strangers; namely, the two foregoing menaces and Geraldine Fitzgerald.

Among those adding to the mystery are: Peter Whitney, Alan Napier, Joan Lorring and Rosalind Ivan.

THE CRIME DOCTOR'S WARNING (Columbia) The crime doctor series goes on apace—with Warner Baxter as Dr. Ordway, part crime doctor and part psychiatrist. Artists' models get murdered—but not for Art's sake! Among those mayhemmed—or about to commit it—are: Dusty Anderson, Alma Kruger and Miles Mander.

SENORITA FROM THE WEST (Universal) is a bid for the Brooklyn vote by virtue of having Allan Jones as the male lead. He sings over the radio through the tonsils of Jess Barker, who gets all the credit and the gal (Bonita Granville)—until the truth outs and the Eddie Bracken-Bing Crosby gag (Remember "Out of This World?") takes a turn for the Brooklyn thrush, and fame—and the gal—descend upon him. Ouch!

SUNSET IN EL DORADO (Rep.)—Roy Rogers and El Dorado have a lot of appeal for Lucille Wiley (Dale Evans) . . . or so she discovers after she takes a trip to see if what the travel folders say about the West is true. While she's finding out, there are eight new songs sung by Roy, Dale, and the Sons of the Pioneers. Gabby Hayes and Trigger are on hand, too.

FIGHTING BILL CARSON (PRC) — A Western epic with Buster Crabbe and Al St. John outsmarting a band of outlaws that has made off with the town's bank funds. With Stan Jolley, Kermit Maynard, Bob Cason, John Buster and Bud Osborne.

THE TRUE GLORY (Col. release), produced jointly by the governments of the U. S. and Great Britain, reveals the strategy of the American and British armies in liberating France and defeating Germany. An 84-minute feature, introduced by General "Ike" Eisenhower; co-directed by Garson Kanin and Carol Reed. The best-scripted, best-directed, best-edited documentary-with-significance ever attempted!

BURNED UP:

Plenty browned off is Pat O'Brien, whose patio playroom adjoining the swimming pool was recently gutted by fire caused by someone's carelessly neglected cigarette. Ruined beyond repair was a cottage piano papered with theatre programs saved from each play in which Pat had appeared. Also destroyed were most of the caricatures in Pat's gallery of motion picture great—pastels done by Don Barclay, who is now serving with the Navy. Replacement of the pastels will be Don's first discharge-paper assignment.

VITAL STATISTICS:

Genesis:

Cobina Wright, Jr. and her husband, Palmer Beaudette, announced the arrival of a baby boy, who has an older brother born October 2, 1943, named Palmer, Jr.

Katherine de Mille and Anthony Quinn welcomed a young gentleman named Duncan Christopher, who weighed in at 8 pounds, 10½ ounces. He has two older sisters.

Oona O'Neill Chaplin and her husband announced that a second child is due in the spring. This youngster-to-be has a sister now a year old.

Deanna Durbin and Felix Jackson will be singing lullabies next March.

It is also rumored that Merle Oberon and her husband, Lucien Ballard, will have a similar announcement to make about the spring.

Exodus:

Lina Romay has filed suit for divorce from Seaman 1st Class John Lawrence Adams, using her legal name Elena R. Adams. They had been married a year and a half.

Johnny Weissmuller was sued by divorce by his wife, the former Beryl Scott; this makes the third suit filed, since the previous two were dropped, one in 1940 and one in 1943. Tarzan has three children.

HEARTBREAK:

The news ruined the day for a great many employees of 20th Century-Fox, where Lynn Bari has long been the favorite actress of literally hundreds of fellow workers. She was taken to the hospital three weeks before her child was due, and delivered of a daughter, but the child lived only a few hours. Despite her ordeal, Lynn came through okay.

GIFT OF THE MAGI:

Glenn Langan has acquitted himself with honors in a number of little parts around Hollywood, and has now completed the plum part of the doctor in "Dragonwyck." Wisenheimers around town are predicting that Glenn's future looks like night on Honshu Island—which is to say, incandescent.

'Tenny rate, he and his wife recently celebrated their seventh wedding anniversary. The Langans aren't yet in the big money; as a matter of fact, they have been known to wonder, not long ago, how many meals may be derived from ten miles of spaghetti. But this anniversary was to be a turning point; Glenn and his wife each determined to buy the other some item for which a preference had been expressed. Something imaginative, something of permanent value.

On their anniversary morning, each indicated to the other a rather large, certainly impressive, very heavy package. Eagerly the partners stripped off the wrappings. Then they fell into one another's arms and screamed with laughter. Each had bought a second-hand set (new editions are not currently available) of the Encyclopedia Britannica.

LITTLE GRASS SHACKS:

Betty Hutton is breathlessly enthusiastic about her new home. It isn't at all moviestarish, having only two modest bedrooms and six additional rooms, and it will not be entirely furnished until the war is over, of course. Because there were two garages on the property, Betty is converting one into a playroom. Three walls will be paneled with knotty pine, or some such material—but the other is to be smooth white plaster and is to be used as a gigantic guest book.

KEELED OVER

The instant Gene Kelly joined the Navy as an enlisted man, he applied for sea duty. His application was rejected on the ground that the Navy needed him, since he is the photogenic type, for the purpose of making training films. Every time Gene saw a transfer blank for months, he filled it out with the same plea: let me see some action. Finally, after making as much fuss as a man dares, Gene won his point: he was given orders to take a crew to Okinawa, there to join up with a battle fleet in order to photograph certain phases of the Japanese invasion.

On the morning of August 10, he reported to the office of Captain Gene Markey for final instructions. He discovered that his orders had been cancelled the day before, pending outcome of peace negotiations.

LIFE WITH MIKE:

If you saw "Junior Miss," you need no further introduction to Michael Dunne, who enacted the part of the returned uncle, suspected by an impressionable Peggy Ann Garner of having served a penitentiary sentence.

While Mike was making the picture, his small son took a tremendous interest in the paternal excitement clearly evidenced. Every evening he listened to Mike's recital of the day's events on the set of "Junior Miss." Every morning he kissed his dad goodbye and heard his mother say, "Lots of luck with Junior Miss today, dear."

Finally, Mr. Dunne, Junior, asked his mother, "What's a Junior Miss?"

"A girl," said his mother. "Not exactly a little girl—a medium-sized girl."

Obviously this worried our small hero. Finally he asked his mother, "Does the Junior Miss like Daddy?"

FROM DEN TO DEHN:

A few months ago, Ginny Simms secured her release from her Metro contract, thus escaping from Leo, the Lion's den. A few months later she became Mrs. Dehn by marrying Hyatt R. Dehn, New York and Los Angeles socialite.

The wedding ceremony was performed in the Beverly Hills Community Presbyterian Church by the reverend Dr. William E. Roberts. Ginny's maid of honor was Marjorie Davies, and the best man was Captain John Rogers.

As the bridegroom is head of the local Defense Housing Corporation, so is stationed in Los Angeles, Ginny will continue her career.

GUEST WIFE'S GUESTS:

If you haven't yet seen the Claudette Colbert-Don Ameche-Dick Foran picture "Guest Wife," locate it, and spend an evening holding your sides. It is an exquisitely funny farce comedy in which Claudette delivers one of her socko performances. Ameche is flexibly brilliant, and Dick Foran's career should zoom after producers have observed his comedy technique.

Here is one of the reasons for the delight many of us take in being Hollywood writers: International planned a day-long junket for 100 of us, preparatory to previewing the picture. We boarded three chartered buses at the studio at nine one Wednesday morning. Yvonne de Carlo, Mona Freeman and about a dozen starlets were in our party, and we were joined later by Mr. and Mrs. Ameche, Mr. and Mrs. Pat O'Brien, Carmen Miranda and her sister, Aurora.

When we boarded the buses, we were handed Guest Wife envelopes; each contained an identifying badge (similar to a State Fair blue ribbon), a program of the day's events, several gold drink checks good at the Del Mar bar and several white beer checks for the same location, and two crisp one dollar bills for use in backing our judgment on the speed of some enterprising equine.

We reached the Del Mar Hotel (a charming spot surrounded by pine trees, but lying not more than a hundred feet from Pacific breakers) in time for luncheon. From there we went to the track and remained for four races. Here occurred a really memorable event. A representative of the Associated Press, a charming grey-haired woman who is a grandmother and boasts about it, rushed to the betting window with a five dollar bill, intending to place $2.00 on Horse No. 6. Confused by her bill, she said "Two on No. 5." Then she realized her error, but bravely strolled away, saying nothing. Naturally, No. 5 came in and paid $27.60. This is known as the luck of the Associated Press. A horse named Star Actress, heavily backed by the superstitious scribes, horrified the entire thespic profession by coming in a good remote last.

From the track we drove to Camp Pendleton, the enormous Marine base, there we were the dinner guests of General Howland M. Smith, a crisp, dapper, grey-haired man who became instantly and permanently installed in Hollywood's Favorite Person file.

After dinner we drove to the camp amphitheatre where Don Ameche, Pat O'Brien, the starlets, Yvonne de Carlo, and the Mirandas put on an excellent show. This was followed by the press preview of "Guest Wife." The marines loved it. So did we.

This was the most successful publicity junket most of us had attended, and for its precise timing, its thoughtful arrangements, and its skillful management throughout, a friendly gentleman named George Glass was responsible.

TAPS:

One of the best beloved character actors in Hollywood was George Barbier, who recently died at the age of 80, in Hollywood. Having made a career of playing earnest but bumbling business men, and kindly but astonished fathers, Mr. Barbier closed his life with a gesture: he set aside, in his will, a sum sufficient to provide lifetime care for his dog, Skippy.

THE END

ONE MOTHER TO ANOTHER

Two improvements in baby-feeding are showing up in healthier American children. More mothers are discovering the advantages of prepared baby foods, and babies now begin taking strained foods at an earlier age than was thought possible some years ago.

Mrs Dan Gerber

No wonder they fence me in...

When it's feeding time, and Gerber's is coming up! Babies just love Gerber's Strained Foods because of these four advantages: (1) Extra good taste, (2) Cooked the Gerber way by steam to retain precious minerals and vitamins, (3) Uniform, smooth texture, (4) Every step laboratory-checked. Do as so many mothers do, get Gerber's with "America's Best-Known Baby" on every package!

2 Cereals That Babies Like

Your doctor will tell you that most babies need extra iron after the age of three months, or more. Gerber's Cereal Food and Gerber's Strained Oatmeal have generous amounts of added iron and Vitamin B_1. Both these cereals are extra tasty. Both are pre-cooked—and ready-to-serve.

Remember, it is always wise to check your baby's feeding program with your doctor landed himself a part in MGM's "What Next, Cpl. Hargrove" with Robert Walker and Keenan Wynn.

Kent Smith is another whose movie career came to a temporary standstill when he joined the Army Air Corps a couple of years ago. Remember the American schoolmaster in "Hitler's Children," the young saboteur in "This Land is Mine", the serviceman who returned from war to solve his hometown's juvenile delinquency problem in "Youth Runs Wild"?

That was Kent Smith, and he's just won a role in Dore Schary's new picture, "Some Must Watch," with Dorothy McGuire and Ethel Barrymore.

Kent, who is a Harvard graduate by the way, is used to working with famous names; during his stage career, he was cast with "big names" like Katherine Cornell, Jane Cowl, and Margaret Sullavan.

We're all rooting for you, Kent. Best of luck!

BEMEDALING—Well, here's what we call a medal record. Our favorite "Elephant Boy," Sabu, who has completed 42 missions and 427 combat hours as a ball turret gunner on a B-24 Liberator in the Pacific, has won the D.F.C. He also has the Presidential Unit Citation, Philippines liberation ribbon, and the air medal with three oak leaf clusters.

Lt. Henry Fonda has been awarded the Bronze Star medal with a citation for meritorious service as an assistant operations officer and air combat intelligence officer in the Marianas. By the time you read this, Lt. Fonda will probably be in the United States emceeing a Navy radio program. Also in the offing is a deal with the Navy Department to allow Henry to play the lead in "Boomerang," true story of the capture of a Jap destroyer.

HOME FROM THE WARS—Cpl. Bill Lundigan is being seen around again in Hollywood, between jaunts to the hospital for treatments on an old back injury . . . Bill has been a Marine combat motion picture photographer, overseas for more than a year. He recently married Rena Morgan (Helen's daughter).

David Niven, who left in 1939 to join the British Army, will be in Hollywood come December, with a new seven-year Samuel Goldwyn contract. His first picture for that company will be "The Bishop's Wife," with Teresa Wright.

Cesar Romero is coming out of the Coast Guard and goes back to 20th to take up his contract there. His first picture—"Three Little Girls in Blue."

Lt. Jackie Coogan returns to civilian life with commercial airfields on his mind. He and a local publicist are buying one. Jackie's also to do a part in "Task Force," for Warners.

Gig Young has been released from the Navy and is back on the Warner lot.

We hear tell that Lew Ayres is planning to do a religious film for MGM as soon as he gets his Army release.

ADVICE FOR ABUSED SKIN

DON'T BE AFRAID AND STOP WORRYING NOW ABOUT EXTERNAL SKIN TROUBLES. FOLLOW THESE EASY DIRECTIONS.

By Betty Memphis

Have you ever stopped to realize that the leading screen stars that you admire, as well as the beautiful models who have lovely, soft white skin, were all born just like you with a lovely smooth skin?

Almost everyone can have a natural, healthy, normal complexion which is in itself beauty. All you must do is follow a few simple rules. Models and screen stars must give their skin special attention. So should you, because everyone looks at your face. Your social success may depend upon your being good looking, because a lovely skin may be a short cut to success in love and business. Your pleasure is worth it; and you owe it to yourself to give your complexion a chance to be healthy and beautiful.

Medical science gives us the truth about a lovely skin. There are small specks of dust in the air all the time. When these little specks, which are in the air get into an open pore in your skin, they can in time cause the pore to become larger and more susceptible to dust and infection. These open pores begin to form blackheads which become infected and bring you the misery of pimples, irritations or blemishes. When you neglect your skin by not giving it the necessary care it requires, you leave yourself wide open for external skin miseries. When you know that your skin is smooth, white and fine, you have more confidence and it helps improve your personality, and it helps improve your entire well being. A flawless skin is priceless, yet it costs you only a few pennies daily to keep it normal, natural, healthy and lovely. Many women never realize or even suspect that the difference between a glamorous complexion and an ordinary one may be caused by having blackheads and pimples.

The proper attention with the double Viderm treatment may mean the difference between enjoying the confidence a fine skin gives you or the embarrassment of an ugly abused skin. The double Viderm treatment is a formula prescribed by a doctor, and costs you only a few cents daily. This treatment consists of two jars. One jar contains Viderm Skin Cleanser, a jelly-like formula which penetrates and acts as an antiseptic upon your pores. After you use this special Viderm Skin Cleanser, apply the Viderm Fortified Medicated Skin Cream. You rub this in, leaving an almost invisible protective covering for the surface of your skin.

This double treatment has worked wonders for so many cases of abused skin, it must help you, too, or your money will be refunded. Use it for ten days. You have everything to gain and nothing to lose. It is a guaranteed treatment. Enjoy it.

Use your double Viderm treatment every day until your skin is as smooth and clear as you may want it. Then, use it only once a week to remove stale make-up and dust specks that infect your pores and to aid in healing external irritations. When you prevent blackheads, you prevent externally caused skin miseries and pimples. While your two jars and the doctor's directions are on the way to you, be sure to give your face enough attention and wash it as often as is necessary. Wash with warm water and then cleanse with water as cold as you can stand, in order to freshen, stimulate and help close your pores. After you receive everything, read your directions carefully, and then go right to it with these two fine formulas.

Just mail your name and address to Betty Memphis, care of The New York Skin Laboratory, 206 Division Street, Dept. 23-K, New York City 2, New York. By return mail you will receive both of the Viderm formulas, with full directions for using Viderm Skin Cleanser and Viderm Fortified Medicated Skin Cream. The doctor's directions and both jars are packed in a sealed carton, safety sealed. On delivery, pay two dollars plus postage. If you wish, you can save the postage fee by mailing your two dollars with your letter. If you are in any way dissatisfied, your money will be cheerfully refunded. Both of the formulas you use have been fully tested and proven, and are reliable for you. They must help you or your treatments cost nothing. After you have received your Viderm, if you have any questions to ask concerning abused skin, just send them in.—ADV.

Pretty soon carpet manufacturers were tearing their hair over their decreased sales. Getting smart, they too offered their newest products and ideas to motion picture studios. Countless manufacturers followed suit and Hollywood is dotted with manufacturers' representatives who earn their salaries by making their product pass screen-tests.

Combined bedroom-sitting rooms, all white rooms, structural glass brick, streamlined kitchens and countless other accepted contributions to modern living were popularized by motion picture homes.

Even as you and I, the studio decorators have been pretty restricted on what they can do in creating homes for the screen today. But they, too, have ideas for the future.

Hans Dreier, Paramount's authority, says, "We shall see many radical changes in factories, shops, offices, hospitals and apartment houses. Being functional buildings, they will utilize all the new functional materials. There will be light shafts in the center of apartment buildings to eliminate the now dark hallways. Drapery and upholstery materials will be made of glass: fireproof, easily cleaned, fadeproof and practically everlasting. New plywoods and plastics will replace natural wood.

"But," he cautions, "homes which families select for permanence will not be too different from what we have now. No family living room can be strictly functional. People and their characters are not streamlined yet. They will not throw overboard the charming heritage of such periods as Georgian Colonial. The kitchen, bathroom, laundry room and other such purposeful rooms will take every advantage of streamlined efficiency, but other rooms will continue to reflect the personality and background of their owners."

John Goodman of Universal Studios concurs with Dreier. His own office is a perfect example of efficient modernity, with warmth and color. Yet his home is definitely of the Federal period of the late eighteenth and early nineteenth century in America. "A home is a woman's province," he philosophizes, "and most men want it that way. They want to come from the efficiency of an office into the distinct personality of a home."

Ed Willis of Metro-Goldyn-Mayer concedes Goodman's point. He continues, "Women don't care for the modern feeling in their homes. They consider it too harsh a background for them. As a whole they prefer houses such as those shown in 'Heavenly Body' or 'Come Live With Me'. Interiors are like women's clothes. They should do something for the occupant of the home, just as clothes do something for a woman."

"Fifteen years ago, we presented a combined sitting room-bedroom in the first version of 'When Ladies Meet'. We know it had a definite influence. The women's magazines played it up because it provided a new and flattering background for women. Even very modest homes now feature bedrooms as something more to sleep and dress in."

"For the future, I see many changes. But they will not be all that the post-war planners rave about. True enough plastics, glass cloth, lucite, processed woods, plastic floor-coverings and other such processes are already practical and can be made in quantity when peace returns. All of them can make a home more practical, more easily maintained and permanent. But that will offer no particular attraction to most women. Women like to refurbish a house every so often. They like change. But they are sufficiently practical that they need the excuse of shabbiness before they feel justified in spending the money. Draperies and slipcovers offer a reasonably inexpensive way to redecorate a home, yet retain its original character. The durability of glass drapery and upholstery material will remove the excuse. There is no more durable and practical upholstery material than leather, yet with few exceptions women delegate it to men's chairs and recreation rooms."

"However, there will be many changes. With servants and part-time household help practically non-existent today, women are more conscious of the actual functional needs of their work-rooms. As a result, they will demand and get more mechanical help such as electric dishwashers, garbage disposal units, deep-freezing units permitting storage of pre-cooked foods, more storage space and more effective arrangement of it. Buffet dinners have largely replaced more formal dining; as a result dining rooms may well disappear from the home of the future. This is but one of the indications toward greater simplicity of living and of homes."

Goodman enlarges upon the matter of more storage space. "There will be out of sight places for card-tables, games and such. Linen closets as we know them today will be de-centralized. Towels will be stored in bathrooms; table-linens in dining rooms; sheets, pillow cases, blankets and comforters in bedrooms; tea-towels in the kitchen."

He also prognosticates a new kind of room—a room built almost entirely of glass for day-time living. However, he doesn't hold with those who say we will be living in all glass houses. "One room will provide enough of that," he explains, "because people do like privacy and semi-light a good part of the time."

Tom Little of 20th Century-Fox Studios, responsible for the "Claudia" house of the screen, advises women to continue to dig up furnishings out of attics and to modernize them and blend them with more modern living. He considers modern furniture alone too impersonal for a home. Although he points to the Gene Tierney apartment in "Laura" as a beautiful example of modern, he calls attention to the fact that English Victorian Baroque is used to give character and warmth to the apartment."

Tom Douglas, who created the Hilton home in "Since You Went Away", says that one cannot make a mistake choosing strictly modern, because it has no defined character as yet. For this reason, he recommends it to the person who hasn't time to devote to studying a home and its furnishings.

D'Agastino of RKO Studios predicts that, rather than a complete about-face, home-owners will work out details such as placing a work surface beside the refrigerator, interesting doorways, admitting more light, increasing use of snack bars rather than dining rooms and more outdoor living.

"Bringing Up Baby", the Katherine Hepburn-Cary Grant picture of several years ago, and "Bride By Mistake", the recent Laraine Day picture, featured homes which caught the fancy of fans. We get letters still about both of them. We used to co-operate in sending photographs and drawings to the serious writers. Now, however, with the shortage of material and help, it is impossible to do so. Both homes were of a definitely informal type. However, I feel that glass will play a most important part in homes of the future because glass is still in its infancy and we haven't yet explored many of its possibilities." D'Agastino offers one piece of advice, "I recommend heartily that every prospective home-builder go to a good architect with all their ideas. Usually you'll find that you have ideas which cost twice as much as you want to pay, but if you figure your costs at approximately $6.00 a square foot, you can expect to have a fairly good house."

Leo Kuter of Warner Bros. believes that pre-fabricated houses will come, but that they will create new home-owners of many who have not felt sufficiently permanently situated to spend much time, money or thought on a home as we know it today. Creator of the backgrounds for "Hollywood Canteen", Kuter feels sure there will spring up replicas of the night-club seen in the picture. But of homes as we know them today, he says, "The great bulk of American people will quite readily go for as many new developments in housing as facilities will permit.

"Price, however, will be of definite consideration. For that reason, the change cannot be too radical because too many have furniture even if they don't have a home. To take full advantage of the new developments, they would have to throw all their furniture away. Instead, they will compromise."

So there you are. Not one of them has said that the air age will drive us all underground to avoid jitterbug pilots overhead. Not one has said that the old homestead is going to be completely passe. Truly, it will be a gradual conversion, not a revolution, as some extremists might have you believe.

The sum and substance seems to be that home will still be home, and that the screen will continue to depict homes as such. There will still be room for Grandma's Haviland China, for Grandpa's moustache cup, for Uncle Willie's trophies. There's just going to be a lot more light on them and there's going to be someplace to stow away Aunt Hattie's gosh-awful wedding gift. Living is going to be simpler than it was in "the good old days."

So, war-bond buyers, go ahead and gloat over .that Welsh cabinet and chintz divan you have your eyes on. They will still build the kind of houses you want to put them in.

But, sister, that kitchen! Great-grandmother may have cooked over an open fire beside a covered wagon a hundred years ago, but you're going to be cooking over a gem, placed right in the midst of the brightest, shiniest servants you ever dreamed of having.

trousers, a black coat and a stiff collar. The directors were all professional diplomats who went about clicking their heels, and making Charles click his. He hated it—as much as he'd hated school, and for the same reason. He disliked, and still does, regimentation of any sort.

Under force, he had completed twelve years of school (having run away twice, but neither time with successful results). In Hungary, such an educational preparation entitled a man to an apprenticeship in a trade. So he left the Ministry and was apprenticed to an optician. The choice was not out of a love for eyeglasses, but for cameras and lenses. He "borrowed" a camera on weekends, went hiking and skiing, and always came home with about fifty photographic gems. To this day, he has a special passion for cameras—although he now has so many it would be difficult to fathom which is the favorite.

His evenings were very frequently spent at the National Theatre Academy. Ask him why, and he'll say, "Oh, just a natural curiosity, I guess." He had done a few plays in school and already the bug had bitten him, though he was yet to be aware of it.

Then he saw Paul Lukas, idol of twenty years ago; it was in a National Theatre production of "Catherine the Great." That did it. Charles wangled a contract with the theatre and studied with a Lukas colleague.

Came then a wire from his brother in England: "I'm going to America. Come with me." And not three days later, Charles had quit his job with the optician, left the theatre, said goodbye to the rest of his family, and was on his way—to England.

In London, he found he could not obtain a visa, as he was only a visitor in the country. His brother sailed for the States, leaving Charles with just one pound to his name and the additional handicap of not knowing the English language.

But ever-resourceful, and using an English-Hungarian dictionary (also a German-Hungarian dictionary, but under cover), he taught English children how to speak German, thereby picking up a few shillings—and, a little English.

He traveled to the coast, and through sign language and a few words pulled from what was still a very meagre English vocabulary, got a job at the docks, hauling hundred pound loads on his back. His income was augmented with giving German lessons to an English night watchman, he was happy to be working around ships, and he stayed on the dock job until he had saved eleven pounds for a camera.

Then from the docks he went directly to two Hungarian brothers, who ran a news picture agency. Armed with his camera, he got a job taking "the continental type of news picture," which Korvin describes with the example of "the Minister of Health kissing a chorus cutie." Such a picture was probably never taken; but if it was, Korvin took it.

In between all this, he sandwiched in some extra work in a film starring Herbert Marshall. The picture was being made some forty miles outside London, and very often he got home at dawn, just in time to report to the agency office.

All the while, however, the thought of America was bouncing around in his head. After almost a year in England, he returned to Hungary to get his visa—making the trip via Paris, where he borrowed 200 francs from a friend. Quite by coincidence, it was with the same capital—and 25 francs extra—that he arrived back in Paris, shortly afterward. The return to Hungary was a mistake, where Charles was concerned. For after sniffing the fresh air of freedom in other countries, he was stifled by the militarism and regimentation of his native land. The visa attempt failed, so he hocked his camera to get as far as Munich; and at Munich, he loaded railroad cars for the additional fare to get back to France.

His friend pulled strings for getting him a job as a cleaner in a Parisian hotel. Charles liked this new job, and promptly made friends with all the hotel guests—among whom was a trio of vaudevillians from the States, who did a fascinating act on roller skates. This chapter in his life was a brief one, though. Korvin had four suits, all well-tailored; his fellow-employees were jealous, and when they found he was working without a permit they quickly saw to it that the hotel was less one cleaner.

Nothing daunted, Korvin went over to the Louvre Museum to see about a job as a guide. He'd been brushing up on his French—not only with his fellow cleaners, but in his spare time he'd been listening to classes at the Sorbonne. He had, in fact, taken a public course on art at the Ecole de Louvre, so that he knew his way around the buildings.

All of which prepared him for the guide job, and he got it.

When he had his fill of the Louvre, he decided he wanted to see Fontainebleau. From the library he obtained several books on the subject, then applied to a travel agency for a position—again, as a guide. Charles likes this guide business, you see; he decided to see France that way, and he did, very successfully, too.

He worked at Napoleon's tomb, where he occasionally mis-labeled a body and was gently corrected by monocled Englishmen. He was a guide through the Eiffel Tower, where one day two American women, gazing upward at the ancient edifice, turned to M. Korvin and complained: "It don't lean."

Korvin, realizing that his charges had confused Paris with Pisa, and remembering the principles of optical illusion, said tactfully: "If you ladies will walk to the base of the tower and then look up, I'm sure it will lean."

It did. They beamed and tipped him generously.

To augment the Korvin tours, Charles had nightclub concessions in chocolates and fruit glaces. But he only did these odd jobs when he needed money for a definite purpose; when he had enough money to live for awhile, he stopped working and enjoyed life. He made 50 francs, then took an excursion boat down the river, went on long walks through the countryside, fed the birds. When his money ran out, he worked again until the financial situation was once more temporarily relieved.

Sometimes things didn't go so easily. Like the day he was so hungry that he ate the breadcrumbs he'd carefully collected for the many birds in the famous Luxembourg Gardens.

After that, he sold unbreakable combs. He went into a tavern, a trayfull of combs suspended from a strap around his neck. When he had spotted an amorous looking couple, he thrust his arm between them and banged a comb on the table.

"Regardez," he said loudly. "Breakproof." The escort always bought a comb to get rid of him.

Then he bumped into a painter who sold landscape postcards. The painter wanted a photographer to take pictures throughout France, after which they were hand-colored. Charles was his man. He traveled through France for three months; then one night found himself in Marseilles, flat broke and no money coming in from the painter.

He spent the night in a shelter, and prayed aloud with his 200 derelict roommates, before he was assigned a bed of hay. Next day, he unloaded the orange boats which came from Spain to Marseilles; and after 10 hours' toil, had wine and a good dinner at a tavern.

There he met two Italian truckers, who were driving to Paris with a load of eggs and almonds. They agreed to take him on as a rider.

Back in Paris, Korvin met Dr. Norman Bethune, who was doing blood transfusion experiments. He wanted a photographer to make a newsreel of the work he was planning to do in Spain.

"Can you do it?" he asked Charles.

"Certainly," Korvin replied confidently, never having had a motion picture camera in his hands before.

"I'll give you $50 a week."

Korvin's eyes glazed over; he threw out his hands, helplessly. "That's too much," he protested. "I'll do it for twenty-five."

Dr. Bethune hired him, and gave him 10,000 francs to buy equipment. Charles stumbled around at first, but learned fast. They were in Spain only three months—and Korvin learned to speak Spanish.

On their return to Paris, Dr. Bethune announced that he was leaving for the United States in a few days, and asked Korvin to join him.

"Just get my entry visa and I'm ready," said Charles.

The visa was obtained, with pressure from the press, and 24 hours later Korvin found himself, with one valise and one suit, watching the lights of France slip away over the sea.

The last day on the boat, in third class, Korvin was snapping pictures up on the first class deck. There was a woman standing at the rail, with a bored air.

"Look at those rich people," said Korvin. "They don't have half as much fun as we do."

But just as he snapped the shutter, the woman saw him, and a look of recognition crossed her face. She caught at the arm of the man next to her and said: "Jimmy—look! It's Charles Korvin!"

'Jimmy' was James Hilton. Korvin had met Hilton and his wife, in England; and once you've met Korvin, you don't forget him. They are "best friends," to this day. As a matter of fact, it was the Hiltons who persuaded Charles to go to California. Korvin had to stay in Mexico a month before he could get his formal entrance papers for coming to the United States, and it was the Hiltons who drove down to the Mexican border, laden with shirts and socks for their immigrant friend. Thus Charles Korvin arrived in the U. S.

To keep things in proper sequence, however . . . here's what happened: he was six weeks in N. Y., where he finished the Spanish picture, then Korvin hitch-hiked to California. Then the Mexican junket, to get his papers. On his arrival in Hollywood, he tried to find work as a cameraman. No takers. Then he tried as an actor. Still no luck. So he went back to Europe, made two travelogues, and returned to Hollywood. He stayed there a year, on his second try; found no work and went back East, thoroughly disgusted, and almost ready to give up.

He attended Robert Porterfield's Barter Theatre, in Virginia, and during the dress rehearsal of his first play in ten years, he fainted dead away. He did radio work in New York the following winter, was inducted into the army and rejected. He went back to the Barter Theatre and did five plays, directing one. (Some of his confreres, during this period, were Gregory Peck, Hume Cronyn and Jeffrey Lynn.)

His first Broadway play was "Winter Soldiers," and although the play itself was ill-fated, Korvin got good notices and went directly into the lead of "Dark Eyes," which ran 11 months in New York and then went on the road.

By that time, as usual, Hollywood wanted him. He married Helena in New York, brought her to Hollywood, and signed a contract with Universal Studios.

You saw him in "Enter Arsene Lupin"? His next will be "As It Was Before," in which he is starred opposite Merle Oberon. His first really big picture, and Korvin's mighty excited about it. It's his claim, however, that a man will get anything he wants, if he has the patience and perseverance to wait for it.

He wanted a camera—he got it. He wanted to travel—and he did. He wanted to come to America—and he did. He set his heart on the first Capehart he ever saw wanting to own one—and that very Capehart now decorates his living room. He wanted Helena to be Mrs. Charles Korvin—and she is. He wanted a dog that looked like Mr. Asta—and he has it, except that "Mr. Asta's" name is Mrs. Millmoss, in honor of their favorite Thurber cartoon.

So that's Charles Korvin . . . as he is, and as he was before. And we repeat, he's really "a nice guy."

THE END

MODEL G—FORD

"My most constant friend has been Harold Clifton, director of the Santa Monica (California) Players. Harold worked with me, wept over me, shouted at me, bullied me, suffered with me, encouraged me, and finally just collapsed from sheer exhaustion and relief when I made the grade."

With an impressive stage background, Clifton began organization of the Santa Monica Community Playhouse some years back and discovered talent in the leggy, gangling, fifteen-year-old high school student with the strange Welsh name. Gwyllyn Ford was enchanted with the theatre. He haunted the Playhouse, earning his right to hang around by sweeping out the place twice a day, working the light board, manipulating the curtain, and shoving around scenery with adolescent agility.

To make worthwhile the great affection young Glenn (he changed his name, of course) showered on his brain-child, Clifton began giving him a few small parts. He kept fanning that tiny spark that set Glenn apart from the other tyros, and it wasn't long before he began coaching the boy personally. All of which led to sessions of talks about dramatics in general, Staniskavski in particular, and the vast and uncharted future of the budding actor.

This idyll lasted about three years, after which Glenn tucked his high school diploma under his arm and went out to look for a job. Simultaneously Santa Monica support of the Playhouse lagged and soon died of sheer boredom. Out of the void arose another group, The Mummers, and Glenn turned his attention in that direction.

He went to work and was, in turn, hot dog hawker, bus driver, reporter and delivery boy for the Santa Monica Evening Outlook, manager of a paint store, window glass installer, mirror maker, pool man for the Edgewater Beach Club, photographer's model, plane valet at Metropolitan Airport, and car lube expert—and he lived in constant fear that the hydraulic equipment would fail and he'd be crushed dramatically beneath the car he was working on.

During this period he set himself a weekly savings goal of sixty cents, which sum represented the cost of a round-trip ticket, via public conveyance, to the local metropolis of Los Angeles, where he wore a path between the car station and the Curran Theatre.

Once there, he sat around in the lobby hoping that Homer Curran, the manager, would get a good look at him, clasp his hands in sheer delight and make him a star overnight. What actually happened was that Mr. C. got so weary of tripping over Glenn's outstretched legs that he finally sent him backstage to relieve the lobby clutter.

At the stage door Glenn wangled from director Herman Shumlin the job of stage manager for "The Children's Hour." It was a job he'd been trained for by Clifton, who believed in knowing "theatre" from the back of the house on out to the box-office. But the smell of greasepaint got Glenn down and he began badgering Shumlin for a part in the play. More to keep him quiet than to give him a break, Shumlin let him romp through as the grocer's boy, in the execution of which Glenn had three immortal lines —1) "Here are the things;" 2) "A car's coming;" and 3) "Goodbye."—delivered with such vigor and feeling that the audience was spellbound. Or so Glenn likes to think.

During this professional episode he continued commuting to the beach town, and when Clifton began organization of the new Santa Monica Players, Glenn became one of the charter members.

His "success" on the legitimate stage gave him an air of confidence, and as he continued to appear in more of Clifton's productions, this experienced atmosphere extended itself well over the footlights and impressed Oliver Hinsdell, then an MGM talent scout, whom Clifton had almost dragged bodily into the theatre. Glenn was summarily summoned for an interview.

He stood across the desk from the scout and made with that disarmingly wide Welsh grin. Hinsdell surveyed him at close range.

"You're a good actor, Ford," he said finally, "but you're certainly no pretty boy, are you?"

Glenn gulped frantically.

"Sorry, son, but we're looking for leading men, not characters."

Despite the criticism, Hinsdell went to bat for Glenn, and when he moved headquarters from Metro to Paramount, he wangled a part for him on the new lot in a short called "Night In Manhattan."

The twenty-five dollar paycheck from the stint went right out again for the tux he rented for the part. And the only interest shown in Glenn's screen self was by Producer Ted Lesser, who offered him a small and uninspired stock contract. Glenn gave his agent, Marty Martyn, a hurry call. "Don't sign!" was the verdict, and Glenn turned thumbs down on the offer. This caused an immediate rift with Lesser, who on subsequent meetings on the lot glared and snarled, "Hullo, Ford. Slumming?"

Glenn took it pretty hard. He wasn't yet used to the devious machinations of Hollywood. But he learned quickly. In the next few months S. Sylvan Simon at Universal said discouragingly that he wasn't the "type" Max Arno, then casting director at Warner Bros., said he wasn't picture material.

Studio-shunned, Ford felt defeat. But Clifton snapped him out of this deadly mood with one of his infallible fight talks. Glenn gave it the stiff upper lip and returned to do a bit in "Golden Boy" for Curran. After that he went back to Santa Monica, and it was while he was doing the title role there in "Parnell" that talent scout Tom Moore, at Clifton's behest, saw him and arranged an interview at Twentieth Century-Fox.

Moore figured that while Glenn wasn't exactly collar ad material, his superb acting ability more than made up for the dearth of classic features. He trotted him over and introduced him to Lou Schreiber, Darryl Zanuck's assistant. Schreiber cast a baleful glance at Glenn, asked him to leave the room, and spent the next ten minutes reading the riot act to Moore for wasting the studio's time.

Bloody but unbowed, Moore persisted in his efforts to give Glenn a break. After the next play he took another chance, and tested him.

FOREMOST EDITOR REVEALS SECRETS OF CHARM AND POPULARITY

New York: — It is announced that Helen Valentine, now editor of the sensationally successful magazine "Seventeen" is the co-author of a remarkable guide to charm which recently was made available to women of all ages. The volume is called "Better Than Beauty" because it reveals the secrets of charm which are even more effective in gaining popularity than natural beauty.

"Better Than Beauty" is designed to help every woman, no matter what her age, bring out her most attractive personality through proper use of make-up, clothes, social and business manners. One of the important features of the book is its simplicity, for it shows easy, inexpensive ways that every woman can use to make herself more attractive. Some who have already benefited by the advice in "Better Than Beauty" say that just one simple fact in the book helps them change from "wallflowers" to popular, sought-after women.

Among the hundreds of different popularity "Tricks" revealed in "Better Than Beauty" are: Professional make-up secrets; how to have a good time at a party; how to walk gracefully, how to appear shorter if too tall, or taller if too short; how to add charm to your voice, how to overcome shyness; and many, many others. The volume is illustrated throughout with intriguing line drawings.

The publishers will send a copy on approval to any woman mailing in the attached coupon. The price of the book is now only $1 though it was formerly published at $2.

"It was horrible," Glenn says. "I wore top hat and tails, my hair was slicked back and my makeup was slathered on an inch thick. I looked like a dyspeptic gigolo."

When Schreiber got a look at the test, Moore was close to being fired. The test was so rank it justified everything Schreiber said. And he said plenty. But Moore's faith in Glenn's ability was unshakable, and he bided his time for another attempt at putting the Ford face on film.

"Naturally I was disappointed about flopping the test" Glenn says, "but it turned out to be just one of a series of things that hurt but helped me grow—both mentally and emotionally. It was heartbreaking, being defeated at every turn, but the knowledge that even just two people had faith in me gave me a certain sense of security."

"Then my agent, Marty, threw in the towel, and I thought the bottom had dropped out of everything for me. I remember what he said. It was, 'Listen. I know you've got something. But I can't sell it!' That was the well-known straw. I left for New York within the week as stage manager of 'Soliloquy,' and under-study to John Beal, the star."

Thanks to the critics, the opus folded the night after opening and Glenn found himself scouting jobs along the Great White Way.

Not averse to a little sight-seeing on the town, he took in Radio City Music Hall and came face to face (from the nineteenth row) with a very talented and personable young dancer named Eleanor Powell. The impact was terrific. He left the theatre tripping headily on a series of small, white clouds.

He'd just landed a role in Tallulah Bankhead's "The Little Foxes," when the devoted Clifton wired that he'd convinced Curran our boy was the perfect lead for the Los Angeles production of "Our Town."

Glenn threw over the Bankhead play and arrived in L. A., to learn that Curran had changed his mind and had booked in the Chicago "Our Town" company. Glenn found himself back at the old stand with Clifton, who still wouldn't give up hope.

After a long period of thumb-twiddling, and a West Coast tour with Irene Rich in "A Broom for The Bride." Tom Moore came through with his third bid.

"This time it's a cinch," Moore said. "The studio's in a spot. They have to find a juvenile character right away."

"Not interested," Glenn said. "I'm packing to go back to New York."

Moore protested. Glenn countered, finally capitulated. He made the test wearing a day's growth of beard, a leather jacket, and some dirty dungarees. Three hours later the studio waved a contract in front of his nose.

"Seven years?" Glenn howled. "Don't be silly! I'll do this one picture and then make tracks for Broadway, as planned."

So "Heaven With a Barbed Wire Fence," his first venture into feature length celluloid, finally got under way. And when that was finished, Glenn began packing for his trek East. But Moore stepped in again. "Look," he said, "you haven't got an agent. Give Gummo Marx ten days to set you somewhere. If he doesn't swing it, go on to New York—and good luck to you."

It was a fair proposition and Glenn agreed to sit it out. Three days later he signed his name to a Columbia contract and proceeded to hypo his box-office appeal until he enlisted in the Marine Corps in December of 1943, he was one of the top leading men in town."

Despite a sizable list of film successes like "Destroyer" with Edward G. Robinson and "So Ends Our Night," with Margaret Sullavan, he is downright sentimental over "Flight Lieutenant," which he made with Pat O'Brien. It was during production of this particular picture that O'Brien introduced him to Eleanor Powell, the girl he'd lost his heart to from nineteen rows back in the Music Hall. Those silly clouds scudded back under his feet and he walked around moon-eyed for a couple of years until, dazzled by his Marine dress blues—and incidentally, by him—Eleanor became Mrs. Ford.

Ellie and Glenn took a tiny apartment in La Jolla, near the San Diego Marine Base, and found that happiness did grow on trees, after all. Then, on Pearl Harbor Day in 1944, Glenn returned to Hollywood and his familiar tweeds and fastened his discharge pin in his left lapel.

He took time out to look over the local scene and try to get the feel of the place again. It wasn't easy. Star names, unfamiliar two years before, flashed from every theatre marquee in town. It was pretty discouraging.

Then he met Bette Davis. One look was enough to convince her that Glenn was tailor made for "A Stolen Life," her first producing stint for Warner's. But there was studio trouble over Glenn's loan-out that dragged on for endless weeks. It looked like another losing battle for Glenn. Down, but not out, he found the ever-present helping hand when the star, declaring herself a staunch new friend, went to bat for him and won hands down, against all odds. Glenn quickly slipped into the role that is certain to put him right back on top of the heap where he was before his enlistment.

"It's not a case of luck, at all," Glenn says. "In everyone's life it's friends like Bette Davis, Tom Moore and Harold Clifton who are responsible for your success. Their trust and faith and strength are vital; without them you're licked. Lady Luck? Let her go whistle for kudos—she won't get them from me!"

JUNE BRIDE

Bess Van Dyke. As he talked, he noticed that June was the only one who wasn't vibrating the apartment with jitterbug routines. As a matter of fact, she was sitting rather quietly . . . and he noticed that in moments or repose, her face had a sad, wistful expression.

So he asked her to have dinner with him one night. He took her to a nightclub, figuring that would be her choice. He discovered that night that June didn't like to jitterbug, that she didn't like nightclubs, that she had a sense of humor, liked books and Chinese food. June found that Dick was averse to nightclubs, that he was fun to be with, and that he liked books and Chinese food. In short, they each found a friend.

Dick was more taken with the small blonde than he liked to admit. He had just gone through a divorce, and another marriage was the farthest thing from his mind. He decided to invite June to while away a day on his boat. For Dick, this was an ultimatum. His boat is the only place he feels really free and happy. And as a rule, women make fools of themselves on boats. He was sure June would step on the varnish and smear the brass and complain about the spray and the windiness of it all. Or maybe she'd jabber endlessly about port and tacking and starboard and hawsers, misusing every term with neat Malapropism.

When he called for her, she was wearing an old sweater, rolled up blue jeans and a pair of sneakers that looked as though they had trod the decks of the Santa Maria. On the boat, June examined exerything in open-mouthed wonder, listened patiently to Dick's explanations and confessed she didn't understand a word of it. Would he please just sail the boat and could she lie down on the deck and not talk for a while?

Mr. Powell didn't know it at the time, but he was a dead duck.

It went on like that, always fun. Sometimes it was quiet fun, like the evenings they spent at home, their immersion in books broken only by an occasional smile at each other.

Or noisy, quite noisy. June has the incurable habit of learning for herself, inevitably winding up with disaster and an abashed grin. She grew bold enough at the harbor to ask Dick one day if she could take the small speedboat for a ride. Dick agreed, on the condition that she let him put it back in the slip when she was finished.

"Sure," said June, and away she went.

An hour of gleefully missing every boat in the bay, and she slowed up alongside Dick's yacht. He wasn't in sight. Maybe she'd put this small plaything into the slip herself. What the heck? She made a wide turn with the throttle full out, and headed for the slip. Except that she forgot to put it into reverse gear. The "plaything" zoomed hellbent toward the row of shining boats bobbing peacefully on the quiet water.

Even lying full across the bow, and grabbing wildly at passing boats, didn't stop her. After removing the paint from several skiffs, June's water chariot came to rest, half on the dock, half in the harbor. She opened one eye cautiously, spied Dick standing on the deck of his own boat. He was passing one hand slowly over his face in what is known in Hollywood as a slow burn. She grinned sheepishly—and when June grins there isn't anything to do but grin, too. By the time Dick had jumped across the bows of a dozen boats to rescue her, they were both doubled up with laughter.

Their companionship had reached a point where marriage seemed the next, the inevitable step. But Dick was reluctant about popping the question. He wasn't free to marry until July, and he thought it only fair to June to wait.

Then June collected a small group of cold germs and landed in bed. She was propped up on pillows one evening, wearing a pale yellow bedjacket and a yellow hair ribbon. The table beside her bed was loaded down with a vase of red roses, sent her by the studio. In back of the roses was a large picture of June and Van Johnson, which a fan had just left for June's autograph.

When Dick walked in, he saw the yellow bedjacket and hair ribbon and the sad blue eyes, and he melted. Then he saw the picture—and the roses—and his heart did a quick freeze. The time had come.

Five minutes later my phone rang. It was Dick, his voice one pitch higher in excitement.

"I would like you to talk to the future Mrs. Powell," he said.

I picked up the phone again, and June's voice came over the wire, half laughter, half tears. I don't remember what she said, and it's a cinch she doesn't.

They have both changed in recent months. June has become less sensitive and more practical, and Dick has grown more sentimental and more thoughtful. At this writing, the two of them blend like the sea and the sky, and are as inseparable. Any evening about six-thirty, before they were Mr. and Mrs., Dick Powell could be seen driving along Melrose Avenue, headed for dinner with June, and looking as though speed laws were invented by the devil. If June finished at her studio earlier than usual, she removed her makeup as she ran to her car, then headed for Dick's studio, where she sat on the set until he was finished.

Their happiest common faculty, and one which makes for well-glued marriages, is their ability to laugh at themselves or each other. The latest hilarity was in reference to their house in Brentwood, where they're living since their marriage. Designed by an architect whose idea of infinity was a broom closet, the house needed considerable re-doing. The process of removing walls was supposed to have begun a week preceding the night Dick flopped wearily into a chair in June's apartment.

"How's the house going?" June asked.

Dick sat bolt upright, his face rigid.

"How's it going? How's it going? I'll tell you how it's going! Not a thing's been touched. Not a nail ripped out. I was out there today and that contractor hasn't as much as opened the front door." He swept the phone off the table. "I'm going to call him up right now and give him a piece of my mind!"

He dialed a number in swift jerks.

"Hello . . . Mr. Brown? Powell speaking. Listen, I was out at the house today and not a thing's been started. What do you think I hired you . . . Huh? . . . Oh . . . Well, yes. All right, old man . . . Yes, tomorrow."

He hung up and looked at June through his fingers.

"What's the matter?" she asked.

"I guess I forgot to tell him to start," said Dick.

He had to pound June on the back to prevent her choking to death.

The house has been a source of delight to June. It's the first real home she has ever had, and she is going through the chinaware-linens-silver troubles of every present-day bride.

The same day she wangled a dozen turkish towels, one-sixteenth of an inch thick, she was called into the front office of a studio bigwig. He told her to sit down, and for a half hour flung compliments at her, congratulating her on her work. He made it Posie-For-Allyson Day in general. June looked up at him dreamily.

"Towels," she said. "I got a dozen towels."

There is not a trace of professional jealousy between them—only pride in each other's work. When Dick made a personal appearance tour for "Murder, My Sweet," he stopped in one Eastern city where his picture was playing across the street from "Music For Millions."

"After you've seen this one," he told his audience, "go across the street and see a good picture. June Allyson's in it."

They're in love, all right. I once pulled a lowly feminine trick on Dick. To get his reaction, I casually let drop the phrase, "June's faults." Mr. Powell stiffened as though he had just been harpooned.

"June," he said, "has no faults."

I credit myself with more sense than to question June's feelings for Dick. She's so happily, so completely Mrs. Richard Ewing Powell—and liking it.

THE END

PENNY-WISE:
Said Pat O'Brien, wheedling his son, Sean, into spending a few minutes on an errand, "How about doing this for a shiny new penny." Said Sean matter-of-factly, "My terms for the job are a dirty old dime."

STRANGERS WITH CHILDREN

of our life together, that I'm afraid I'd be bored by the very routine which I think I covet."

Mrs. Bob Hope was born Dolores De Fina, in New York City, the daughter of an Italian father and an Irish mother whose maiden name was Kelly. She attended Holy Spirit grammar school and Evander Childs High School, then adopted the professional name Dolores Reade, and began to sing in the better Manhattan night clubs.

Her voice was a low contralto, rich and throaty, and won for her an instant success.

Into the Vogue Club one December evening walked a long-time friend of Dolores Reade, namely George Murphy. He was accompanied by another gentleman whose appearance was distinguished by what he described as a ski-slide nose. When Dolores had finished her number, she joined the two men at their table and the friend of Mr. Murphy was introduced. Mr. Bob Hope.

Miss Reade was, as all theatrical people are, a walking encyclopedia of important local names. That of Bob Hope awakened no cross-index in her mind; yet, despite his obscurity, she was aware of a certain aura of success.

Mr. Murphy excused himself to go table hopping; so Miss Reade, being an assured young woman whose suggestions were customarily accepted with alacrity by any escort, said to this Mr. Hope, "Would you like to dance?"

Mr. Hope's profile scarcely turned in her direction. "No, thank you," he replied with dignity. "I'm tired."

Those five words rendered him unique. In her experience to that moment, no man had previously refused one of Miss Reade's requests. Conversation languished; Mr. Murphy, returning from a round robin of the room, swept Miss Reade away to dance. The band was playing "Did You Ever See A Dream Walking?"

They had circled the room three or four times when Mr. Hope cut in. "I've changed my mind," he announced casually.

The band played "Smoke Gets In Your Eyes." They danced. The band played "It's only a paper moon, shining over a cardboard sea; but it wouldn't be make-believe, if you believed in me." The dancing continued.

Bob escorted Dolores (it had reached first name status) home that night. They sat, oblivious to sub-zero weather, in Bob's car and talked until dawn. After saying goodnight at sunrise, Dolores floated upstairs on that palpable vapor of ethereal romanticism induced by fatigue, cold, hunger, and bliss, and awakened her mother.

"I've just met the man I'm going to marry," she announced, sighing.

Mrs. De Fina refrained from opening her eyes. "What does he do for a living?"

"I didn't exactly ask, but I think he's a chorus boy in 'Roberta'," breathed Dolores.

"You are out of your mind," groaned her mother. "Go to bed."

The following day George Murphy sent Dolores tickets to see "Roberta," the show in which he, too, was ap-

HOW TO WRITE FOR PROFIT
Free Offer Points the Way

"With pleasure and profit I have studied the Palmer course. You are proving ours is a profession calling for such sound, sane, constructive training as you offer," Ruth Comfort Mitchell.

Most famous authors were once just ordinary people—with an urge to write. Joseph Conrad couldn't even read or write English at 20. Gertrude Atherton was once a housewife, Conan Doyle a doctor, Jack London a sailor. Most of them learned the slow, hard way, by trial and error. But you need not take that long route to a writing career.

Now there's a direct road to success—Palmer Institute's home study training—endorsed by such famous writers as Ruth Comfort Mitchell, Rupert Hughes, Gertrude Atherton.

Katherine Newlin Burt said, "I'd have started ten years sooner on a literary career. But there was no Palmer Institute then."

There have been hundreds of successful graduates—new as well as established writers—in our 25 years—fiction, newspaper features, magazine articles, radio scripts. Many a former clerk, soldier, housewife, mechanic, teacher, is now writing for profit. Why not you? Enjoy an ideal career—money, travel, independence, public recognition.

To find out how you too may succeed, send to Palmer Institute of Authorship, Hollywood 28, California, for our "Talent Finder." Simply answer the questions and return it for our frank confidential analysis and advice. No cost or obligation. Mail it today.

pearing as a star. Dolores attended the matinee. Before the curtain went up, she examined the back of her program minutely, risking blindness in an attempt to find the magic name Hope. He was not listed among the chorus boys.

The house lights blinked out and the footlights glowed. As the show opened, Miss Reade discovered the reason for Mr. Hope's name having been omitted from the list of chorus boys. He was one of the stars of the show and his name was printed in bold type in the front section of the program.

After final curtain, Miss Reade went back stage for the ostensible purpose of thanking Mr. Murphy for the tickets and congratulating him upon his performance.

In those days, according to Bob, he kept a trained dog just outside his dressing room to assay the charms of passersby. If the lady was ordinary, he growled; if she was superior, he yelped; if she was a refugee from a sultan's dream, he howled. When Dolores went by, he howled.

Bob was having a suit fitted at the time, so he thrust out his head and asked her to give an opinion as to its style and cut. She said the suit was extremely smart; but afterward she didn't recognize it the first time Bob wore it, so her attention must have wavered. She half expected him to ask her for a date that night, but he was so engrossed in the garment, the show, and a new routine he was planning to introduce, that he had no time for social amenities. Hot-cheeked, Miss Reade excused herself, escaped to George Murphy's dressing room, thanked him for the tickets, then hurried away to do her Christmas shopping.

The following night, Bob telephoned her at the club and asked for a date. She counted to ten, then said with reserve that she would be glad to see him.

His arrival at the club strongly resembled a scene from a Hope-Crosby picture: upon his arm clung a fragile and lovely blonde whom Dolores had never met. Dolores, singing at the moment, nodded a chill in his direction while Bob, with the aid of a napkin and gestures, tried to convey some sort of message. Miss Reade was not interested. After her song she returned to her dressing room to brood upon the perfidy of mankind.

Not until the evening was practically ruined did the gentleman appear for whom Bob had been convoying the beauty. Bob rushed back to explain to Dolores, who promptly met the girl and found her to be charming. So it was a foursome who did the town that brisk December night, climaxing their gaiety appropriately enough at the "Ha Ha Club." It was there that Mr. Hope, in character, asked Miss Reade to marry him.

There was a slight delay in plans. Dolores had to leave New York January 14th to appear in the Embassy Club in Miami with whose management she had a four-week contract, followed by an optional added four weeks. She dropped the option at the end of the month's appearance, rushed back to New York and collected her protesting mother, who for twenty-eight days had been reiterating her distaste for Mr. Hope as a son-in-law. "You should marry a nice Irish boy," she insisted. "Who is this Englisher?"

The play "Roberta" was then showing in Erie, Pennsylvania. So Dolores, with her fuming mother, went to Erie—and on February 19, 1934, at eight in the evening, Miss Dolores De Fina became the wife of Mr. Leslie Towne Hope.

"Roberta" closed in April, by which time Bob had perfected a vaudeville skit for himself and Dolores. They opened in Brooklyn. The plan was for Dolores to sing a verse, a chorus, and repeat the chorus, whereupon Bob was to emerge from the wings and toss off a comedy routine.

Although the new Mrs. Hope was thoroughly conversant with nightclub singing technique, this was her initial experience on the stage. However, it hadn't occurred to her that there would be the slightest difference in her attitude toward the two media. She emerged from the wings, aglow with confidence, and sang the first verse and chorus. During this time she became aware of the polka-dotted darkness beyond the footlights. A nightclub audience was near and friendly; this was distant and dismaying. It was a sea of ink in which floated the white bellies of fish.

She parted her lips and tried to join the orchestra in the second chorus. No sound came forth. The orchestra repeated the opening phrase in an effort to encourage the fainting voice. No success. Bob sauntered from the wings and, in his inimitable manner, asked the leader to repeat the phrase. He listened attentively.

"Again, please," he said.

The leader complied.

"Just the same FOUR times," observed Bob, beaming upon his wife. "How many times do you let them stutter before you interrupt?"

The gag was so successful that, even when Mrs. Hope's stage fright had vanished, they continued to use it. From time to time the routine was changed. As a team, they had to observe but one rule: Bob had to remain out of Dolores' line of vision while she was singing or otherwise carrying the act, or he broke her up and she fell to laughing.

"I don't mean to break you up," Bob apologized one night.

"I know you don't," said his wife. "But you are a very funny man. Every time I look at you, you make me laugh."

Bob spread his arms and looked toward heaven. "What have I ever done to deserve such a wife?" he demanded. "I should lock you up and keep you secret, or every comedian on earth will try to steal you."

Bob Hope is still the funniest man in the world to his wife. She listens, bright-eyed, to every broadcast. As soon as Bob is off the air, he telephones home—from wherever he is in the United States—and asks, "How was it?"

Although Bob maintains that Dolores is his severest critic, she always answers, "Fine." The intonation of her voice tells him whether she considers the show superior, sub-superior, or simply good. There are no lower gradations in her analysis of her husband's comedy.

Although Bob appears to be totally unconscious of her presence, associates agree that he usually puts on his best shows, ad libs with surpassing brilliance, and reaches the zenith of hair-trigger wit when Mrs. Hope is somewhere in the audience. He encourages her to accompany him whenever she can conscientiously leave the children.

The Hope children are Linda, now six, and Tony, five. Each was secured from The Cradle in Chicago, and each has an introductory story of merit.

Linda was introduced to her parents when she was an ingenue of six weeks. Mr. and Mrs. Hope had just returned from Europe on the Queen Mary, which had been east of New York by twenty-four hours when war was declared on September 3, 1939. Bob had given repeated shows on the fear-haunted, blacked-out ship as it inched its way through the ominous North Atlantic. His mind was filled with war and the threat of even more wide-spread war. When Mrs. Hope, who had been talking adoption for several years, said, "Bob, I think we should stop at The Cradle and sign a petition for adoption," he stared at her incredulously.

"This is no time to start a family," he protested.

"During a war, the family is the most important thing on earth," said his wife. "In times of great change, it is the one value that remains changeless."

So they stopped at The Cradle. As Bob later reported it to friends, "The attendants stuffed me into one of these rear-entrance zoot suits and a surgical Santa Claus Beard. Then they marched me into a glass cage and exhibited me to a series of little characters who went wild about me. At least they clawed the air and screamed."

Because of certain formalities, Linda was not available for two weeks, so the Hopes continued to California. There, Mrs. Hope employed a nurse and returned with her to Chicago to claim their daughter.

Naturally, each of the newspaper and syndicate services was eager to photograph the event, but Mrs. Hope had established a set of rules for herself as a mother and No. 1 on the list was "No pictures." The nurse smuggled the baby out of the hotel via the freight elevator, while Mrs. Hope walked through a lobby clicking with cameras.

When Mrs. Hope boarded the train, the nurse and baby were already established in a drawing room. Dolores' mother had joined her in Chicago for a few days, but was returning to New York instead of continuing to California; so she was standing on the platform, waving goodbye. Abruptly she began to make frantic gestures just as the train began to move, indicating that something unusual was happening in the drawing room adjoining that occupied by the Hope family. Dolores couldn't understand, of course, but jumped to the heart-stopping conclusion that something was wrong. "Kidnappers!" she thought.

The train was rattling westward, gaining speed to match the momentum of Mrs. Hope's apprehension, when an obviously male fist hammered on the door. "Who's there?" quavered Dolores.

"Open up and see," said a familiar voice.

With a cry of sheerest relief, the apprentice mother unlocked the door to admit Bing Crosby, veteran father and Pythias to Bob Hope's Damon.

He sensed Mrs. Hope's perturbation at once. "Settle down," he advised comfortably, inspecting Linda. "An old hand like myself can assure you that babies are practically indestructible. But if you need advice, Betty and Bob Montgomery are in the third drawing room in this car, and Betty has brought up a colt and a filly.

MICHIGAN BULB CO., Dept. W-1408
148 Monroe Avenue, N. W., Grand Rapids 2, Mich.

And now if you'll excuse me . . ."

He secured a telegraph blank and dispatched a wire to Bob reading, "Fine thing. Me walking the floor coast to coast with your baby. She is very cute. Regards, Bing." And Mr. Montgomery wired, "Been up all night with a certain Miss Linda Hope. Is she any relation of yours? Robert Montgomery, JUNIOR."

When Linda was fourteen months old, her parents were notified by The Cradle that a baby boy, who satisfied all the requirements, was ready for the Hopes' inspection. On one of his hurried trips East, Bob stopped in Chicago, telephoned friends and induced them to drive him out to The Cradle. And back there again, Bob repeated the performance of putting on surgical mask and sterile gown, and inspected a male infant who obligingly turned his profile. Chuckling, Bob went downstairs and reported, "That little character with the ski-slide nose—that's for me."

He wired his decision to Mrs. Hope, who, more blasé with her second acquisition, boarded a plane, collected her son and flew back to Hollywood with him.

It is an interesting commentary on the selective powers of the great-hearted woman who manages The Cradle that both the Hope children resemble Bob. In the case of Tony, the likeness is phenomenal.

When he is between pictures, Mr. Hope contrives to spend whatever time he can arrange with the children in their play room, coaching them along certain lines. He tells them jokes tailored to fit their small years and teaches them to give and take good-natured raillery. Sometimes their budding humor serves a private purpose of his own.

Recently, Mrs. Hope appeared—to her husband, at least—to have added perhaps a trifle too much weight here and there. Bob has always been intensely proud of his neat and pretty wife and he had no intention of allowing her to sacrifice any of her charm to the comfort of avoirdupois. He took measures.

The following morning, when Mrs. Hope entered the nursery, two white-clad figures arose solemnly from trundle beds and bowed in her direction. "Hello, Fatty," they chirped.

According to Bob, "She promptly took off five pounds."

In other matters, Bob takes the oblique manner of expressing his opinion. When Mrs. Hope descends to the living room, dressed her best to accompany Bob to a broadcast, or to fulfill a social engagement, her husband customarily bestows a swift but comprehensive glance. In case he is pleased, he simply beams. In the case of a trick hat or an annual color scheme of which he is dubious, he is likely to observe—partisanship eloquent in his tones—"No matter what anyone says, you wear that hat if you like it."

But being wife to the famed frequently involves embarrassments other than those of wardrobe. Mrs. Hope was called to the telephone one night by a voice which introduced its owner as a representative of a prominent newspaper syndicate. "Are you and Mr. Hope separated?" the woman asked.

Completely nonplussed, Mrs. Hope stammered, "Why on earth do you ask?"

"I have a report that Mr. Hope was seen dancing at a night club Tuesday,"

BACKACHE, LEG PAINS MAY BE DANGER SIGN

Of Tired Kidneys

If backache and leg pains are making you miserable, don't just complain and do nothing about them. Nature may be warning you that your kidneys need attention.

The kidneys are Nature's chief way of taking excess acids and poisonous waste out of the blood. They help most people pass about 3 pints a day.

If the 15 miles of kidney tubes and filters don't work well, poisonous waste matter stays in the blood. These poisons may start nagging backaches, rheumatic pains, leg pains, loss of pep and energy, getting up nights, swelling, puffiness under the eyes, headaches and dizziness. Frequent or scanty passages with smarting and burning sometimes shows there is something wrong with your kidneys or bladder.

Don't wait! Ask your druggist for Doan's Pills, used successfully by millions for over 40 years. They give happy relief and will help the 15 miles of kidney tubes flush out poisonous waste from the blood. Get Doan's Pills.

the woman explained, adding the name of Mr. Hope's dancing partner on the occasion.

Controlling her voice, Mrs. Hope explained that the girl in question had been a guest on Bob's radio show and that afterward the entire troupe had gone dancing for brief relaxation. She, herself, had been unable to go because of a cold.

The first time this happened, Dolores was furious. The second time, she was angry. The third time she was bored. After that the denials became routine. The fact remains, however, that the wife of a celebrity is constantly asked, even by close friends, "Aren't you jealous of the lovely girls with whom your husband comes in contact, of necessity, in his work?"

Her answer has always been prompt and fearless: "Every woman's husband is attractive to some other woman. I have tried to do the only thing any woman can do: I have kept busy, striven to remain interesting, and clung to my small conceits. When doubt has troubled me, as it must every wife, I have thought, 'But why shouldn't he love me in preference to anyone else?"

The Hope marriage has been complicated by Bob's absence on long trips and by the odd hours his profession forces him to keep. When he is working in a picture, he must arise around six. Mrs. Hope usually prepares the fruit juice and coffee that he enjoys for breakfast, then she attends to the children.

When Bob isn't working on a picture he sleeps until noon, a luxury impossible for his wife because of her responsibilities. On such an afternoon he is likely to decide, if he has no broadcast for which to prepare, to drive to a nearby town for dinner, or to play golf. He has more energy than Niagara.

Convivial as Bob is, however, he has the usual husbandly aversion to dinner engagements made without his consent. "Dolores," Bob confided to his friend, Mr. Crosby, "has a genius for making friends. She meets and makes pals of more people than any other woman alive. And they all ask her to dinner. Once we get there—although I'm supposed to be the public figure in the family—she's the one who keeps everyone laughing. What a routine that gal has!"

And Mrs. Hope usually adds, with a reminiscent smile, "But a good laugh is probably the finest type of marriage insurance."

An insurance, naturally, which she never lacks. She and Bob were driving along one day when she asked him, as a woman will, "Do you really love me?"

Mr. Hope rolled his eyes skyward in an effort to think. "Yes," he decided.

"Why?" pursued his wife, voicing a question popularized, no doubt, by Eve.

He turned briefly to regard one of the handsomest women in Hollywood. "The only reason I can think of," he said firmly, "is that you are kind to my children."

THE END

The was is over but the duration goes on for millions of service men who crowd USO clubs and Camp Shows . . . for starving relief-dependent Europe and China . . . for merchant seamen berthing in United Seamen's Service centers. Don't forget our men and our allies in Victory. Give to the National War Fund through your local community fund.

MANY WIN LOVE WITH LONGER HAIR

TRY THIS SIMPLE TESTED METHOD FOR 7 DAYS

Try the RONOLA METHOD of Hair Care for 1 week, and see if the enjoyment of really attractive hair can be yours, lovely hair that so often means Love and Romance. In many cases, short hair may be due to splitting and breaking-off of the hair, and to dryness of the hair and scalp.

HAIR MAY GET LONGER

Often in many cases, Hair may get longer when hair and scalp are in a normal, healthy condition and dry, brittle, breaking-off ends can be retarded to give the hair a chance to grow. That's why you should try the RONOLA METHOD at once, because it helps to soften tough, brittle ends caused by hair dryness due to lack of natural oils. So if dry, tough, hard-to-manage hair is your trouble, lose no time in trying the RONOLA METHOD for just 7 days and see for yourself what a difference it makes.

ENJOY NEW HAIR STYLES

When your hair is softer, silkier and more easy to manage you can dress it in many of the new and latest hair styles that will improve your appearance and help you become more attractive to the opposite sex. Why lose out in Love, Romance and Popularity when it is so easy to enjoy new Hair Beauty.

MAKE THIS 7-DAY TEST

to be a natural for the role of the lumpy, imaginative and highly original character they had in mind. Bill Burton, one of Hollywood's high-powered agents, immediately took her under his wing, and now Hollywood bigwigs agree that she's destined for a unique career in pictures.

Because Barbara can supplement lines with neat little twirps and fancies of her own, she colors a script with more imagination than some of the top script writers. These accomplishments also include some fancy faces that are almost as horrifying as they are mirth-provoking. Yet, when it comes to being interviewed she has the poise of a veteran of long-standing. Nothing ruffles her. Nothing excites her. She has an answer for every question.

For instance, she says quite freely, "If Peggy Ann Garner is the Junior Miss of this outfit, and they tell me she is because Twentieth Century-Fox bought the play for her to star in, then I'm simply the Junior Mess. They won't let me have a decent hair-do. I'm either wound up in rag curlers like an old topsy doll or just coming indoors out of a high wind. And you know what a girl looks like in that condition!"

Maybe it's the current condition of things, maybe the war, or maybe it's simply that the younger generation is growing up much more quickly than we did. But today, a young lady at thirteen has problems and thoughts not exclusively devoted to Sinatra, Van Johnson or Robert Walker. There's time for swing and jitterbugging but there's also a time and place for serious considerations—such as one's future and career.

At least these are the candid opinions of young Barbara Whiting, Hollywood's newest career woman.

The "Junior Miss" company and crew call her "the kid you'd love to touch—with a cat o'nine tails."

But this is only because evidence of her prodigious talent is so realistic, even to hardened studio workers watching her do her stuff before the cameras. She makes them feel she's actually a brat.

Twentieth Century-Fox signed Miss Whiting to a long-term contract which totals up to some fifty thousands of dollars. She's being heralded far and wide as the first really sensational comedy find since Jane Withers bang-banged her way across the screen.

Barbara—and she's not the type you can call "Babs" either—is a solid youngster; a lumpy little gal who uses her head for other purposes than effecting new and fetching hair-styles. Fundamentally, she's really a swell kid, quick on the trigger when it comes to straight-from-the-shoulder talk, and A-plus when it comes to classroom. She comes by her talents honestly. Her pa was the late Dick Whiting, composer of some two hundred song hits. Her sister Margaret is a radio star in her own right. And Barbara herself has been yammering to get her fingers on a studio contract ever since she was gypped out of the song, "The Good Ship Lollypop," which her father wrote for her but which, because she was too and gave their O.K. for the shooting to start.

The point was, you see, that B. & W. considered Don Birnam a sick man, as Brackett told me "a man with an illness which wasn't accepted by society but condemned by it." Birnam was not a guy who enjoyed drinking. He drank because he had to because there was something in him which made liquor his only escape. He suffered, he fought the world and himself; he went through agony while the weekend was in progress. But he could not help himself. He was therefore a tragic character, completely acceptable to the censorial powers.

And Ray, who was to put Don on the screen, felt that about him, and more.

"Birnam was a defeated romanticist," he told me. "In the past, he had created his own world, his own conception of what life should be. He had done it idealistically. And then he'd had the props knocked out from under him when he discovered that living could never come up to his expectations.

"He was a guy who was born many years too late—after knighthood had flowered and died. And he couldn't adjust himself to the century in which he lived.

"Other men have had the same difficulty. Some have reacted one way, some another. Birnam's solution was to drink himself into a stupor."

When Ray was telling me his own ideas of the man he portrayed so magnificently on the screen, I had the screaming meemies. For, six months ago, when I was talking to him about what sort of a guy he was himself, he had used almost the same words.

"I am a romanticist," Ray had said then, "who has learned to reconcile myself to the fact that life is never as magnificent as I would want it."

Ray, in other words, believes himself inwardly the sort of man Cortez was: a colorful figure in shining armor who sailed towards a New World and conquered it. Or, he is Leonardo da Vinci, to whom all art, all science, all mankind was an adventure. Or he is Johann Strauss, writing waltzes to which the earth made love.

This is the type man Ray would like to have been, and probably would have been, in another era. This was the motivation for his entering the service of the English king, donning a flamboyant uniform, recapturing for a few years the splendor of chivalry. And, though there was in Ray (and still is to a certain extent) a wide, painful streak of shyness and inferiority, brought on by his fantastic height when he was a child and by his self-comparison with his three unbelievably beautiful sisters, it was this romanticism which led him into acting, into the playing of parts which, in many cases, were completely incredible compared to normal living.

He didn't enjoy making "The Lost Weekend." No one would have; no one with any sensitivity, that is. For Don was too tortured, too desperate for comfort. And Ray, because he knew in himself so much of the pain in Don's make-up—because he, too, is a romantic, because he, too, has fought against a sense of inferiority in the past—felt more deeply about Don than any other actor could have. The part got him down. He seemed to be that figure stumbling around the streets of New York. And, since much of the film was actually shot in the locations Jackson had written about, Ray really was at times reeling up Third Avenue and getting thrown out of night clubs in Greenwich Village thus he knew the embarrassment and shrinking of soul which Birnam knew those three terrible days.

The result was, as Ray said, "I got so irritable, so grim, that it was impossible to live with me."

There were some amusing incidents, of course, most of which arose out of the fact that Billy Wilder, who was directing the picture and who did a masterpiece of a job on it, insisted that realism could only be achieved by shooting the exterior scenes in New York itself. Therefore, the cameras and Ray were sent East, with the result that dozens of Manhattanites are going to be amazed to see themselves in the movies.

"They didn't know we were shooting, you see," Ray told me. "We hid the cameras in trucks, in packing cases, and in the second story windows of buildings. Then I went out and did my stuff."

"Were you recognized?" I asked.

"Sometimes. People would think perhaps it was I and then decide it couldn't be. Most of the time I looked too horrible for them to believe it."

It was because he looked like that, that some of the fun came. For friends began writing letters to Ray's wife, telling her they had seen him on the street, unshaven, his clothes a fright, seemingly in the last stages of drunkenness.

"I think you ought to talk to him," the letters would say, "before it is too late!"

And there was the episode in the Waldorf-Astoria elevator to contend with.

Ray has been staying at the Waldorf on his vacations for eleven years. He has had the same suite each time, and has naturally gotten to know the older employees like brothers. The night elevator man was his especial pal.

One morning at six, when Wilder was going to shoot some dawn scenes, Ray stepped into the guy's car with a friend. He was a sight. But frightening! The sequence they were about to make took place when Don had just escaped from the alcoholic ward of the city hospital, on the last day of his binge. His eyes had larger bags under them than Fred Allen's. He had half an inch of beard. His hair was standing on end. His whole face was drawn and sick-looking. And he was wearing a pair of pyjamas, a cotton lounging robe, and an overcoat. His feet were bare.

To make conversation going down to the street, Ray said to his late chum running the elevator, "Don't you think I look bad?"

"I wouldn't worry, Mr. Milland," the guy replied. "I've seen you look worse!"

The thing was complicated further by the fact that Wilder wouldn't let Ray eat while the picture was being made. He wanted him to "look thin," and would follow Ray into the commissary at Paramount or into a New York restaurant with full instructions on what the waitress could bring his star. And Ray, above everything, loves food, beautiful, out-of-the-ordinary food. The kind of food you can get in New York. It was murder.

As far as Ray was concerned, however, the low point came when he attended his initial First Night in New York—"Bloomer Girl," it was—with a week's growth of beard.

"Everyone who was anyone was sitting right around me," he told me, dismally. "It was awful."

But now "The Lost Weekend" is finished. It will be released soon. And in it you will see Milland do a job which you never expected he could do. He has always been a good actor. In this picture he ranks with the very best. He turns in a performance which is powerful, poignant, and practically perfect. It will increase his stature not only with the industry but with the public as a whole.

He wants to make more films like it. Not about alcoholics, necessarily, but films with depth and thought to them. He says he will still do comedy when a good one comes along, and he will still enjoy dashing about in costume pieces, but he also intends to go serious on occasion.

He should. Hollywood has wasted his talents up to now.

"The Lost Weekend" and Ray Milland will win the Academy Award. Don't say I didn't warn you!

You too Can Have a BABY!

by Abner I. Weisman

Only those who actually suffer from a barren marriage, can really understand the frustration and heartaches. (In certain extreme cases, the marriage itself may be wrecked by this cause.) In "YOU, TOO CAN HAVE A BABY" Dr. Abner I. Weisman gives a detailed explanation of the factors that may prevent normal reproductive functioning; he offers simple and sound advice which oftentimes is all that is needed; also describes the methods medical science uses today to remove many of the obstacles to successful conception and childbirth. Other than in cases of actual physical incapability, this book should prove helpful. Also explains the anatomy and physiology of reproduction, how to test pregnancy, what constitutes sterility, how to test sterility of male and female, plan for parenthood, etc. Often barrenness is due to minor conditions which can easily be cleared away. Having a baby is truly life's greatest thrill.

small to sing at the time, was given to Shirley Temple for a picture rendition.

"That song was really for me," Barbara says in a manner that plainly shows she's determined to hit the mark set by Shirley during her heyday.

When William Perlberg signed Barbara for "Junior Miss," the youngster seemed to take it with far more assurance and aplomb than is customary—particularly since this was the realization of thirteen incessant years of hoping and praying, and even sometimes worrying that she was getting too old to start on her career.

"Now," she decided with a definite finality, "I'll never go back to school. I can get all the education I'll need right on the studio lot. And four hours of schooling is enough for a growing girl. Furthermore," she adds, wrinkling her brow in deep thought, "it's no easy job mixing education with a career."

Quite obviously, the blue-eyed, dark-haired young miss is taking herself very seriously these days. It's as though she had suddenly grown up overnight and felt that she was carrying the weight of the world on her young shoulders.

"Careers," she goes on to say with that knowing conviction of the very young, "are the only things in life that matter. When my father was alive, I'd listen to the songs he used to write for Shirley, and I'd just sit there and grind my teeth with rage. I wanted him to write things for me. Now Peggy—she's my older sister—sings my father's songs on the radio and makes recordings. She's doing things. I hope I get another part right away when this one's finished. I want to keep on working. And I don't want to go back to school and be a 'square' all the rest of my days."

(A square, in Barbara's own language, is the tag the Whiting family applied to people who couldn't flip a comedy line with dexterity or use their hands with the sophisticated flair of a veteran actor.)

Barbara never bothered getting involved in school entertainments. "No, I was never a cloud nor a lion nor even an angel in a Christmas play. That's kid stuff. It never gets you the notice of a talent scout. And will you tell me when producers or directors ever get around to seeing any of them? Why, you're liable never to be discovered, if you go in for that kind of stuff! It simply ain't professional."

At the same time, young Miss Whiting has never, in the company of her mother or without, sat outside a casting director's dismal office in the hope that she might be the very one he was looking for. But there was a formula that was responsible for her breaking into pictures. "I told my mother when I was six," she relates wistfully, "that I wanted to get out and earn my own living. There was Shirley Temple with a limousine and a maid of her own. Well, that was enough to spur any girl on."

Keeping this envious barb fixed in her mind for the next seven long years, Barbara was patiently on the lookout for opportunity. She was one young lady who was determined to fling open the door once she heard the knock. And it was at a party next door to her own home that she fulfilled her resolve.

Director George Seaton knew nothing of this burning ambition of Barbara's to support herself in a manner she had never been accustomed to. While he and his wife were chaperoning a party, someone slapped him heartily on the back and called out, "How's about a dance, Jack?"

What could a gentleman do under the circumstances? He had to accept. But that dance turned out to be anything but the wild jitterbug orgy filled with the bodily contortions and mad face-making he expected it to be.

The next day Seaton confided his discovery to William Perlberg. Perlberg had known the Whitings for many years, but like the man who travels all over the world eventually to discover gold in his own back yard, he had looked far and wide for a young girl to play Fuffy in "Junior Miss," and here she was practically under his nose all the time!

When the contract was signed, Barbara turned proudly to her mother and said, "See, didn't I always tell you I believed in marketing my talent, not throwing it around?"

With her first appearance before the cameras, the young comedienne bids fair to become one of Hollywood's most colorful personalities. Each day since her first arrival at Twentieth Century-Fox, she surprised the members of the cast with some other new accomplishment.

Most recent of her abilities is her piano playing, which easily tops her already steep record of minx, moppet, quiz kid and natural comedienne. One day she sat down at a piano on the set and played Debussy, with a technique and interpretation worthy of an accomplished adult. Until that time, she was always clowning and kept her endeavors strictly along comedy lines.

"I like to write verse with laughs in it," she candidly admits, "because most people write poetic slush and sad things. Up to recently I've been playing boogie-woogie, stuff like this . . ." and she broke off to go into a bit of boogie worthy of Hazel Scott. "But just lately, I've taken to serious things in music. You know, you can't be funny all the time. It simply wears you down."

In her role of Fuffy, she takes it on the chin firmly and squarely, particularly where glamour is concerned. Clothes are designed to make her look squat and lumpy and the only ornaments for her practical costume is a plastic pin on her sweater—in the form of so unpalatable an animal as a skunk.

"I guess you could call that an indication of my character in this picture," she explains, with all the sincerity of a frank and outspoken youngster devoid of even a meager suggestion of affectation. "All the way through the picture, they deliberately make me look ugly. Guess the G.I.'s won't be asking for pin-ups of me! My hair is in rag curlers most of the time and my clothes are strictly sloppy joe, not Hattie Carnegie. But right in the middle of the last scene I wow 'em with a low-cut formal. Hot ziggety! Won't that open up their eyes. It's white and a pastel plaid taffeta—but real grown-up. Sophisticated as Park Avenue on Easter Sunday.

"You know, I'm sorta glad I get a chance to be pretty even for one little shot. I want the customers to know the curlers and ugly stuff was all acting." THE END

leaves your hair so lustrous, yet so easy to manage!

Only Drene Shampoo with Hair Conditioning action gives you this wonderful combination of beauty benefits! ✓ Extra lustre, up to 33% more sheen than with any kind of soap or soap shampoo! Because all soaps leave a film on hair which dulls lustre, robs your hair of glamour! Drene leaves no dulling film, brings out all the lovely gleam. ✓ Such manageable hair . . . easy to comb into smooth, shining neatness, right after shampooing . . . due to the fact that the new improved Drene has a wonderful hair conditioning action. ✓ Complete removal of unsightly dandruff, the very first time you use this wonderful improved shampoo. So insist on Drene with Hair Conditioning action, or ask your beauty shop to use it!

Glamorous Hair-dos

for gala occasions

Here's FRANCINE COUNIHAN, lovely fashion model, cover girl and Drene Girl. You see her dining and dancing at New York's smartest clubs. All eyes focus on her at glittering parties. Francine shows you three hair-dos to go with the exciting clothes she'll be wearing this Holiday season.

BUTTERFLY BOW TOPKNOT . . . for a dramatic entrance. Sleek contrast to the quaint puff sleeves. Francine achieves this intriguing style by forming her Drene-lovely hair into big twin upright puffs. Center front hair forms knot of bow and is held with small combs. Francine's sleek shiny hair reveals the wonderful combination of lustre and smoothness found in no shampoo except Drene with Hair Conditioning action.

THE "TAFFY TWIST" . . . delectable-looking, newer and smarter than braids! Here Francine's trick is to start the twist at right of crown. Small pearl-studded combs, placed upright, finish off sides. No shampoo except Drene with Hair Conditioning action could make Francine's hair look so lovely!

CLUSTER OF ROMANTIC CURLS, at nape of her neck, accents the lovely lines of Francine's low-backed evening dress. Her soft, lustrous hair is a shining example of what Drene Shampoo with Hair Conditioning action can do for you. No other shampoo can leave your hair so lustrous yet so easy to manage.

The Story They Said Was "DYNAMITE!" Can Love and Religion mix? What if YOUR love was endangered by prejudice? Marc and Erica give you THEIR answers in this great and daring new best-seller

NOW is the most opportune moment of all to begin your membership in the Book League of America! Because NOW New Members are entitled to a FREE COPY of any one of THREE widely acclaimed best-sellers (at left of page), and at the same time, ALSO A FREE COPY of any one of THREE recognized world masterpieces (at right of page). TWO BOOKS FREE — just for joining "America's Biggest Bargain Book Club"!

The Best of the New—AND of the Old

Each month ONE of the Book League's selections is a modern best-seller by a famous author like John Steinbeck, Somerset Maugham, Ernest Hemingway, Ben Ames Williams, or Ilka Chase—a book selling for $2.50 and up in the publisher's edition.

The OTHER book is a masterpiece of immortal literature. These volumes of the world's classics are uniformly bound in durable cloth. They grow into a handsome, lifetime matched library. The great authors in this series include Shakespeare, Poe, Oscar Wilde, etc. (Since they are great classics which you will always cherish in your lifetime library, you may prefer the beautiful DeLuxe Edition bound in simulated leather with silver stamping. Just take your choice.)

This is the ONLY club that builds for you a library containing the best of the new best-sellers AND the best of the older masterpieces! The TWO books sent you each month are valued at $3.50 to $4 in the publisher's edition. But you can get BOTH for only $1.39!

5-DAY TRIAL—No Obligation

Send the coupon without money. Simply write on the coupon your choice from EACH of the two groups of books shown above. Read the modern BEST-SELLER you have chosen AND read the CLASSIC you have chosen—for five days. If these two books do not convince you that this IS "America's Biggest Bargain Book Club," simply return them; pay nothing. But if these volumes DO demonstrate that subscribing to the Book League is the wisest move a reader can make today, then keep them as a gift; your subscription will begin with next month's double-selection. The greatest star of the screen!

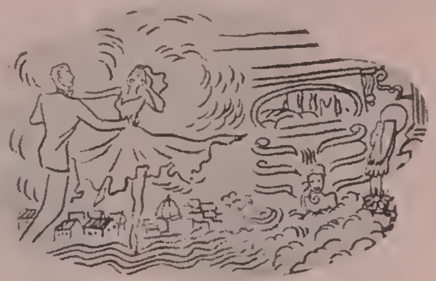
How are you feeling?

★ ★ ★ ★

Isn't it the truth that one movie gives you one kind of feeling, and another another?

★ ★ ★ ★

We're recommending a dancing-on-clouds, falling-in-love feeling—



The feeling you get from M-G-M's wonderful, spectacular new Technicolor musical, "Yolanda and the Thief".

★ ★ ★ ★

And the feeling you get from those experts in make-love-while-you-dance, Fred Astaire and Lucille Bremer.

★ ★ ★ ★

You met Fred before, but never more dashing or debonair.

★ ★ ★ ★

You met lovely Lucille in "St. Louis", clanging along in that well-known trolley car. And you'll see plenty more of her from now on.

★ ★ ★ ★

No matter what the dictionary says about "extravaganza", you'll find more of it in "Yolanda and the Thief".

★ ★ ★ ★

It's a musical fiesta as colorful as a cockatoo, with a story to match and music in the mood.

★ ★ ★ ★

You'll be humming like a humming bird after hearing "Will You Marry Me?", "I've An Angel", "This Is A Day For Love", "Yolanda", and "Coffee Time". Arthur Freed and Harry Warren really wrote their hearts into these.

★ ★ ★ ★

The good provider of fun is Frank Morgan—aided by Mildred Natwick (of Broadway fame), Mary Nash, and Leon Ames. Jacques Thery and Ludwig Bemelmans wrote the story and Irving Brecher fashioned it to the screen.

★ ★ ★ ★

Director Vincente Minnelli brings his M-G-Magic touch to "Yolanda". Arthur Freed felt so good about producing it that he helped write the songs.

How do we feel about it? Oops ...there we go! We've got that dancing-on-clouds, falling-in-love feeling again!

So Proudly We Hail

This is the second in a series of special features dedicated to Hollywood's war veterans and men still in service—keeping up with the stars who've been away, and reporting on the many who might have been stars by now if their careers hadn't been interrupted.

Hubba, hubba—Jimmy's back! Returned to the States on the Queen Elizabeth. Louis Hayward (lower left) is set for two Edward Small pictures; Bill Halden awaits an assignment from Col. or Para.

EDWARD ASHLEY, Australian born, blue-eyed six footer, became an American citizen the fast way: by enlisting in the U. S. Army Air Forces!

Before the War, Edward had been identified with a series of smallish parts—he was Mr. Wickham, for example, in "Pride and Prejudice." But discharged from service, he went directly into the lead of Republic's "Love, Honor, and Goodbye." And all the result of a lucky accident, you might say.

While on a routine flight in the Ferry Command, Edward crushed an ankle, hospitalizing him for months. It was special duty for him after that, and when "Winged Victory" came along, he was given the role of Captain Payne. Finally, when even stage work proved too much for the weakened ankle, he was honorably discharged. And just in time for the plum role at Republic, in the picture with Virginia Bruce. His first big break, and take it from us: he's made the most of it!

And remember BILL HOLDEN? Bill's pictures before the war—he's been away from moviemaking more than three years now—included things strictly memorable like "Golden Boy," "Our Town" and "I Wanted Wings." By the time he made "The Fleet's In," with Dorothy Lamour, he'd graduated to leads.

Bill heeded the call to arms in April of '42, and it wasn't long before the powers that be picked him as "officer material." So it was no longer Bill Holden, movie actor, but Lt. Holden, of the United States Air Corps.

When the point system was instituted, Bill was one of the first to qualify for discharge. He came home to Hollywood, and "home" means a little Valley cottage and glamorous movie actress Brenda Marshall. Right now Paramount and Columbia (they hold a joint contract) are competing to get Bill first, for his first post-service assignment.

Hollywood was especially glad to welcome home HARRY LEWIS; for when Harry speaks of his "little gray home in the West," he really means it! He's one of the very select few who was actually born in Hollywood.

Three years ago, Harry was right on the threshold of a bright movie career. You probably remember him as one of Errol Flynn's crew in "Desperate Journey," and as the dying soldier in "One Foot in Heaven." Fortunately, Harry's real-life soldier role ended less tragically, and now his future looks brighter than ever. In fact he already has a very "sweet" part in "Her Kind of Man" (Warner Bros.), which stars Faye Emerson and Zachary Scott. Harry plays the role of a baby-faced killer called "Candy."

From private to Colonel is a long haul, and JIMMIE STEWART (the first big star to enlist in the Army) made it strictly on his own! Jimmie is home from the wars now, and 'tis rumored that MGM has "High Barbaree" picked for his first picture—it's the story of a young flyer. Others say "Jimmie won't do a war picture"; he wants to find a good comedy. But be it comedy or drama or whatever, if it's Jimmie Stewart it'll be good!

Jane Wyman and Ann Sothern are two of the happiest lassies in town, these days; for it's no longer CAPT. RONALD REAGAN and LT. BOB STERLING—just Ronnie and Bob, on the Warner and Metro lots. Both returnees will probably have their first pictures set, any day now.

LT. WAYNE MORRIS has been honorably discharged and is back at Warner's. His first job? One of the more important roles in "Task Force."

MAJOR GENE RAYMOND is reading scripts submitted hopefully by RKO. Always one of the most entertaining of Hollywood raconteurs, he is now terrific. His yarns range from experiences in England to quaint occurrences on the California desert—all screamingly funny, as he tells them.

LT. COMMANDER DOUGLAS FAIRBANKS, who has the Distinguished Service Cross and the French Legion of Honor, is expected to be out of the Navy in January, and back in Hollywood.

You've been reading lately about MAJOR ALLEN MARTINI, but not in your favorite movie column. Major Martini, the pilot of the Flying Fortress in "Dry Martini," holds the world record for shooting down German planes—15 in 22 minutes! Back in civvies now, he's been signed by RKO to play the part of an officer in "The Bamboo Blonde," starring Frances Langford and Russell Wade.

Edward Ashley and the Moore twins, Jackie and Judy, who doubled for one another in "Love, Honor and Goodbye." (Lower left) Harry Lewis, in civvies. Coast Guardsman Chris Adams has the first postwar movie contract ever negotiated. (Selznick signed him 2 yrs. ago, for Vanguard.) Photographed with him here is Shirley Temple—Mrs. John Agar, Jr., as of her September marriage vows.

WATCH HER LIPS ANSWER THE CALL . . . WHEN

Charles Boyer whistles for Lauren Bacall!
They're burning with yearning in Warners' screen scorcher!
HE'S GOT THAT LOOK IN HIS EYES . . . AND "THE LOOK" IN HIS ARMS! WHEN SHE KISSES HIM, YOU'LL KNOW WHY IT'S STRICTLY CONFIDENTIAL!

Movieland's New Picture Guide

KITTY (Para.)—Stars Paulette Goddard in the title role, and she's terrific! Except that Darrell Ware and Karl Tunberg based their screen play on the Rosamond Marshall novel, you might suspect that Goddard had the part written just to her order.

The story is romantic, and in costumes appropriate to 18th Century England, when Tom Gainsborough was the fashion in celebrated painters. Ray Milland, as Sir Hugh Marcy, is the titled but penniless hero responsible for transforming Kitty, the guttersnipe, into Kitty, the grand lady. That as the Duchess of Malmunster she sometimes slips off into speaking like the lowborn Cockney she really is—well, that's to mention but one of many phases of the situation making for amusing incidents. For in addition to being good comedy, it's witty satire . . . and rating acting honors for Patric Knowles, Reginald Owen, Cecil Kallaway, Constance Collier, Sara Allgood and Eric Blore, as well as the principals. Mitchell Leisen directed.

SCARLET STREET (Universal)—When better psychological dramas are made, Fritz Lang will produce and direct them! And it's no coincidence, we're sure, that "Scarlet Street" is the best of its kind since "Woman in the Window." Fact is, the lineup is the same—Edward G. Robinson. Joan Bennett and Dan Duryea—with Rosalind Ivan added. (And Sam Hinds, too.)

DEADLINE AT DAWN (RKO)—is not a war story, although the central character is a sailor (Bill Williams) who finds himself in the midst of a murder mystery a few hours before termination of his leave . . . with suspicion directed right at him! But comes love, disguised as a taxi-dancer (Susan Hayward), and a new-found friend (Paul Lukas), and the murder finally is solved.

"Deadline" marks the first starring picture for white-hope Bill Williams, and it looks as if he's here to stay. Supporting cast: Joseph Calleia, Lola Lane, Jerome Cowan, Marvin Miller.

DOLLY SISTERS (20th Century-Fox), with Betty Grable and June Haver in the sister roles—and looking so nearly-identical that they might be twins! It's Johnny Payne's return to the screen (he plays Harry Fox, song-

The gleam in my hair

PUT A GLEAM IN HIS EYE!

How I envied the girls with bright, sparkling hair . . . until I discovered that my own hair could have the same gleaming loveliness when I used Nestle Colorinse.

"There's no need for drab-looking hair," my beauty shop girl confided. "For Nestle Colorinse rinses away dullness and gives your hair richer color, sheen and shining lustre. And Colorinse won't rub or brush off—though it's easily removed with shampooing. Remember," she added, "there's nothing that makes a girl more attractive than glamorous hair."

Jim proved she was right! For when we were married, he confessed that my gleaming hair was the first thing that caught his eye the day we met. Why not let Colorinse make your hair lovelier, too. Use it at home—tonight—after you shampoo . . . it's quick and easy to apply!

YOUR PROBLEM and MINE

by Jane Wyman

Dear Miss Wyman:

I am a young girl of twenty and no longer have the desire to live. I just can't adjust myself to the kind of life I will have to lead. Here's how it it: About four months ago, I was in an automobile accident. As a result, both of my legs were amputated. You can imagine how I feel. I won't be able to do any of the things I had hopes of doing.

Now there is nothing for me. If I only had something to do. I'd appreciate it very much if you would help me. Is there anything that a girl in my condition can do?

I know if I am kept busy, I may forget about how I feel. Please advise me, Miss Wyman, and thank you very much.

Jo Anne

Dear Jo Anne:

Your letter touched my heart deeply and gave me an overwhelming desire to help you. I think it can best be done by telling you the story of Clover Kerr, a young girl who lived in Walnut Park, a small city near Los Angeles.

She was involved in an automobile accident, and lost not only both her legs, but also her right arm. At first she felt as you do, but gradually she determined to make the best of her life. She learned to operate a typewriter with her left hand and began to write. I am told that through one of the newspapers here, and other citizens who had become interested in her, she obtained a radio program on which she read her own writings and gave inspirational talks. It was a very successful program. She continued her writing and finally published a book called "Banners Courageous."

In the meantime, she was fitted with artificial limbs, and became so proficient in their use that she could dance again, and was even able to ride horseback. And in June, 1938, a few years after the accident, she was married. Do you think any girl, even with her faculties unimpaired, could have a fuller or more successful life?

If you will write me again, I will give you Clover's present address in case you should wish to get in touch with her. Clover's philosophy included the idea that if you came to a stream where the bridge had been washed away, you built another bridge with materials on hand. Build yours a good strong bridge, Jo Anne, that will carry you safely over the dark waters of despair to the busy, useful life that is yours for the taking. Will you let me hear from you again?

Jane Wyman

Dear Miss Wyman:

I have always wanted to come to California for my health and employment. I would like to live in a nice home and be a child's nurse. I love little children and would treat them as they should be treated. I would appreciate it if you would give me information about getting such a position, and would be very happy if there were some way in which I could come to California.

Cornelia

Dear Cornelia:

The best advice I can give you is DO NOT COME TO CALIFORNIA AT THE PRESENT TIME.

We are completely overcrowded here—living quarters cannot be found, and without local experience and references, it might be quite difficult for you to obtain the kind of position you desire.

Stay where you are until the war is over, and save all the money you can, so that if you still want to come out here thereafter, you will have sufficient funds to tide you over until you find employment.

Jane Wyman

Dear Jane:

I was engaged to a boy and we were going to get married; then he went into the service. When he had gone, I told everyone that we were married.

Now we have both changed our minds, and decided not to get married after all. Everyone thinks we are married. What do you think I should do?

Ruth

Dear Ruth:

That was a pretty silly thing to do, now that you think it over—wasn't it? And how right is the quotation, "Oh, what a tangled web we weave when first we practice to deceive!"

There is nothing for you to do but to explain this deception to your friends and take whatever blame that may come your way.

Jane Wyman

Pictures IN Production

AT RKO:

THE KID FROM BROOKLYN, in its third month of production, is the story of a nice little milquetoast guy who accidentally knocks out the champ, thus getting himself into a lovely mess. Danny Kaye, Virginia Mayo, Vera-Ellen, Steve Cochran, Walter Abel, Eve Arden, Lionel Stander, Clarence Kolb, and Charles Cane are having a wonderful time.

HEARTBEAT is notable for the presence of Jean Pierre Aumont in his first post-war picture. Ginger Rogers, Adolphe Menjou, Basil Rathbone, Melville Cooper, Mikhail Rasumny, Mona Maris and Eduardo Ciannelli guarantee a great evening of entertainment.

TARZAN AND THE LEOPARD MEN is your cinematic funny paper with Johnny Weismuller, Brenda Joyce, Johnny Sheffield, Acquanetta, Tommy Cook, Edgar Barrier, Iris Flores, Helen Gerald, Lillian Molieri, and Kay Solinas.

SOME MUST WATCH is one of RKO's super-duper pictures. This all takes place in 24 hours, and it rains during all but two of those hours. Dorothy McGuire is the pathetic mute, George Brent is the professor who believes that beauty can only be assured to the world by eliminating everything imperfect, and Ethel Barrymore is his mother, who does not agree with him. Kent Smith is getting his first break since being honorably discharged from the army, as the sympathetic doctor and hinted love interest. Elsa Lanchester and Rhys Williams also have excellent parts.

AT UNITED ARTISTS:

THE SIN OF HAROLD DIDDLEBOCK is Preston Sturges latest brain storm with Harold Lloyd, Raymond Walburn and Jimmy Conlin cast so far.

AT UNIVERSAL:

SCARLET STREET is the picture in which Edward G. Robinson commits his 151st screen murder, this time with an ice pick, the cold wretch! Recipient of his attention is Joan Bennett, and also involved are Dan Duryea, Jess Barker, Margaret Lindsay, Samuel S. Hinds, and Russell Hicks.

CANYON PASSAGE is the Technicolor western being shot on location at present. Roughing it are Dana Andres, Brian Donlevy, Susan Hayward, Patricia Roc, Andy Devine, Hoagy Carmichael, Rose Hobart, Ray Collins, Ward Bond, Fay Holden, and Dorothy Peterson.

BECAUSE OF HIM is Deanna Durbin's last picture before she becomes a mother. Charles Laughton, Franchot Tone, Helen Broderick, Donald Meek and Stanley Ridges are also cast.

THE DALTONS RIDE AGAIN is another Western with Alan Curtis, Kent Taylor, Lon Chaney, Martha O'Driscoll, Jess Barker (two-pictures-at-once Barker, they call him) Noah Beery, Jr., and Douglass Dumbrille.

MURDER MANSION won't take long to make; working are Kent Taylor, Virginia Grey, Robert Lowery, and Martin Kosleck.

AT METRO-GOLDWYN-MAYER:

ADVENTURE, the story about a merchant mariner who meets a librarian to discover that the bookworm is mightier than the wolf, is now in its fourth month of production with Clark Gable, Greer Garson, Joan Blondell, Thomas Mitchell, John Qualen, Larry Burke, and Esther Howard.

THE POSTMAN ALWAYS RINGS TWICE is now in its third month of production, having been delayed somewhat by Lana's minor illness. It is the dramatization of James M. Cain's hard-berled novel, and Lana herself has been quoted as saying she thinks the Hayes office dreamed through the script. Opposite Lana is John Garfield, and others are Cecil Kellaway, Leon Ames, Hume Cronyn, and Jeff York.

TWO SISTERS FROM BOSTON is the tuneful little ditty starring Kathryn Grayson, June Allyson, Jimmy Durante, Lauritz Melchior, and Peter Lawford.

THE HOODLUM SAINT is about to be finished; it is one of those unpretentious thrillers, never given a chance for Academy recognition, but royally deserving attention. Bill Powell gives a ringing performance in a somewhat different part, Esther Williams, Angela Lansbury, James Gleason, and Louis Jean Heydt are crazy about the picture.

BOY'S RANCH is in its second month of production with James Craig, Butch Jenkins, Skippy Homeier, Dorothy Patrick, Sharon McManus, Ray Collins, and Darryl Hickman.

BAD BASCOMB is in its second month of production with Wallace Beery, Margaret O'Brien, Marjorie Main, Frances Rafferty, Marshall Thompson, J. Carrol Naish, Connie Gilchrist, Warner Anderson.

UP GOES MAISIE is a continuation of the adventures of Ann Sothern, whose svelte new figure is the envy of Hollywood. George Murphy and Hillary Brooke are also present.

HOLIDAY IN MEXICO is the lavish Technicolor musical in which at long, long last we again have the delight of hearing Ilona Massey sing. Put down HOLIDAY IN MEXICO in your must see file. Walter Pidgeon, Jane Powell, Jose Iturbi, Xavier Cugat, Roddy McDowall and Helen Stanley complete the superb cast.

THE GREEN YEARS is the pictorial version of Cronin's powerful book in which Charles Coburn, Tom Drake, Selena Royle, and Hume Cronyn are cast.

NO LEAVE, NO LOVE is a delicious comedy starring Van Johnson, Pat Kirkwood, Keenan Wynn, Marie Wilson (of "Blackouts" fame) and Edward Arnold.

AT 20TH CENTURY-FOX:

SMOKY in Technicolor is in its second month of production with Fred MacMurray, Anne Baxter, Burl Ives, Bruce Cabot, Esther Dale, Ray Roberts, and Jay Farrell MacDonald.

DOLL FACE is the story of a burlesque queen who attracts a college professor. Vivian Blaine, Dennis O'Keefe, Carmen Miranda, Perry Como, Michael Dunne (funny as a feather as the erudite professor who can lick his weight in double-talk), and Reed Hadley.

SENTIMENTAL JOURNEY is John Payne's new picture with Maureen O'Hara, William Bendix, Connie Marshall, Trudy Marshall, and talented Charles Russell.

CENTENNIAL SUMMER in Technicolor is a picture you won't want to miss. Jeanne Crain, Cornel Wilde, William Blythe, Constance Bennett, Linda Darnell, Walter Brennan, Dorothy Gish and Barbara Whiting (Fuffy in "Junior Miss") make up the cast.

PRECINCT 33 is a who-dun-it with Carole Landis (more beautiful than ever), William Gargan, Reed Hadley, John Ireland, Charles Russell, Mary Anderson, Richard Crane, Mabel Paige (who was Alan Ladd's mother in "Salty O'Rourke"), Stanley Prager, Henry Morgan, Roy Roberts and Don Heddoe.

AT COLUMBIA:

TARS AND SPARS is the Coast Guard show with Janet Blair, brilliant dancer Marc Platt, Alfred Drake (formerly of "Oklahoma"), Jeff Donnell, S 1/c Sidney Caesar.

SONG OF BROADWAY is the comedy drama for which Columbia borrowed blonde Marjorie Reynolds from Paramount. Also involved in the festivities are Fred Brady (far more handsome than necessary), Jinx Falkenburg, Allen Jenkins and Gene Lockhart.

HAIL THE CHIEF is in its second month of production with Chester Morris, Willard Parker, Marguerite Chapman, Janice Carter and Roscoe Karns.

GILDA is the delicious new Rita Hayworth picture with Glenn Ford, George Macready, Joseph Calleia, Ludwig Donath and Steve Geray.

Letters to the EDITOR

Dear Doris:

I have just received the October issue of Movieland. I am delighted and thrilled! This is the first cover and I am very, very proud of it. It makes me especially happy, and I am particularly grateful to you, because in a way it will explain to my parents what I have accomplished in the past five years.

It was only a few days ago that I heard from them—for the first time since the end of the war in Europe. They are well and happy and, naturally, most anxious to learn what I am doing. As soon as the regular mail service to Austria is opened, I am going to send them a copy of your magazine. I know they'll be pleased.

With all best wishes,
Helmut (Dantine)
Hollywood, Calif.

We love you, too! And how relieved you must be, having news from your parents. The first since V-E Day, you say . . . your last word, I remember, had been in Nov., 1944.

Dear Miss Cline:

In my opinion, Cornel Wilde is the greatest star today. His "A Song to Remember" will live forever. I have seen it already 129 times. He is very good, too, in "A Thousand and One Nights," which I've seen 30 times.

Yours very sincerely,
Jose Maria Maldonado
New York City

As we once heard an amazed little Margaret O'Brien comment, after meeting a small-boy admirer who told her he'd seen "Lost Angel" four times: "Whew! That's really a fan!"

Dear Doris Cline:

Would you be so kind as to tell Loretta Young that I, and millions of others think she is a good writer? Enjoyed her recent article in Movieland called "I Like These Men."

Sincerely yours,
Mrs. Isabel Greenwald
Davenport, Iowa

Will see that your message is duly delivered, and thanks. By the way, did you see the item about Loretta's new baby? It's a boy—her second!

Dear Editor:

This is to thank you for the article and pictures of Mary Pickford, in the August issue of Movieland. None of the new stars have ever been able to fill the place she had in our hearts, and it was so much fun to read about her and see new pictures of her in your magazine.

Yours very truly,
Charlotte McCallum
Salem, Oregon

How nice of you to say so! We've forwarded your letter to Mary, knowing she will think so, too.

SUB-SIXTEEN

"I don't think one family is big enough for two careers, so I'm going to give up acting to make a home for my husband when I get married. I'd like to have four or five children." And this from the mouth of Connie Marshall—seven-year-old.

The little girl who so passionately defended her pet chicken, Miss Easter, from becoming the "Sunday Dinner for a Soldier" defends her philosophy of life just as passionately. She can cite cases where this or that marriage didn't work out because of conflict over the husband's and wife's career. And although she realizes there are exceptions to every rule, she doesn't intend to tempt fate.

Right now she loves acting, memorizes her lines with a once over lightly, adores the fascinating and talented people she meets every day, thrives on the excitement at the 20th Century-Fox lot, but she's a far sighted young lady who knows what she wants out of life and is going to get it.

Alls Right with RICHARD!

Horatio Alger's heroes were pikers compared to Dick Conte, the "poor boy" who made good

By MARION COOPER

It all began when Dick Conte was working as a waiter at a summer resort in Nichols, Conn. The hotel where he worked put on a play once a week—which was okay by Dick, except that he had no idea he'd be asked to participate..

But one day (Dick remembers that he was washing silverware, at the time), in walked the boss with the "good news" that a member of the play cast was ill, and Dick was to be the replacement.

Yes, just like that. But to appreciate the situation for what it was, you must know that Dick Conte, waiter, was a shy laddie . . . why, he could hardly greet his own mother, without blushing!

"Nope, can't do it," he said, flatly refusing the offer. But wait a minute; it wasn't an offer, the boss pointed out. It was part of his job. "Either you play this part," was the ultimatum, "or you're fired."

So, the unwilling but drafted Thespian changed his tune to "I can't, but I'll try." He went to his first rehearsal shaking noticeably with nervousness. Fortunately the part given him was that of defendant unjustly accused of murder—requiring him to be on the verge of hysteria from curtain to curtain—so Dick was perfect for the role.

And two scouts from the Group Theatre of New York apparently thought so, too; for they offered him a scholarship to New York's Neighborhood Playhouse. But by this time Dick was tired of being pushed around. "No thank you," he said. "I can't afford to be an actor. I've got to earn a living."

And back he went to the quiet seclusion of his kitchen; back to polishing knives and forks again.

All the same, the experience had started him thinking. "I began then to wonder about plays," Dick tells now. "I wondered what they were like. There was a performance that evening—Clifford Odets' 'Waiting for Lefty.' When I was through with my work, I walked over to see it. The theatre was packed, by that time, and I stood in back. It was like nothing I'd ever experienced before. Chills ran up and down my back; I found myself crying. When it was over, I ran over to the men from the Group Theatre. 'Okay,' (Continued on page 78)

1. Dick and his wife (the former Ruth Strome), a fellow actress from his Group Theatre days. His own paintings hang in their home in Beverly Hills. 2. Richard's really Nicholas Conte from New Jersey, son of a barber. He got his start via a scholarship at New York's Neighborhood Playhouse. 3. Besides "A Walk in the Sun" Conte has a leading role in "The Spider," with Faye Marlowe (20th).

IF YOU expect Signe Hasso to be like other Swedish stars . . . well, she's not! Signe was a "big noise" in Sweden, in more ways than one. But there's nothing silent nor mysterious about her, only this: that it's a mystery to many people why her American career should have taken so long getting started!

She was being particularly "unsilent" one day, about four years ago. About to leave Sweden for Hollywood, she was busy denying a rumor.

Oh no, Hollywood has no monopoly on rumors; and they're not required to make sense in other places The fact that Signe Hasso was a well-know screen and radio actress in her native country— even, than Greta Garbo or Ingrid Bergman— difference. "What's the matter?" they asked, "Are there speed cops ahead?"

V-J DAY IN HOLLYWOOD:

Stories about V-J Day in Hollywood will be told unto the third and fourth generations, probably—but some of them are really worth recording here. Frank Sinatra, for instance, hopped into his convertible (top down) and whipped onto Vine Street. Instantly, he was pounced upon by a battalion of service men. He was wearing a very expensive tie which he pulled off prompty and handed to the G.I. whooping it up beside him. In turn, he was given the overseas cap of one of the other men. Civilians in other cars began to hand over their ties. Finally, a civil officer had to divest Frank's car of about half of its passengers, because the fenders were pinioned to the tires, and he couldn't move the car.

No one noticed Darryl Zanuck weaving in and out of the crowds, listening, looking, sensing, discovering (for future reference)—exactly what was said, thought, sung, and enacted on this greatest Victory date in American history, the end of mankind's most horrible war. One of the reasons for the excellence of Mr. Zanuck's pictures is clearly his eagerness for accuracy, even if he has to get it himself.

Over at Paramount, on Stage 4, there has been a picture of Mussolini, Hitler, and Tojo since one of the early bond drives. When the whistles started to blow, Bing Crosby borrowed Joan Caulfield's lipstick, climbed a 40-foot ladder and crossed off Mr. Tojo.

A famous actor, who shall remain nameless, was leaving the hospital where he had been visiting the wife of a friend. He was about to take the elevator when several of the nurses called out, "Don't go now. In about five minutes, President Truman is going to make the peace announcement. You've GOT to hear that!" Replied the gentleman, "I really can't wait. You see, I have a date to have my haircut, and that's something that, in my business, can't wait."

Mrs. Dana Andrews had gone to the Union Station, deep in downtown Los Angeles, and had discovered, just ten minutes before frenzy broke loose, that she had a flat tire. She managed to call Dana and the automobile service club, then settled down to wait. Because of the excitement, the service club decided that it would be folly for a man to try to change a tire in the street, so a wrecking car was sent to hoist the rear of the Andrews car into the air, and pull it to a garage. In the front seat sat the blonde and embarrassed Mrs. Andrews at a precipi-

"TO EACH HIS OWN"

Olivia DeHavilland comes back to the screen as a sort of modern Joan of Arc; she won a precedent-making law suit, you'll remember, establishing once and for all that seven years are seven years in any movie studio's language.

But in that her picture now ("The Well-Groomed Bride," for Paramount) is the first she's made after eighteen months of battling retirement, the natural question is: what has she been doing, in the meantime?

I called on Olivia the other day, figuring that the best way to find out about these things is to put the questions direct to the gal best able to answer them. Oh, but I forgot to tell you . . . she's moved again! And to the list of how Olivia DeHavilland is "known to," we should add: she's known to real estate agents as the girl who moves oftener than anyone else in Hollywood!

"It's not my fault," Olivia explained. "It's just that houses are constantly g sold out from under me. However," she added, "I sometimes wonder f it wouldn't be simpler to move into Bekins' Storage, and be done with it!

Take her last move, for instance. Olivia returned from the South Pacific, a very sick girl. She was still in bed when came a "your lease is up" notice, but she had heard that some friends were moving from their house to Bel Air. So, over the telephone, she made all the necessary arrangements for taking over their house, without having seen more than the living and dining rooms of the place. She was carried from the bed of the old house to a bed in the new one; and weeks later, when at last she went downstairs, she was simply appalled. Why, the menage was at least two times bigger than she needed! "I rattle around in it like mad," (Continued on page 75)

And you will see him next in a co-starring role with Susan Hayward and Paul Lukas in "Deadline At Dawn."

Bill read every line of Betty Smith's "A Tree Grows In Brooklyn," and relived his boyhood. He, too, used to sell junk for pennies. He, too, used to contrive ways of shortening his wait for day-old pastry at the neighborhood bakery. He, too, knew early bereavement: his father died when Bill was about six.

Movie Queen

In 1943 Lieutenant (jg) Nat Willis kissed his brunette stage actress-wife goodbye, and returned nineteen months later to be greeted by a blonde movie star! To say that confusion entered the good lieutenant's heart would be wildly under-stating the case.

True enough, Georgia King had written her guy out in the Pacific that she was working for Warner Bros. She'd even told him they'd changed her name to Andrea. But stars are built slowly, and Nat knew his wife had been unknown when he'd left her. Pictures were few and far between on his particular coral atoll, and he'd missed such cinematic successes as "The Very Thought of You," "God Is My Co-Pilot," "Roughly Speaking," and "Hollywood Canteen."

Andrea pulled her hat down self-consciously over her unfamiliar blonde locks and trotted her sea-legged spouse down to the corner film factory for a look-see at her latest, "Hotel Berlin," with Helmut Dantine.

Nat Willis emerged from the theatre some time later, and stood aside as a swarm of clamoring kids came down upon his wife and plied her with autograph books. Andrea shrugged hopelessly in Nat's direction.

"I suppose," he said wearily, "I'll get used to all this in time."

By actual count it was old stuff to him two weeks later, and he began mentally patting the fans on their heads. He was glad they recognized his winner.

Anyway, Andrea hadn't changed much—except outwardly—and if he asked her to ditch the peroxide bottle, he was pretty sure she'd do it (with the studio's permission, of course).

Andrea isn't the type of gal to let anything but peroxide go to her head. Becoming a star after three pictures is pretty much of a feat, especially when you're not the glamorous type and haven't a low slung look, an acrobatic slink, or a cameo phizz to (Continued on page 83)

Joan Crawford

By FLUR VAN DYK

Are Joan Crawford and "Mildred Pierce" the same people? That's been the question in Hollywood, ever since Warner Bros. first announced that she'd been cast for the James Cain role; it's more than ever a question now, for those who have seen the picture—and I daresay, it will be the question asked by many of Joan Crawford's fans, when the picture is released for general showing.

Already I've heard many discussions on "is she the same, or isn't she." And it has occurred to me that for a long time to come it will be the "what next" question that's raised—as a successor, say, to: "did Ayn Rand really know a Howard Roark, when she wrote "The Fountainhead?"!

But being a close friend of Joan's, and knowing her to be one of the most normal personalities of the screen, I've always felt that her understanding portrayals stemmed from an "awareness" of the characters she played. She has seemed to understand them so well. This "awareness" of people can be traced back to her childhood, I think; for it would take more than a successful picture career to exorcise the recollections of the drab existence from which she came. Joan always has been conscious of the poverty she experienced as a child, and perhaps it has made her hyper-sensitive; but it also has given her an understanding of human behavior.

Joan Crawford is one of the most normal people on the screen. In fact, she sometimes gives the impression of being a psychologist herself; however this isn't strictly the case, for her approach to people is based on the "feeling" level. She misses out on being a "natural" psychologist, too, because there is constant danger that her feelings may betray her, plus a tendency to be insecure of her instincts.

I've often had the feeling that Joan is driven by an unconquerable fear of failure. As if she were always climbing one hill, getting to the top and wondering if she could get to the top of the hill beyond. (Because of her intensity, she'll never be completely satisfied with her acting results; she's always wanting to improve, to reach new heights.)

EDITOR'S NOTE: As an experiment to determine whether a movie actress—in this case, Joan Crawford—really conforms to being what she is, we asked one of the Hollywood friends who knows Joan as well or better than anyone else to give us this story. Meanwhile, samples of her handwriting, and the letter which appears here, were submitted to an eminent psychologist and graphology expert, in New York, for an analysis prepared without any previous or actual acquaintance with Miss Crawford. The result given you here was in no sense a collaboration; Mrs. Van Dyk tells us about the star as she knows her, the graphologist tells you about her through his graphological findings—i.e., what's revealed by her handwriting, and the scientific interpretation thereof. You'll be amazed, we think, to note how nearly exactly the two reports are parallel; how in nearly every instance, the scientific evidence explains, qualifies or confirms the reporter's points. For the sake of clarity, we've inserted the excerpts from the analysis as italicized notations in the story.

When she signed her contract with Warner Bros., and began to read the scripts they submitted, she went at it with such a vengeance. Getting just the right role—particularly if she has a say in the selection—is an important thing, of course, to any actress. But to Joan it becomes an obsession!

Before hitting upon "Mildred Pierce," she'd considered dozens—I might say hundreds, without exaggerating more than "just slightly"—of other movie stories. And more often than not, she'd have me on the telephone for thirty minutes, an hour at a time, depending on how long it took to tell me the plot of the story and give a point-by-point characterization of the part which would be hers if the script were accepted. My comments, you must know, were more in the nature of confirmations—for that's about what it amounts to, giving Joan "advice" when she asks for it.

In that respect, you might say that she's quite "typically feminine." When it comes to selecting new wardrobe, for example. "New clothes," to Joan, is practically synonymous with "making a trip to Adrian's." (Fact is, it wouldn't surprise me if I'm known at Adrian's Beverly Hills salon as "the friend who sits and looks on, while Joan Crawford is here!")

But I'm rarely called upon for advice or opinions, or to make specific suggestions. Joan knows what she wants; what's more, better than anyone else, she knows what's best for her. It's rarely possible for her to whip up much enthusiasm for anything that's not either an Adrian suit, or a dinner dress. But they're "right for her," and she knows it! She has an instinctive "color sense," too, and an expertly developed feeling for "good lines" and design.

Not that it was always so, however. Joan herself will admit—and has often told interviewers—that she has had to overcome a lot of misguided notions about clothes, just as she has acquired good taste in many other ways, too. It's to her credit, though . . . that she's "learned the hard way." Through sheer dint of determination, and a careful observation and study, she transformed herself into a woman of admirable poise, good taste and becoming sophistication.

There is a great tendency to broaden her horizons. This is expressed not only in her propensity for adventure and travel, but is found to some degree in the spiritual realm. Actually everything about her personality is "broad"; she's broad-minded, has broad feelings.

Joan's "learning" developed step by step, as her career progressed; she found herself moving in a circle that was new and different to her. Her friends were artistic people; and meeting those people, Joan made important new additions to her fast-accumulating fund of Knowledge, personal and objective. She became more "worldly," more an "interesting person."

Fact is, Joan's capacity for self-improvement has more than once quite astounded people—particularly her rivals, who've been hard put to it to meet the challenge and deliver with anything like (Continued on page 101)

One Man Crowd

Several years ago Orson Welles, the One-Man Crowd, stood on a small-town lecture platform and gazed commiseratingly down at his audience. It was the most uncomfortable looking audience he had ever encountered in all his performance-packed life. A handful of stout souls who had plodded through the year's record downpour now sat limp, lonely, and leaking at every seam.

"Good evening—nevertheless," said Orson in his best basso profundo. The entrepreneur, it seemed, had bogged down somewhere, so the evening's attraction proceeded to introduce himself:

"I'm an actor on the stage, screen and radio. I write, and I'm a director. Also I'm a producer. I'm only sorry . . ." he paused and gave them a kindly smile, "that there are so many of me, and so few of you."

Although it might not have been noted at the time, the Wonder Boy's genius had just taken a turn to thumbnail description. Because, unless you are merely considering the Welles-es of some one given year, no such quick catalogue will suffice.

Unmentioned was Orson the artist, who paints well enough to have made a name for himself in that field, if he hadn't had so many other fields where the green stuff grew quicker. Or Welles the One-Party Cook's Tour, who has done enough first-hand inspecting of the world and its various picturesque peoples to lecture or write on the subject. Who, at the ripe old age of 11 took a solitary walk through Europe (looking back, he thinks "maybe it served Germany right—") and at various other times dropped in on both Asia and Africa. Who, just a few seasons ago cameraed his way through South America with such lasting effect that although he is probably unaware of the honor, U. S. flyers are still discovering native dugouts on inaccessible Brazilian lakes with "Orson Welles" lettered hugely and proudly across their sails by the owners.

A complete introduction would, of course, include Welles the magician, whose $65,000 tent-show for California stationed servicemen was not only a spectacular display of legerdemain, but also one of the most tangible tokens of appreciation tendered the fighters by any U. S. citizen (on his own (Continued on page 105)

WORDS OF MUSIC by jill warren

Hi, Customers! My musical notebook is really filled up this month; so if you're not too busy, you might like to tag along for a paragraph or two.

Sgt. Ray McKinley, who took over the leadership of Major Glenn Miller's Air Forces Band after Glenn's disappearance last year, has received his discharge from the Army. And just before going off Uncle Sam's payroll, Ray was given the Bronze Star for meritorious service. He is going to organize a new band, but he tells me he'll take his time about it because he wants to get the best possible musicians. When I asked Ray what style outfit he would have, he said, "No set style, I just want it to be a good band. And believe me, we're going to spend a good two months in rehearsal before we play our first date."

Speaking of new bands, it looks as if the scramble is on. Tommy Pederson, Gene Krupa's trombone star, is planning to go out on his own about the first of the year; he has already signed an agency contract. Johnny Bothwell, who played such fine alto sax with Boyd Raeburn, is another lad who has a managerial contract in his pocket. He joined Krupa for a while, but he will front his own crew in 1946. Then there's always Buddy Rich, who swears he'll have his own band one of these days—if and when he leaves (Continued on page 58)

Bare Facts

Don't don a formal frock unless you can face the facts! Complexion care must continue below the chin line if you want to make the stagline swoon

IT'S a funny thing about a formal party, you feel fragile, somehow—grown-up and glamorous. Now we're not suggesting that you go all out for slinky satin in Martha's movieland manner. But we are pointing out her beautifully cared for arms and shoulders which point up this pretty picture. And we do urge you to follow La Vickers' backless beauty campaign before you shed your sweater and saddle shoes for that dream-date dress.

Two or three times a week, at bedtime, she takes her regular rich-in-oils cleansing cream and strokes it generously from her wrists, up over her shoulders, on around the chest, and all the way up to the chin line. Tissues remove all cream and with it, little dry flakes and surface soil.

Next comes a tingling, toning treatment. Taking a large square of cotton, she dips it first in ice water, squeezes it to mere moistness, then dampens it again with iced skin freshener. The cotton square takes the place of a little paddle as she slaps the skin briskly (all over arms, chest and throat) to bring up circulation to the peak of pinkness.

Finally, when she feels completely, clean, glowing and refreshed, she strokes on hand lotion which quickly disappears, leaving an invisible and non-sticky, film to soften and whiten her skin as she sleeps. Reap results? Well, LOOK!

PERFECTIONIST DE-LUXE

European-born, now a U.S. citizen.

It isn't always a compliment when they call you a perfectionist in Hollywood. Quite often it's just a polite way of saying you're an ineffectual fuss-budget.

But when they call Director Fritz Lang a perfectionist, it's an A-No. 1 compliment—and they doff the chapeau as they say it. He's earned that title by the meticulous care he puts into every phase of every picture he makes, his constant insistence upon perfection in every last detail. The result is a list of films ("Woman in the Window," "Ministry of Fear," "Hangmen Also Die," etc.) which tell their stories with a kind of finesse and power that keep audiences spellbound—and clamoring for more of same.

Mr. Lang's tendency toward perfectionism is by no means confined to making motion pictures. It colors everything he does. When he became a citizen of the United States in 1939, it was not a matter of convenience and memorizing the right answers for the examination. He chose this country for his homeland after studying thoroughly into its history, and it would be difficult to find anyone more deeply appreciative of the privilege.

With a deep interest in the average citizen, and the common touch which enables him to get close to them, Mr. Lang has learned about America, not "in the parlors of the rich," but by getting around to meet the people—all the people. He likes to hang around neighborhood drugstores and hamburger stands to find out what folks are talking and thinking about. (Continued on page 70)

Dear Miss Wyman:

My problem is very important to me, as it concerns my happiness and, more important, my fiancé's happiness.

I have been going with a boy whom I have known for 7 years. We love each other very much. He enlisted in the Army and has been in the South Pacific 47 months. Recently he came home with a slight shrapnel wound and malaria fever.

Since he has been ill, he has taken to drinking and thinks about all the things that happened over there. I try my best to get his mind off of the terrible things that have happened, but it doesn't do any good.

We want to be married, but I am afraid our marriage won't last long as he is in such a nervous condition.

Please try to help me.

Dear Elizabeth:

It is easy to understand how, after 47 months in the South Pacific, being wounded and a victim of malaria fever, your fiancé would have contacted a case of combat fatigue and nerves.

It is going to take great love, tact, patience and understanding to carry him through his convalescence, and I am afraid, from the tone of your letter, that you do not feel quite equal to the job. Let me make a suggestion.

Close to Los Angeles, at one of the training camps, the Government has opened a bureau where returned servicemen and their wives or wives-to-be can go for advice. Doctors and psychologists go over their problems with them, and give the women training in how to handle the difficulties that confront them during this readjustment period.

Since you live in an area where there are many training camps, I am sure you will find such a bureau near you, and I am also sure that the advice you will get there will be of immeasurable help to you.

Yours truly,
JANE WYMAN

Dear Miss Wyman:

I am a service man and have been in the Air Corps for over three years. I have known my girl friend for one year, and am really in love with her. She claims she likes me more than anyone else she has ever known. However, she has been married and has a son three years old.

To me that doesn't matter, but her husband won't give her a divorce. They have been separated for 18 months. He has mistreated her and been quite cruel to her, but he won't give her her freedom.

He has quit his job and may be drafted into the service. Now she has written me that I best forget about her and just be good friends. I am sure she loves me as I do her, and her son.

Ernest

Dear Ernest:

If your girl friend really wants a divorce from her husband, and can prove that he has been cruel to her, I know of no reason, while he is a civilian, why he should have to consent to such a proceeding.

Have her consult an attorney who can advise her of her rights in this matter. And if there is a chance of her husband being inducted into the service, she should take this step immediately, for once a man is in the service, his wife cannot get a divorce without his consent.

Yours truly,
JANE WYMAN

WORDS OF MUSIC

Tommy Dorsey. So with the new outfits already organized—like Short Cherock, Ray Bauduc, Eddie Miller, Randy Brooks, etc.—it will be a race to see which band can make the grade first.

Claude Thornhill is back in the United States, but still suffering from that serious sinus condition he contracted in the South Pacific while touring with his Navy show. Claude is undergoing treatment at the Great Lakes Training Station Hospital; rumor has it that he will be discharged as soon as he is recovered.

Sergeant Bob Eberly spent his two-week furlough substituting for Perry Como on the Chesterfield Supper Club program. The first time he had done any commercial radio work since his induction. He still sings a great song and his fans certainly haven't forgotten him while he's been away from the musical scene. Bob told me he hopes to do radio and theatres when he gets out of the service, and that he definitely will not go back with Jimmy Dorsey. He whispered, too, that the stork will be paying a second visit to the Eberly household soon.

Well, now it's Twentieth Century-Fox who have ideas for starting their own recording company. No label name has been picked yet, and details are lacking, but with M.G.M. all set to go into the platter business, you can be sure Fox won't be very far behind. And looking at their contract list, with such musical names as Betty Grable, Alice Faye, Dick Haymes, Perry Como, Vivian Blaine, June Haver and Martha Stewart, they have some pretty good talent to start with. Of course something would have to be worked out with the stars who already have record contracts with other companies.

WHAT'S BRISK ON THE DISC: CAPITOL:

Leave it to Johnny Mercer to come up with the unexpected. This time it's Stephen Foster's "Camptown Races" and a new novelty, "Surprise Party," with the Pied Pipers and Paul Weston's orchestra. Johnny dashed off the "recitation" chorus of the "Party" side during a short intermission at the recording date—which isn't surprising, when you consider that he wrote his big hit, "Dream," in a snappy twenty minutes.

Stan Kenton follows up his popular "Tampico" with "Don't Let Me Dream," a pretty new ballad sung by Gene Howard, and "It's Been A Long, Long Time," with a June Christy vocal.

The new Jules Styne-Sammy Cahn tune, "I'm Glad I Waited For You," has been waxed by Peggy Lee, with "Waitin' For The Trains To Come In" on the reverse. Both tunes are especially suited to Peggy's blue-lullaby style. The guitar solos are by Dave Barbour.

Andy Russell's first album should certainly please his fans. There are eight sides: "Cielito Lindo," "Adios Muchachos," "Imagination," "Let's Fall In Love," "Just Friends," "La Borrachita," "I'll See You In My Dreams," and "Marie Elena." Andy is turning into quite a radio comedian on the Joan Davis show.

COLUMBIA:

Ginny Simms has picked two of the most popular tunes of the year for her latest—"Till The End Of Time" and "I'm Gonna Love That Guy."

Gene Autry is back in the recording saddle again, after his honorable discharge from the Army Air Corps. His string band provides the musical accompaniment for "Address Unknown" and "Don't Hang Around Me Anymore." And when Gene went back on the air (Sunday afternoons, C.B.S.) he signed a fifty-two week contract.

Frankie Carle and his Orchestra are in with "I'd Do It All Over Again" and "Last Night I Had That Dream Again," with a Paul Allen lyric.

"Along The Navajo Trail" and "A Tender Word Will Mend It All" have been given the Gene Krupa treatment, with good vocal work by Buddy Stewart, especially on the "Navajo" side, when he harmonizes with Charlie Ventura's saxophone. The Krupa band will be hopping off for their overseas tour any minute now.

The Modernaires with Paula Kelly have a new plater—"Jog Along" and the old favorite, "The Night Is Young And You're So Beautiful." Hal Dickinson, the No. 1 Modernaire, also takes composer credit on "Jog Along."

VICTOR:

Tommy Dorsey has a new album, and of all things, it's a group of Johann Strauss waltzes. A bit unusual for T. D., but if you like pretty stuff, this is it. Tommy made these sides when he had his strings, and for the recording date, he added a few extra ones for good measure. The selections include such famous compositions as "Blue Danube," "Tales From The Vienna Wood," "Voices of Spring," etc.

Then Senor Dorsey has a single record, "Aren't You Glad You're You?" from the forthcoming film "Bells Of St. Mary's," and "A Door Will Open." Stuart Foster and the "Welcome" from Jill, when Bob Eberly subbed for Perry Como on the Chesterfield Air Show.

Sentimentalists handle the singing.

Vaughn Monroe is represented with an album this month. It's called "On The Moon Beam,"—ten sides of all the great "Moon" song hits, including "Paper Moon," "Moonglow," "Moon Love," "Blue Moon," Vaughn's theme, "Racing With The Moon," and others. Vaughn and the Norton Sisters take care of all the "moon" lyrics.

Vaughn also has extra disc—"Talkin' To Myself About You," and Irving Berlin's "Just A Blue Serge Suit."

Sammy Kaye and the Swing and Swayers do "Chickery Chick," with Nancy Norman, Billy Williams and the Kaye Choir, and "I Lost My Job Again," with Chubby Silvers and Billy Williams.

Jimmie Saunders sings both sides of Charlie Spivak's new one—"Just a Little Fond Affection" and "You Are Too Beautiful." Charlie plays a wonderful trumpet chorus on the later.

DECCA:

Here's a Bing Crosby album entitled "Going My Way": six sides of all the musical numbers from the Academy Award picture, including "Swing On A Star," "Too-Ra-Loo-Ra-Loo-Ral," and "The Day After Forever."

The Groaner has also waxed two sides with the sensational Les Paul Trio. The tunes are "It's Been A Long, Long Time," and "Whose Dream Are You?"

Jimmie Lunceford's orchestra and the Delta Rhythm Boys have combined talents and recorded "The Honeydripper" and "Baby, Are You Kiddin'?"

Guy Lombardo's latest is in the rhumba mood—"No Can Do" and "Jose Gonzales," with Don Rodney and Rosemarie Lombardo sharing honors on both vocals.

That popular group, The Ink Spots, have done two numbers that are right up their alley: the oldie, "I'd Climb The Highest Mountain" (If I Knew I'd Find You) and "Thoughtless."

Ella Fitzgerald and Randy Brooks' new band get together for "A Kiss Goodnight" and "Benny's Coming Home Saturday."

Decca has two new albums of fairy tales. The first is Oscar Wilde's "The Selfish Giant," starring Fredric March, and the second is "The Littlest Angel," with Loretta Young.

Jimmy Dorsey's new release was recorded a long time back, but that shouldn't keep it from being a jukebox favorite. It's "He Didn't Ask Me," sung by Helen O'Connell and "If You Only Knew" with Bob Eberly in the croon department.

JAM NOTES:

Sgt. Johnny Desmond, who was such a sensation with the Glenn Miller band in Europe, has received offers from three major studios; looks as if he won't have to worry about a job when he becomes a civilian again . . . Dorothy Claire, has been signed by the American Broadcasting Company, and is set for a big buildup via the sustaining route . . . Dick Stabile and his wife, Gracie Barrie, will battle it out in court . . . Teddy Walters, former Jimmy Dorsey crooner, is making a try for an acting career in Hollywood . . . Irene Daye is no longer with the Charlie Spivak band; Charlie is hoping to find a good vocal group . . . Perry Como's next picture for Twentieth Century-Fox will be "City of Flowers," and he will have the lead opposite Linda Darnell. Perry recently bought a home in Long Island, New York, right near his favorite golf course. . . . Lt. Bob Crosby is back in the States after a long stay in the South Pacific; he'll be stationed in Los Angeles, attached to the Armed Forces Radio Service.

Martha Tilton landed the star singing spot on the Philco Hall of Fame, beating out several other girls who wanted the program. . . . Tommy Ryan, who has been playing theatres and nightclubs as a single, may have a commercial radio show soon. . . . David Street and Lois Andrews (George Jessel's ex-wife) have been a steady romantic couple for several months now, and may be Mr. and Mrs. before the end of the year. . . . Marion Hutton will go into the Paramount Theatre in New York for four weeks late in November; after that she'll probably head for Hollywood. There is still talk that Marion will do a picture with Betty.

The Murphy Sisters (one of the better singing trios) have been signed by Victor Records. . . . When Tony Martin becomes a civilian he will have his pick of several radio jobs. . . . Marilyn Maxwell and her husband, John Conte, have been arguing out loud. . . . The very sophisticated New York nightclub, The Copacabana, has gone hep in a big way; it has been booking such instrumental groups as the Phil Moore Four and the King Cole Trio. . . . Jo Stafford has had many compliments paid her for her smooth singing voice, but one of the nicest came from Benny Davis, the songwriter. After hearing one of her broadcasts, Benny told her, "Jo, you sang just like you had a contract with God." Incidentally, Jo has dropped about forty pounds, and looks terrific.

Lena Horne will star in a big all-Negro musical show on Broadway, tentatively titled "St. Louis Woman." The score is being written by Johnny Mercer and Harold Arlen. . . . Jerry Wald has been busy denying reports that he is a married man. He says it must be two other people. . . .

Well, that plants it for now, but I'll be seeing you next month. Meanwhile, if you've a musical question or two on your mind, drop me a line and I'll do my best to answer you. But be sure your query is musical, and also be sure to enclose a self-addressed stamped envelope. Just write Jill Warren, Movieland Magazine, 535 Fifth Ave., New York City, 17, New York.

DELIGHTFULLY DIFFERENT

The truth of it was that she had been approached by the Tidningen people and had refused their offer. And when she called to ask, "What's the idea?", they started their persuasive arguments all over again.

"But I can't write," she insisted. "Oh, don't worry about that," they said. "Just send us a postcard every once in awhile, and we'll write the articles under your name." To which Signe retorted, "Sez you!"—or words Swedishly equivalent. "If you're going to use my name, you're stuck with what I write—or I'll sue!"

And because it had occurred to her that the income from the Tidningen articles would be money for her mother to have, in the event something happened to prevent Signe from getting back to Sweden for the duration of the war . . . yes, she did finally decide to say "yes" to the writing assignment. (Her column appeared regularly in the Swedish paper, up until the time that her picture assignments began crowding her time schedule.)

Signe Hasso came to the United States the long way—through the Orient. On arriving in Hollywood to start her American movie career, she was thrilled and happy at the prospect, except for two things: her son, Henry, had been left behind in Sweden, and—she couldn't speak English! It's a frustrating situation, to say the least, to be a gal who can see the funny side of everything, and not be able to talk about it. She could tell it in Swedish, in German and in French; but there wasn't much she could do with her one phrase of English. (She had picked up "How do you do," in her travels—in Japan, of all places!)

Being a determined, taking-matters-into-her-own-hands sort of gal, however, Signe gave up her untutored struggling with the intricacies of the English language, after a few months. She found a teacher. But that's a story, in itself.

While getting massages from an English girl, June Cavendish, Signe decided she liked the sound of the girl's voice better than her massages. She guessed that June hadn't been a masseuse very long, and she guessed rightly; it turned out that she was a former actress. Signe suggested that she might like to teach her English. June agreed, but pointed out that she'd never had any experience in teaching.

"That didn't bother me," Signe tells now. As a matter of fact, she isn't bothered overmuch, by anything. "I simply told RKO that June had just arrived from France, where she'd been teaching English for five years. It ended with the studio's placing her under contract to teach me."

June Cavendish not only taught her student the English language, but the teacher-student combine became a lasting friendship. Today, June manages the Hasso household and is Signe's secretary—a sort of "girl Friday."

But the English course was unique. It consisted of reading the gossip columns aloud each morning, and making records of their conversations together. That appealed to Signe much more than laboring over a lot of dull rules for grammar; and besides being more fun, it worked.

It worked so well that in no time at all Signe was able to inquire, in excellent English, just what the studio was waiting for. They had kept her sitting around, doing nothing, for a whole year. By that time she couldn't get home, because the United States was at war, and she was finding it difficult to bring her son over for the same reason.

With Signe, when things get tough or dull-going, it's time for action. So she quit Hollywood and moved on to New York.

And then what? First, she applied for her American citizenship papers. And that accomplished, she started fighting through more reams of red tape, trying to bring her son to this country—the battle ending victoriously with Henry's arrival on the last boat over, completely surrounded by diplomats.

Next, she did a New York play, "Golden Wings." A famous critic wrote of her: "Signe Hasso is the most attractive foreign actress on Broadway." Signe was delighted and commented: "I'm so glad he didn't add that there aren't any other foreign actresses!"

Signe was delighted about other things in New York, too—not the least of which was suddenly finding herself a celebrity.

"I was living with a friend in her house on 51st street," she says, "when all at once dozens of boys and girls started dropping in to ask for autographs. 'Oh, I'm getting popular,' I thought. 'This is wonderful!' "

Signe is fascinated with America. She never knows what's going to happen next, except that it's certain to be exciting and interesting. She feels a little like Alice-in-Wonderland.

One of the highspots she remembers was in connection with a personal appearance made when "The Story of Dr. Wassell" was first released. She arrived very early one morning in Little Rock, Ark. Little Rock is Dr. Wassell's hometown, and the promotion managers for the picture were determined to do the thing up right. Signe was met by the Mayor and a police escort followed her car through the streets to her hotel.

"The sirens shrieked all the way," Signe said, "although it was so early that there wasn't a soul on the street. Not even a bicycle, much less a car. I could see shades going up in every house we passed, and startled faces peering through the windows. They probably thought the invasion had started. It was very American," says Signe with authority, "and very thrilling."

Things like that just don't happen in Sweden. But things have a way of happening to Signe, wherever she is.

For example, there was the time she flew from Stockholm to Copenhagen to be presented with an acting award. It was just an hour and a half flight, so Signe didn't take any extra clothes with her. By the time she arrived, though, her dress was too obviously creased and travel-tired. Knowing she had plenty of time before the ceremony, she sent it down to be pressed. What she didn't figure on, however, was the Press!

Ten minutes later, the desk clerk phoned up to ask: "Are you ready for the Press?" "No!" said Signe, who was prettily—but hardly suitably—arrayed in a silk slip. "Well," said the clerk, "they're on their way up, anyway!"

It was a moment for quick decision, and Signe was equal to the occasion. She slipped into her fur coat, camouflaged the low neckline with ochids, and draped herself glamorously on the couch, determined not to move lest the coat open. She looked like a star should look, and everyone was happy—except that every once in awhile one of the reporters would mop his brow and ask sympathetically if she weren't too hot in that heavy fur coat. "Oh no," said Signe heroically, drawing the coat more tightly around her, "It's quite cool in here."

And something else, in the embarrassing moments department: there was the time when she was in Copenhagen, Denmark, rehearsing for a Command Performance. The day before the show was to be presented, the leading lady fell ill. The director put Signe into the role. The thought of learning a whole part overnight terrified her, as well it might. And the added thought of having royalty and other important personages in the audience didn't help, either.

Signe learned the part, but by the time she stepped on the stage she was so frightened she couldn't say a word. Her vocal chords were hopelessly paralyzed; she went through her performance in a whisper.

Nothing as bad as that has ever happened to Signe in the United States The worst thing was having to wait two years to start her motion picture career. But that's of the past, for she's well on her way now, with "Assignment in Brittany," "Heaven Can Wait," "The Story of Dr Wassell" and "The Seventh Cross already behind her. The future is exciting, too; there's an independent picture deal with Arnold Pressburger which calls for one picture a year, to be released through United Artists. Her first picture for this group will be "Scandal In Paris"; and with her will be George Sanders, one of her "favorite people."

Signe's glad, she says now, that she did have to wait.

"At home," she explains, "my career practically fell in my lap. I didn't have to struggle, so I quite took things for granted. Coming here with a contract, I naturally expected it would be just as easy in Hollywood.

"But I'm glad it wasn't. I'm glad I had to start all over, like any new girl in the business. If I get anywhere now, I won't feel I've taken anything away from an American actress. I did it by myself, the hard way."

Fact is, Signe is pretty "happy about the whole thing." Her eleven-year-old son is with her now, making that happiness complete. They live in a Spanish-type house, with a view overlooking all of Los Angeles. The place is built in terraces, and is probably the only house in Hollywood (or at least one of the few) that can boast of both an elevator and an escalator! Here in the California Sunshine, Henry has every opportunity for enjoying his favorite sports of swimming and archery.

But every once in awhile, Henry will say out of a clear sky: "Mother, New York must be nice right now."

Signe, who knows very well where he gets his wanderlust, will agree; but she points out that her career is on the Coast now.

"At which Henry compromises," she laughs. "He says casually, 'Maybe we could go to the beach today.' "

Signe, a rolling stone if ever there was one, is always sympathetic with Henry's restlessness. As a matter of fact, she turned down Hollywood offers for five years because she didn't want to be tied to any one place. She managed to combine her career with her love for traveling by playing every little hamlet in Sweden, as well as making stage appearances in Norway, Finland, Germany and Austria.

She started her career as a student actress in the Royal Dramatic Theater of Sweden, at the age of twelve. When she was seventeen, she married Harry Hasso, a prominent architect and stage producer. They were divorced before she came to Hollywood.

Signe is amused when she hears anyone say it's hard to combine marriage with a career.

"I'd marry again tomorrow, if I met the right man," she says. "I've always been able to find time for a home and child, as well as my career."

She still likes to write. Not too long ago, Sweden's foremost national magazine—the equivalent to Life in this country—featured a Hasso article about Cecil B. DeMille. This is the sort of literary effort she likes best. But she's firm about one thing: "I only write about people I like," she declares.

When you come right down to it, maybe the strangest thing about Signe is that she does find time for so many things. Because time itself means nothing to her. She's always late, and you can chalk that down as another of the things that never bother her. She wears a wrist-watch, goodness knows why. She says herself that it doesn't matter whether or not it keeps time; she's bound to be late, anyway.

Her eating habits are different, too. She likes nearly all foods raw. Meat and eggs, as well as vegetables. It's an experience to watch her at lunch. If you ask her how she ever brought herself to taste her first bite of raw meat, she answers politely: "But I always did!"

And if you're waiting for further explanation, you can just go on waiting. I told you that Signe is a wonderful actress, a fascinating personality and an all-around wonderful girl. But remember—I also told you that "she's different."

THE END

On Saturday, September 15th, within a week after they met, Mona Freeman and Patrick Nerney were married in the Church of the Good Shepherd, in Beverly Hills. After a honeymoon at Lake Arrowhead, Mona went back to Paramount and Pat returned to his father's auto business.

WHAT-A-GUY WILLIAMS

him, was a German of the old school, he believed in ruling his family with a simonized iron fist. One of Bill's most vivid recollections has to do with his first-year failure in school. He delayed as long as possible before taking his report card home. Finally, as dusk closed in and he knew that he could postpone the evil moment not another instant, he slid into the house to be met by a parent who had guessed the worst and was ready with a cane. The other bitter memory: when he returned from the cemetery with his mother, after the funeral services for his aunt, and finding the street before their apartment a-hum with activity. One of the crowd of curious strangers broke the news: Bill's father had died. Neighbors had sent for a ambulance, and the ambulance doctor had shaken his head and asked for the nearest of kin.

After that, Bill's mother went to work as a waitress; she worked many different shifts, so that Bill had to spend much of his time with kindly neighbors. He slept in the bath tub of the family living above the flat in which he had lived with his parents. He ate with the generous family who lived just below the old flat.

The boys he knew, bored with having nothing to do after school, engaged in minor depredations such as swiping fruit, snatching items from pushcarts, and generally installing havoc as a local commodity. But Bill had discovered muscles; he began to spend every spare moment working out at the Y. He learned to swim, plain and fancy; he learned gymnastics—and he loved it.

When he wasn't at the Gym, he was going to school; even when he was attending Brooklyn Technical High School by day, he was also a student at Pratt Institute by night. And then, after what would have been his first year of college, his exhibition swimming catapulted him off the diving board and into a theatrical career. All of his plans to be a construction engineer dwindled down into a very satisfactory hobby—of which more later.

The theatrical career began in this way: an adagio team consisting of three men and a girl was being organized, and what was needed was one (only) blond man, height six feet one, weight 190. Bill Katt (legal name) satisfied these specifications, and was recruited and billed as Bill Williams.

In addition to supplying Bill with professional beginnings, this job gave him a reason for making the highway his friend. Bill and his mother had always been dear and important to each other; now that they were separated much of the time, they clung, with more desperation than ever, to the brief hours during which they could be together, could confide in one another, could plan a future including a home—a real home. When Bill and the troupe were playing Chicago, he occasionally hopped into his car after an evening performance, drove to New York, spent a few hours with his mother, then drove back to Chicago, arriving just in time to skin into tights and sprint onto the stage.

He was in New Orleans when he received a telephone call that, somehow, he had known would come. Usually, his mother had been cheerful about his leaving on a trip; she was full of questions and admonitions: "Remember to tell me everything—what the girls are wearing, how the shops look, what is different about the food. Take care of yourself, don't catch cold, write every day—as usual, which I know you will—and I'll write every day. And, darling . . . well, hurry back."

But, just before he left for New Orleans, she had been different. He had driven his car to the wrong side of the street, the easier to load his paraphernalia. Some instinct had impelled him to glance upward, and there she had been, leaning from the window, looking at him. Two slow tears slid down her cheeks and fell far below to the sidewalk. "Here—what goes on?" Bill had called.

"Nothing," she had laughed shakily. "Only New Orleans seems so much farther away than Chicago."

But when the call came through, he knew. He flew to New York and attended to the grief-filled details. The mortician said, "She looks beautiful, Bill. Won't you look at her?"

Bill shook his head. "I have her so clearly in my mind that I don't want to spoil it."

He took a few trinkets as a precious heritage: her chatelaine watch. the locket and chain Bill's father had worn. (Within the locket there was a picture of Bill's mother on one side, and a picture of a tow-headed, resolute small boy, called Willie, in the other minute frame.) He put her diamond earrings in a safe deposit box, and slipped her wedding ring, with difficulty, on the small finger of his left hand.

A few months later, he was driving from New York to St. Louis. On the Philadelphia turnpike he stopped at an all-night hamburger stand for a fast bite of midnight snack. He noticed that the clientele was not, shall we say, a refugee group from the symphony in white tie and tails, but blue-chinned gentry is not likely to disconcert a boy from Brooklyn. He finished his food, paid his check, and strolled out to his car. He had unlocked the door when he felt an object pushed decisively against his upper spine. "Don't give us any trouble, buddy," suggested a hair-trigger voice. "Just empty your pocket and pass over your wallet."

A gun does not give one guy superiority over another, of course—but it helps a lot, brother, it helps! Bill's philosophy on the subject caused him to hand over the wallet and to empty his pocket.

"And we'll take that ring on your little finger," announced the stick-up.

"Geez, fellas, that's my mother's wedding ring," Bill said reasonably. "It isn't worth a thing to you, because it's engraved around the inside. But I don't have my mother any more, and I just can't bear . . ."

"Aw, keep it," snapped the stickup. "It's probably brass."

In the summer of 1938, Bill and the troupe went to England, a circumstance that has made Bill one of the greatest of all boosters for British-

American friendship. His initial experience in the country was not, however, reassuring. On board ship he had taken sponge baths, because he didn't like the salt water involved in a tub or shower bath. "When I get ashore," he promised myself, "I'm going to hop into a hot tub and wallow for an hour."

When he filled the tub he noted its proportions and lifted a dubious eyebrow. When he tried to sink into the warm and laving depths of his anticipated bath, he found the tub so narrow that only a shoehorn could have slid him in or out. He solved the problem by soaping himself well. The next day he changed hotels.

Because of the British no-Sunday-theatrical rule, Bill was free from Saturday night after curtain fall, until performance time Monday. He had been a flash student of English history in High School, so now he put his memory of Britain's historical treasures to good use. He went to Brighton on the southern coast, and was enchanted; he managed to explore the northern section, as well as Scotland. He practically lived at Oxford University, learning something about each of its twenty-six colleges.

And he made friends with one of the professors, a clergyman in one of these colleges. Together they roamed through buildings with stone steps grooved by feet long dead; together they savored the quiet of ancient halls discussed the charm of tradition. One Sunday, the dean excused himself by saying, "I'll have to spend a few hours in the chapel . . . it is my turn to conduct services.

Bill held his breath. Although he is naturally religious, he didn't know Anglican forms; so he felt that he would be embarrassed during service, yet wouldn't want to hurt the dean by refusing to attend. Said the dean, "Suppose I meet you here afterward. I wouldn't want to make you uncomfortable by asking you to come along with me. I know that the creed of theatrical people, being quite as reverent as our own, still takes a somewhat different form. Shall I see you later, then?"

Bill nodded, exchanged a long look of understanding with his friend, and shook hands.

As Fall approached it became apparent that Europe was going to war. Bill and his troupe boarded one of the last boats to leave Liverpool. Between the fall of 1939 and the winter of 1942, they hopped about the country, (this country) fulfilling night club dates, and then they were booked into Earl Carroll's for Christmas night opening.

While they were rehearsing on Christmas Day, someone said to Bill, "This is certainly an odd Christmas. No tree, no turkey, no presents, no plum pudding. Boy, am I homesick! How about you, Bill?"

Bill ran a thoughtful hand through his tangled, curly hair, his brown eyes squinted into memory. "At sometime in my life, maybe when I was three or four, I seem to remember a Christmas tree and all the trimmings. Aside from that, I can't remember ever having had the sort of celebration that most people call 'a real old-fashioned Christmas.'"

But he was given—that night—the sort of gift that lasts forever: he made friends with the Weir Brothers, who have one of the most astounding of acrobatic acts done in comic style. The Weirs looked Bill over and said,

"Boy, you should be in pictures."

"Good for them," grinned Bill. "Only trouble is . . . if they want to photograph me, they'll have to do it while I'm making with the feet down at Fort MacArthur while clad in blue fatigue wardrobe!"

The army kept Bill long enough to decide that if he put his trick spine under and over an obstacle course a few times, he would be a permanent addition to the nearest government hospital. Not wishing to hamper the national economy with the need for providing three squares per diem for a lusty appetite like Bill's, they gave him a medical discharge—complete with little gold lapel button—and a shove toward Hollywood.

He arrived broke, the "o" being pronounced "owe." The Weir Brothers again came to the rescue, with the offer of a room. Bill made "Tokyo" at Metro, and "Murder In The Blue Room" at Universal, then was signed at RKO on a long term basis.

One day, while working with the drama coach, Bill noticed this very neat chick. "What's her name?" he asked the coach.

"Barbara Hale. One of my most intelligent students, she's going places."

Answered Bill, "With me as her escort, I hope."

After thirty minutes of clever maneuvering, Bill managed to place himself in the position of one student speaking casually to another. "What are you working on?" he wanted to know.

Barbara held out five pages of dialogue, all in dialect. "And I'm having my troubles. I have to have it letter perfect in three weeks, when the picture starts."

"You'll never make it," opined Bill, knowing that she could, but having plans in mind.

Responded Miss Hale coldly, "Don't be silly. Of course I can do it!"

"Tell you what—I'll make a bet with you. If you really polish off that scene, ready to be filmed, in three weeks—I'll take you to dinner. If you don't make a perfect take of it the first time, then you have to take me to dinner. And, confidentially, I think I have a free dinner coming."

That did it. Miss Hale won in the trill of a Scottish "r". And it has been Barbara and Bill ever since. Hold it. He calls her "Monkey Face," and she calls him "Willie," so it has been Monkey Face and Willie ever since. On her wrist she wears Bill's father's watch chain, bearing the locket enclosing Bill's boyhood picture and a photograph of his mother. On occasion, she also wears Mrs. Williams' chatelaine watch.

Bill still has no address, except the studio. Part of his wardrobe is with the Weir Brothers, another portion is with a second friend, and other odd outfits are scattered with additional friends. Bill "camps around," in other words.

As soon as he had amassed three hundred bucks, Bill bought a '34 convertible Pontiac and began to rebuild it. He practically replaced the engine, hopping it up somewhat more than considerable, and he painted it a lightning blue. This vehicle helps him to utilize every second of his all too infrequent spare hours. Bill works out for an hour a day, when he's between pictures; takes a drama lesson each day, takes a singing lesson each day, has a swim, and likes a few fast sets of tennis. He also likes to take Barbara dancing and he is teaching her to bowl.

Recently, when each received a new contract, they were discussing the future and came to a conclusion: an annuity was a beautiful thing to own. So each invested in the future, and now they're so broke that a bag of peanuts is a heady indulgence in Savoy extravagance.

Even so, it is a pleasure to report that the boy from Brooklyn—big, blonde, hard-working and sincere Bill Williams is going places, fast.

blonde wife)—frightfully so."

Sometimes the manifestations of Cornel's jealousy have been very funny. Take, for instance, that incident one Sunday several years ago when Cornel and Pat were falling in love. Cornel understood that he had a date with Pat to take her to the beach. He arrived early, wearing rugged beach togs and carrying a zippered beach bag in which were his trunks, a heavy bottle of suntan lotion, and beach clogs. The point of this description is that the beach bag was fairly heavy. Ah! The weapon in the case.

As Cornel stepped off the bus before Pat's hotel, imagine his incensed astonishment to see Pat, dimpling up at an escort as the pair sauntered down the street. Mr. Wilde is a man who lacks neither impetus nor ingenuity of action. Running a few steps, he hurled the beach bag with all possible force at the astounded gentleman's knees. If you have ever been walking with a wag who suddenly jabbed you in the back of a single knee, you know what happened. When the amazed chap got to his feet, a blazing-eyed Cornel said to Pat, "I thought I had a date with you this morning."

"You have," faltered Pat. "I was only going to breakfast . . ."

"It's okay," said her dissuaded breakfast escort. "It's quite okay. See you around sometime," and he showed the soles of his feet in a strategic withdrawal. Seems that he had arrived at the hotel desk, sent up word that Pat's date had arrived, then had persuaded her to dash to the corner drugstore for a quick breakfast before Cornel should arrive. His timing was bad—bad almost to the same extent as his misjudging of Cornel's attitude on the subject.

After that it was understood that Pat and Cornel were going steady; with no exceptions made of breakfast dates! This steadfast arrangement did not, however, eliminate certain difficulty. Pat is a statuesque, superbly architectured blonde who attracts masculine eyes as telephone stock attracts widows. Whenever she and Cornel strolled down one of New York's crowded streets, there was always some jackanapes who voiced his approval of Pat in one of those huba-huba-huba whistles. Cornel, instantly belligerent, would scowl and look around for someone to tamp into the nearest street vent.

This grew to be a joke between Cornel and Pat. If she saw a congregation of wolves loitering around a drugstore corner, she tactfully steered Cornel to the opposite side of the street, relying upon more local sights to attract the whistles, and upon distance and traffic to spare the whistler from Cornel's fists, in case the wolf was using telescopic sights for his visual prowling.

"In those days," grinned Cornel recently, talking it over with Pat, "you could have taken our zig-zag, wolf-avoiding trail, painted it red, and sold it to a Navajo blanket firm."

And then they were married and came to California. Cornel does not believe that marriage alleviates jealousy. "It is man's nature, intensified by marriage, to possess and protect his beloved. Before marriage, a full-blooded man works to attain the right to claim a girl as his own against every other man in the world; after marriage—if the marriage turns out happily—he stands ready to encompass her in a sort of emotional harem."

The only quarrel the Wildes have ever had was brought about, in a piquant way, by the presence of a strange man in Pat's car. During the bus strike, Pat was townbound one day; seeing a frantic studio worker trying to thumb his way to 20th, she stopped and gave him a lift.

That night she told Cornel about it, and repeated part of the conversation she had enjoyed with the man. Cornel's eyes flashed. "How many times do I have to tell you that picking up a civilian whom you don't know is dangerous," he demanded. "Read your daily paper if you don't believe me. Scarcely a week passes without some dreadful thing happening to a girl who picks up a stranger. Let men pick up those guys. You just travel on, minding your own business after this."

"Well, nothing happened, did it?" said Pat defiantly.

Eeeeek! One sentence lead to two. While Cornel was finishing his coffee, Pat disappeared into the bedroom. When Cornel strolled in to find out whether she was crying or not, he found her placidly repairing her makeup, BUT she had pulled all the covers off his bed and lumped them on the floor. They have an understanding that each partner makes his own bed. Obviously, Cornel was faced by a minor but irksome task before he could turn in.

"As punishment . . ." he said, lifting a bottle of Patou's Joie (that he had given Pat the week before) from the dresser. Unstoppering the precious scent, he scattered a few princely drops about the room.

Pat, eyes wide, mouth agape, started to say, "Don't you dare!" Then she decided to trump Mr. Wilde's ace. Lifting the bottle, purchased with Cornel's hard-earned cash (he was not, at that time, an upper income bracket star), she hurled it against the far wall. It shattered with a tinkle of glass, and with the rising fumes of flower concentrate, Mrs. Wilde flung out of the room. So did Mr. Wilde.

Cornel boiled around Beverly Hills for an hour or so before the whole scene began to seem very funny. He recalled incidents from several of Noel Coward's frenetic comedies and decided that he and Pat would make good models for Brooklyn's favorite playwright. He tried to replace the bottle of Joie. There was none to be had; so he obtained a substitute and went home.

Pat was arriving at the same time. They fell into each other's arms, each explaining and apologizing. Now they have an agreement: Pat is to pick up no civilians at any time of the day or night, most particularly the night; Pat is to tear up no more beds; Pat is to break no more bottles of perfume. And Cornel is to be reasonable, calm, and as non-jealous as possible.

For months, the bedroom reeked of the spilled perfume, and to this day whenever Cornel or Pat detect the unmistakable scent of Joie, worn by a friend or a woman passing on the street, they are inclined to break into quiet laughter.

Mrs. Wilde's professional name is Patricia Knight, and she'd like to be in pictures, too.

"Yet—no matter how philosophical and analytical I become—I'll still be jealous of Pat, because she's my wife and I love her," insists Cornel.

Gene Tierney's attitude is diametrically opposed to that of Cornel. "Jealousy is a disease," she says quietly. "It is an inhibiting force, and it can easily become a destructive element in any human relationship. If one will examine jealousy closely, one will find that it seeks to restrict the object of one's love; it seeks to enclose, to restrain, to oppose the freedom of the beloved. I may be quite wrong about this, but I believe that if perfect trust exists between husband and wife, there is no room for jealousy. Furthermore, jealousy is an ailment of the ego. The instant a girl grows jealous of a man, she should realize that she feels that someone else in her immediate circle is superior to herself, so could offer her sweetheart or husband a truer, more exciting, more desirable relationship."

An interesting example of the wisdom of a girl who refused to grow jealous, occurred in the experience of one of Gene's dearest friends. This girl was married to an extremely fascinating and handsome man who attracted both beautiful and brainy women wherever he went. Luckily, he was totally unaware of the attention given him by strangers, and when women he knew were excessively cordial, he would comment to his wife upon "how friendly and charming" such and such a woman was.

Sometimes it cost his wife a frightful effort not to say, "That fool girl is making a pass at you, my love." Sometimes envy and hostility welled up in her throat until she thought the emotions would choke her, but she refused to admit their presence. She would answer, "Yes, isn't she a dear! We must have her and her husband over for dinner next week. How would Thursday night suit you?"

But finally, after several years of this type of tutoring had built up the wife's courage, along came a woman with more determination than discretion. She actually fell for our heroine's husband and went after him with the deliberateness of a tigress.

The man, long accustomed to adulation, took the thing in stride. "Isn't she a beauty?" he asked his wife admiringly. That Spartan soul agreed. When the vampire invited the man, in a soft and implication-laden voice, to join her for cocktails on a certain day, the man agreed. "My wife and I would love to," he beamed. "She's quite as much an admirer of yours as I am." And he took his wife to the cocktail party, which proved to be for three persons, instead of for the benefit of the mob the husband seemed to have anticipated.

After that it was all the wife could do to refrain from interrupting any far-corner conversation in which she found her husband engaged with this woman. She clung to her faith in her own worth as a wife, and to her trust in her husband. One day he said unexpectedly, "I've come to the conclusion that I don't like Mrs. X. Let's not invite her Sunday afternoon."

His wife said in some surprise, "But she adds so much to a group. What has she done to antagonize you?"

Her husband smiled down at her. "Let's not talk about it," he said. And he added, "I guess that one reason I'm so crazy about you is that you're so innocent and unsuspecting. You always think the best of everyone."

This girl told Gene, "I had to fight tears, I can tell you, when I kissed him. It had been a long hard pull, but my refusal to admit my jealousy had saved my marriage, I'm sure."

Furthermore, Gene is convinced that, if there is to be jealousy in a marriage, the prerogative is almost entirely male. "Sometimes a man can get away with being lordly and possessive, but a girl never can. No man will stand to have his freedom of action abridged. He won't endure a baleful glance on the back of his neck just because he happens to enjoy the conversation of a girl he meets at a party. As for a girl causing her husband to be jealous . . ."

There is the case of another friend of Gene's—a beautiful, exciting, popular girl. She married a man who was, her equal in every respect, but for some reason, he distrusted his own value and became violently jealous. He questioned her about her every waking hour; he wanted to know to whom she had talked by telephone while he was away at the office; he wanted to know with whom she went shopping, what she bought, what was discussed between the girl and her friends. If this girl danced with another man at a party, her husband queried her endlessly during the first dance he had with her: was the other man a better dancer? What had they talked about? Hadn't he held the girl somewhat too tightly?

Now the girl was very much in love with her husband and couldn't bear to see him torture himself in this way, so she was always very explicit in her answers. She remembered all manner of details about what was happening downtown, or at the country club, or over local bridge tables.

And, because a human being who believes himself to be enclosed in a cage, will try to find some small means of occasional escape, this girl

Are you in the know?

The lathered lady is —

☐ Brushing up on beauty
☐ Banishing 5 o'clock shadow
☐ A little shaver

Borrow Dad's shaving brush, soap your face, and start brushing up on beauty. It's stimulating . . . and the thorough cleansing helps, if you've a tendency to blackheads. Now is the time to safeguard your complexion. And, to safeguard your daintiness. You see, now Kotex contains a deodorant, to help you stay daisy-fresh on certain days. Mind you, the deodorant can't shake out—because it is processed right into each Kotex pad, not merely dusted on! How carefree you'll feel with this new Kotex "extra"—and not one extra penny to pay!

Is this nifty giftie —

☐ A compact
☐ A bracelet
☐ Both

Here's a fetching new twist for the wrist—a bracelet-compact (complete with mirror). Dreamed up to give you a free hand, at sports or whenever a purse seems cumbersome. For free action on calendar days, remember to choose the napkin designed to give you chafeless comfort: Kotex. There's lasting softness in Kotex—unlike pads that bunch and rope. Kotex does more than just "feel" soft at first touch, for Kotex is made to stay soft while wearing. You'll have nary a care with Kotex.

It's a bright trick to go Christmas dating with —

☐ Mistletoe on your mind
☐ Baubles in your hair
☐ Your heart on your sleeve

Catch a beau with mistletoe? Or by letting him think you're a smitten kitten? Try a smarter way. Be original. Look charming. It's a bright trick to wear a wee cluster of Christmas tree ornaments in your hair. You can be charming on all occasions (even "those") when you're confident. Kotex keeps you so. With Kotex no revealing outlines can ruffle the smoothness of your frock, your poise. That's because Kotex has flat tapered ends that don't show. And the special safety center of Kotex gives plus protection—helps spare you embarrassing accidents.

began to cast her eyes about for mischief. She found it, which was a shameful thing—but she had spent so much time perfecting stories of Her Day, that she hurdled her emotional intrigue without catching so much as the tip of her toe. Although her husband never knew it, he had brought upon himself the very thing he most feared. If he had placed his wife on the honor system and rested secure in his trust of her, she would never have thought it would be a triumph to prove that he was NOT the perfect policeman.

And that is the viewpoint of Gene Tierney on jealousy as a disease.

Having harkened to the male viewpoint (and undoubtedly Cornel's opinion is almost universal among men), and the viewpoint of the sophisticated woman, as voiced by Gene Tierney, we now discover the opinion of the true idealist, Jeanne Crain.

Says Jeanne, "I've never been deeply, truly in love, so perhaps I don't really know what I'm talking about, but I have a conviction anyhow. I think that, if a man and a girl are genuinely in love, their love creates an island for them. An invisible island that is surrounded by a sea of unawareness. I know that, even when I've had nothing more than a terrific crush on a boy, no other boy in the world has really existed for me. I've had boys tell me that they felt the same thing. If that is true, then jealousy must be an emotion that arises when one person is in love with someone who is NOT in love with him. If that's the case, they aren't IN love. There is all the difference in the world between loving someone, and being IN love. I don't ever want to marry a boy who merely loves me, or whom I love. We must be equally IN love, or it isn't the best that the human heart can attain. The way I feel about it now, I never want anything but the best as far as love is concerned. Having the best, there simply can't be such a thing as jealousy. Snow never falls in Paradise."

There are three totally different, yet equally fascinating ideas.

What do you think about jealousy?

PERFECTIONIST DE LUXE

Sometimes he strolls into a Main Street bar for some beer and pretzels, and a chat with the boys on "skid row" before pushing on to the Main Street Gym to watch the fighters training. You might find him some day heckling the soap-box orators in the Plaza of downtown Los Angeles, or doping things out with the park bench strategists in Pershing Square.

This is how he's learned to master the American idiom. And for supplemental reading on the subject, he devours all the comic strips, which he considers a valuable source of information about all phases of American life.

Just now Mr. Lang is producing and directing "Scarlet Street" at Universal, which reunites Joan Bennett, Edward Robinson, and Dan Duryea, who worked with him so happily in "Woman in the Window." In fact, this group may have plans for sticking together. "Scarlet Street" happens to be the first undertaking of the newly formed Diana Productions, an independent producing unit which has Fritz Lang for president, and Joan Bennett and Walter Wanger as vice-presidents.

Before shooting started, Mr. Lang put in weeks of grueling work on the script. One of the hardest working men in Hollywood, he arrives at the studio early and leaves late. In fact, he's an unmerciful task-master—to himself, though not to others. But don't waste your pity on the man; he likes it that way.

While waiting for writers to complete a script, he does exhaustive research on all subjects involved in the story. Then when the script comes to him, he goes through it with a fine tooth comb, eliminating superfluous scenes, lines, words. He starts shooting with a script tightened almost to the breaking point. No wonder his pictures create that unbearable suspense. Every inch of film is so packed with meaning that you can't afford to miss a split second.

Seated at his desk in his large, paneled office, Mr. Lang adjusted his famous monocle, opened his script, and explained his reasons for the cuts he was making in certain scenes.

"The very worst thing possible," he said (he has just an intriguing trace of Viennese accent), "is for the audience to get ahead of the story. But that's what will happen if you leave in the script one unnecessary word or line. It only makes people impatient and restless to be told things they already know.

"The tempo of a picture must be very speedy to keep American audiences interested. They are very quick, very intelligent, and they're thoroughly informed about what's going on. They see newsreels, technical features, they read everything. It's impossible to fool them with any tricks, any inaccuracies. A picture must be authentic in every detail.

"In Europe, the technique and audience reactions are quite different. There, more time is spent in establishing moods. European audiences enjoy emphasis of that phase. It is not that American audiences don't care for moods—it is that they get the mood so quickly, and then they are eager to go on with the story, I think.

"One might describe the difference in technique by saying that here we have the rhythm of jazz, and in Europe the rhythm is that of the waltz. Both are good; it just depends on which you want."

Mr. Lang has intimate knowledge of both European and American audiences, for he was an ace director in Germany and France before ever coming to the United States.

It was while in a hospital, recovering from wounds sustained in World War I (in which he served with the Austrian army) that he began writing movie scenarios to relieve his boredom. The German producer, Erich Pommer, came across some of his work, signed him as a writer, and upon his recovery, took him to Berlin to direct. Lang made a long list of successful pictures there, including the classic "M" which introduced Peter Lorre on the screen.

Then came 1933, and Hitler. One year was all Lang could take of Nazism, and vice versa. He left for Paris, just one jump ahead of the Gestapo.

From Paris, it was natural that his next move should be to America, for Lang had had, since boyhood, a tremendous interest in the history of America's wild and woolly west. He's spent his happiest vacations here in exploring Arizona, New Mexico and Utah. Through his sincerity, he's won the friendship of the Navajos around Kayenta, Arizona, who have allowed him to film some of their sacred rites, and have even invited him to participate on occasion.

Co-workers at the studio claim that Fritz Lang is inclined to be restless and temperamental when working in his office, but always calm on the set. He laughs about this, but admits it is probably true.

"I must confess, I am happiest when on the set," he said. "Like a circus horse needs a circus, I need the set. It is there that I see come to life what I have dreamed about at my desk. But here, at my desk, is where the sweat and tears must be shed.

"I do try to be relaxed on the set, because I think it helps everybody. People work very hard on the sets, everybody is trying to give his best, and it is easier to do this if the atmosphere is kept free of tension.

"I believe that a good picture can only be made in very close collaboration with everybody who works on it. It's very necessary to have a spirit of give and take—what the Russians call 'collective.' I try to give everybody a chance to express himself freely, to do his best. Naturally, when discussions come up, there has to be somebody who has the final word. The main idea behind a production, which is the director's responsibility, that is what I call the rhythm.

"But I do not believe in telling an actor how to play a scene. I try to get him to express his own personality and ideas. If I had a scene requiring five actors, for instance, it would be no good for me to tell each actor how to do his part. What would be the result? I would just have five Mr. Langs running around. It would be very boring!"

So seriously does he take his responsibilities that he generally loses 18 to 20 pounds during the shooting of a picture. His trousers will slip at the waist, the cuffs get frayed and catch on his heels. Fastidious as he is about his dress, when he's completely

Mother of 3 becomes a PIN-UP BEAUTY!

How Mrs. Edrie Beal of Fredonia, Kansas, got a bathing-suit figure and how her Navy husband got the surprise of his life.

You would hardly have picked Edrie Beal for a pin-up girl when the snapshot below was taken. But what a difference (right) when she had completed the DuBarry Success Course!

"Many times before," says Mrs. Edrie Beal, "my Navy husband had written from the Southwest Pacific, asking for something special, and I had hurried it off to him. But this time it was a stopper. 'Send me your picture in a bathing suit,' the letter said. 'I want my own pin-up girl.'

"I looked in the mirror—at that thick waist and heavy abdomen. No! I simply couldn't bring myself to stand before a camera. But neither can you refuse a far-off husband any wish in the world. It was New Year's! Time for resolutions. If I didn't have a bathing-suit figure, I'd get one!

"That's why I took the DuBarry Success Course. Did it work? I lost 13 pounds right where I had to lose them. I took 6 inches off my abdomen, 4 off my waist and my hips. At the same time, the most wonderful things were happening to my skin and hair and to me. I look and feel like a person reborn. I'm out of that middle-aged slump—with a zest for the years ahead. Could one ask for better proof that it's never too late? Imagine me—a pin-up girl!"

HOW ABOUT YOU? Wouldn't you like to be slender again, wear more youthful styles, hear the compliments of friends? The DuBarry Success Course can help you. It brings you an analysis of your needs, then shows you how to adjust your weight to normal; remodel your figure; care for your skin; style your hair becomingly; use make-up for glamour. You follow at home the methods taught by Ann Delafield at the famous Richard Hudnut Salon, New York.

When this Course has meant so much to so many, why not use the coupon to find out, without obligation, what it can do for you.

absorbed with his work he doesn't even notice discrepancies like this.

He's a constant coffee drinker. In fact, being able to make good coffee is one of the requisites for being Fritz Lang's secretary. He keeps on hand a good supply of his favorite brand, and whether working in his office or on the set, there's coffee brewing at frequent intervals. He's generous with it, too; but since the war started, he's extracted a nickel or dime from each "fellow addict." The collection has gone into a teacup kept for the purpose, and from there to a war charity.

There's precious little time in Fritz Lang's life for recreation, but when a little spare time does fall into his hands, he spends it playing tennis, reading, or romping with his two Sealyhams, Mutt and Jeff.

"They are father and son, and they fight like hell!" he says with a smile. "But they're wonderful little companions. I haven't taught them any tricks. I hate to see dogs trained to do tricks. But they think up plenty of their own."

Being decidedly in the eligible bachelor class, Mr. Lang is greatly in demand by Hollywood hostesses, though he doesn't have time to accept many of the invitations he gets. He's a valuable addition to any party. Besides being a wonderful raconteur, he has that priceless gift of combining unfailing courtesy with informality, which automatically puts people at ease and brings out the best in them.

Hollywood has always been mystified as to how a man of Fritz Lang's great charm and sympatico nature has managed to avoid the matrimonial hook.

"I have been married," he admits, in a tone which puts that episode firmly in the realm of the long ago and far away, "but if you wonder what I think of marriage in Hollywood—well, I am a bachelor. Doesn't that answer your question?

"Mind you, I don't say that a happy marriage is impossible in Hollywood. There are exceptions. But as for myself, I do not think it would be fair. Show business is a very demanding profession. Take my days here at the studio. While shooting, I am on the set all day. Evenings I stay late here in my office, working on the script, preparing changes for the next day. I give all my time, all my energy to my work. So when I finally go home, I am exhausted, often too tired to speak.

"Now suppose I were married? What kind of a companion would I be for my wife? What kind of a life would she have? A woman wants and is entitled to a little fun and sociability. She wants to go out to parties and entertainments, and she should. These things I haven't the time nor energy for. That's why I remain married to my work.

"Still, I do not mean by all this to imply that the institution of marriage is any more shaky in Hollywood than elsewhere. It is possibly a little more difficult for people in show business to make a success of marriage, due to the fact that they live a very, very full life, are easily excited, and work under high tension. But I do not believe that the proportion of divorces is higher in Hollywood than elsewhere. Look at the thriving divorce business that Reno does. You don't think Reno is supported entirely by Hollywood, do you? Very few Hollywood people go to Reno for divorce.

"Oh, yes, I have a theory as to what causes the increasing divorce rate—but it couldn't be printed!" And with that tantalizing remark, Mr. Lang concluded his discourse on love and marriage, and returned to the love of his life: movies.

"To get anywhere in pictures now, an actress must have a great deal more than a pretty face and figure. It takes a great deal of intelligence, talent, and fortitude. Look at the actresses who are at the top—Bergman, Joan Fontaine, Jennifer Jones. Extremely intelligent, gifted women, all of them. And Bacall—make no mistake about it—there is an actress. It is much more than just a look or a slinky walk that she has. Whether she'll prove versatile or not, I don't know. I've seen her in only one picture, but she gave a definite, strong performance in that. Only a real actress can put over such a performance as she gave in 'To Have and Have Not.' The beautiful but dumb type of girl is practically passe now, off screen as well as on. Men are getting very bored with that type. And to succeed in pictures, a girl must have ability. You just can't fool audiences any more."

Mr. Lang has been quoted as believing that pictures should confine themselves strictly to entertainment and avoid propaganda. But he set the record straight about this in no uncertain terms.

"How can you make any picture without propaganda?" he exclaimed. "Every picture is propaganda for something. Take 'Woman in the Window'—the propaganda in that picture is: be on guard. Now I don't say a man must never go out for cocktails with a charming girl, but I say, 'Be always on guard.' That picture followed to a perfectly logical conclusion the events that can follow even one second of being off guard.

"Of course, propaganda, to be effective, should not preach. It must be injected into a picture in such a way that the audience is entertained while being propagandized. If you are going to propagandize against Nazism, for instance, it is no good to simply have someone stand up and say, 'Nazism is bad.' You must show why Nazism is bad, in what way it is bad, by showing its effect on the lives of people whom it touches.

"You have seen the German propaganda films? Well, don't you think we should ballyhoo our way of life?"

Mr. Lang believes most definitely that we should, and it is his constant ambition to show the rest of the world, through motion pictures, the advantages of living in a country dedicated to its people's life, liberty, and pursuit of happiness.

When asked whether he ever has any longing for the "good old days" or even occasional homesickness for Europe, he smiled serenely and said, "Not the slightest. People think it strange, I know. Sometimes they ask me, 'Would you like to go back to Europe when the war is over?' But I am not even the least bit interested in returning to Europe. I feel at home in America, and I am so happy here—so completely happy!"

TO EACH HIS OWN

she laughs. "But I like it."

Anyhow, there she is—in a home that's quite hidden from the street by trees and shrubs, with her books and her Shadrack (who's an ingratiating airdale). There she is, in this sun-filled house—with the same direct, sturdy handshake, the same quiet courtesy, the same delightful laugh. It's a much, much thinner Olivia DeHavilland, and she's very pale, but certain that all these months away from the screen, though at times difficult, were probably the most enriching of all her life.

The months of professional inactivity—while there was the suit to determine whether she still owed Warner Bros. twenty-six weeks after the expiration of her seven-year contract, to compensate for the time lost to them when she'd gone on voluntary suspension—for Olivia herself, they were far from inactive months. There were hospital, camp and bond tours, and a seven-weeks trip to the Aleutians. There was the Presidential campaign, with Olivia exercising an interest in politics developed since she became a citizen. (More about that, in a moment.) And then there was Olivia's trip to the South Pacific, which she says "is probably unique among overseas tours!"

It all began well enough. Olivia left October 10th of last year, flying from San Francisco and headed for New Caledonia, which was to be her "base of operations." She stopped off in Honolulu just long enough to eat at a service mess, and to pick up a Flight Nurse who was to be her companion on the trip. Then on to the Fiji Islands.

"The clothes situation was quite funny," Olivia says. "Of course all entertainers wear the U. S. O. uniform. This was done, I was told, before the war was over, so that if you were captured by the enemy they'd know you were military and not shoot you for a spy. A charming thought to set out with, by the way! But we all like to be feminine and in high heels when we meet the boys, so I changed my clothes in the plane before we landed."

And the clothes she changed to? When Olivia was preparing to leave for the Pacific, she suddenly realized that she'd have to have summer clothes, out there. But being October, there were none in the shops, and she insists she didn't have enough of her own. So she forthwith ransacked an elegant summer wardrobe which her sister, Joan Fontaine, had bought in New York the spring before.

"And there I was," grins Olivia. "Descending from the plane in the Fiji Islands, a vision of femme-elegant, in my sister Joan's white linen dress, my sister Joan's red and blue striped bag, my sister Joan's blue enamelled broach, my sister Joan's blue enamelled earrings . . . but, my own sandals!"

The next twenty-four hours were a maelstrom of activity. There was an appearance before 3000 men, en masse, an event which was especially terrifying to Olivia. "I can't sing or dance," she explains. "Always on any tour, I have just talked with the boys or danced with them in hospitals, messes or service huts." But there she was, confronted with 3000 men—and doing very well, indeed she did, despite her fears.

Next day, there was a trip across the island to a Fiji school, which Olivia will never forget. The children were all dressed up in her honor, and they stood and sang: "Good morning to you, good morning to you, good morning Missa DeH, good morning to you." (Missa DeH being as near as they could come to pronouncing Olivia's last name.) They were so adorable those youngsters—and Olivia was so touched—she "sat down right then and there, and bawled."

As the day progressed, traveling from mess to hospital to camp, Olivia began to feel chilled—a most unlikely sensation, considering the Fijian temperature. She was thoroughly disgusted with herself. But after a preliminary sense of panic, fearing that she might have acquired some tropical disease, she determined to forget her strange sensations.

All the same, when she awoke the next morning, certain she had a fever, she realized that something had better be done about it. Besides, she could hardly stagger out of bed.

She called the Flight Nurse, who called the Flight Surgeon, who carted her off to the hospital, post haste, where it was discovered she had virus pneumonia!

"My first reaction," Olivia says now, "was one of being distressed about having the trip interrupted. I have never felt like such an utter fool in my entire life. Here I went out to do my part in building up the boy's morale, and suddenly I was one on the sick list.

"But they were all simply wonderful. I was never lonely. The boys came to see me all the time. They brought me flowers and books. They played gin rummy with me. They did a magnificent job of building up my morale!"

One of the books the G. I.'s brought her was a volume of short stories, including a tale by a friend, Michael Arlen, famed author of "The Green Hat." Olivia had never read that particular story of Arlen's. She pounced on it with enthusiasm—if not much strength—and after she had read the book she wrote Michael Arlen a letter. "Dear Michael," she wrote, "thank you for coming to visit me for awhile in my hospital room in Fiji, and for staying to tell me a story." (The letter was sent to Arlen, back in the States.)

And then there was the eye-filling spectacle of the tropical vista outside her hospital window.

"There were colors you would never quite believe," Olivia says, her eyes shining brightly with the memory. "The brilliant green fields, the purple and red bougainvillea, the pink . . . well, I called it 'franji-panji'; the name is something like that. Colors that you see in the paintings of Gauguin, and are inclined to doubt until you've been to the islands and seen them for yourself. And there was the sugar cane, a strange almond green; and the Hindus who came from India many years ago to tend the cane, with their magnificent bodies and turbaned heads. The Fijians themselves. I simply adored. And the fantastic sight of the periodical burning of the sugar cane, like a fire necklace across the island in the night!"

When the fever was gone, and she was feeling better, Olivia did a little K. P. duty around the hospital. Six weeks passed, and they put her on a plane and flew her back to Hawaii. After resting there for a week, she was flown on to San Francisco, then back to Hollywood.

But apparently the excitement of the trip was too much. Her temperature went up again and she had to go back to bed for many more weeks.

Since that time, the road back to full strength and energy has been long and discouraging. "It's terribly boring," Olivia sighs. "But they tell me it's often this way, after pneumonia."

Still bordering on being a convalescent, Olivia has been able to do little or nothing which would classify as "social life." She says, "I've been out perhaps three times since I got back. And then I paid for it, with complete exhaustion." All the time she was making "The Well-Groomed Bride," she was a home-every-night-and-to-bed girl—Saturday nights not excepted. Fact is, she'd fall into bed Saturday evening, and stay there until the following Monday morning.

"My great social whirl of the week." Olivia laughs, "is my Sunday afternoon walk up the canyon with Shadrack." (The duet of barking which accompanies such walks, with Olivia ordering Shadrack to the side of the road and Shadrack remonstrating, has startled many a peaceful Sunday Bel Airer.)

Headed "plans for the future," Olivia wants to make at least four pictures in the coming year, to make up for lost time. In doing this, she will have to save all her energies for her work; no social life whatsoever. And romance? "Shadrack is the love of my life"—that's the only answer you'll get to that!

"I'm not really settled," Olivia told me, shaking her head slowly. "I don't know . . . it seems to me you don't really settle down in complete peacefulness, until you put down roots. I haven't. There's a strange thing, too about one's physical surroundings: even though I've lived a third of my life in Southern California, I never entirely feel that I belong here. I still feel that home is up North. Perhaps someday I'll feel differently. Perhaps it has something to do with the fact that my life has been sort of—well, 'split up'.

Peggy Ann Garner signs the celebrity scroll before having dinner at Ciro's.

"what a curious feeling it is to have been born in a country you don't remember, a citizen of a country you've never seen, and to have lived all your life in a third country. For so long, when I was growing up, I had a sort of schizophrenia. My allegiance was divided, and I felt I belonged nowhere. I love the U. S. A. But there was always the thought of England. England, where the roots of my family were. England, where relatives lived. I had a feeling that I couldn't make a decision about where I really belonged, until I had seen England. So, Mother and I went to England—in 1938.

"I went, expecting to have something wonderful happen to me . . . some psychic feeling, perhaps. I thought I would look at England and feel, 'This is home. This is where I belong. This is where my ancestors lived and died.'

"Well, I saw England. I saw London and the charming English countryside. It was small and neat and endlessly delightful. I found myself thinking of my Western United States—of space and bigness, of the Sierras and plains and the brown California hills. Suddenly, I knew where I belonged.

"The moment I returned to the United States I took out my first citizenship papers. Just seven days before Pearl Harbor, I became an American citizen. It was the most thrilling experience in all my life. I cast my first presidential vote last November, by absentee ballot, before I left for the Fiji Islands. I voted for Franklin Roosevelt."

It was time for me to leave. We stood up, and I was preparing to say goodbye. I happened to remark that at least in the months ahead, when she will be working so very hard, Olivia could feel certain permanence in her new house—the house she likes so well, even if it is too large.

Olivia looked a little sheepish, and grinned. "It's awful," she confessed, "but I just heard the other day that now this house is up for sale!"

We laughed. But I left with a serious feeling, too; a feeling that Olivia is one of the rare people who has looked at the world about her, and has learned. It was a good feeling to have.

I said. "I want to be an actor!'"

The next two years Conte spent with the Neighborhood Playhouse. It was a "new life" for the barber's son from Jersey City. "I met a different type of people," he says. "People interested in literature, the theatre, politics, art and music. I'd never had any idea those things would interest me; but I realized then that I'd wanted them all along, without knowing it. Before that, the closest I'd ever come to the arts was through the piano lessons my parents had insisted upon. I took the lessons, and practiced, out of a sense of duty to my family; they were poor, and I knew they had to sacrifice to manage that extra expense. But I never really appreciated what I was getting.

"So I'd come to the point of trying to make up for lost time. I sponged up knowledge, you might say; I gulped everything I heard, as though it were my last breath of air. It was all new to me—I just barely knew who Shakespeare was!"

The shyness disappeared, too, as he gained confidence in himself. But for just how shy he had been, here's something that happened in his sophomore year in high school:

"Our class was holding a dance," Dick tells, "but I had no intention of going. Then a very pretty girl whom I'd admired—from afar, needless to say—asked me if she could go to the dance with me."

"There was a dead pause of ten minutes, while I blushed and stammered. I couldn't bear to look at the girl, and I couldn't find any place else to look. Finally she assumed I meant yes, and there I was!"

The Richard Conte you saw in "Guadalcanal Diary," in "The Purple Heart," and who you'll be seeing in "A Walk in the Sun" and "The Spider" is a far cry from that bashful adolescent. Since turning actor, he's sure of himself; nothing's too big for him to tackle.

He came to Hollywood not quite three years ago, to test for the George Gershwin role in "Rhapsody in Blue." He had just received his medical discharge after nearly a year in the Army, and was in the throes of deciding "what next." By that time he had a reputation on Broadway, and there were play offers. But the Gershwin thing sounded good to him, so he elected to come to the Coast.

What Conte didn't know, of course, was that his enthusiastic agent had assured Producer Jesse L. Lasky that his client was a great pianist, as well as an actor. Dick was at dinner with the Laskys one night, and here's what happened:

"There were several people in the party," Dick says, "and everyone talked about music. Finally Mrs. Lasky said she couldn't wait till we got back to their house, so she could hear me play. About then, I began to catch on."

Back at the house, Dick stalled. He kept Mr. Lasky in his den, talking over pictures of former stars launched by the producer. "I kept as far from the piano as I could!" Dick laughs. "But it was no use. It was like a magnet, and seemed to be tapping me on the shoulder.

"Finally I was at the piano, with everyone waiting expectantly . . . and I had absolutely no idea what to do. I knew they were expecting some Gershwin melodies, but the regrettable truth was that I didn't even know the first two measures of 'Embraceable You.' What I would have done to my agent, had he been there at that moment!

"I stared at the keys, and they stared right back at me. I had to do something; so, acting as much like Gershwin as I could, I hit a chord in the bass section. It sounded good, and I repeated it. It still sounded good, so I did the same thing with my right hand. Finally I was doing a chord and three notes with my left hand, repeating the same three notes with my right hand, and then doing the same thing a half-tone down.

"It sounded very impressive, I must say . . . and I was getting a big kick out of watching everyone watch me. When I finished, I mumbled nonchalantly; 'Just a little something I wrote.'

"Everyone agreed that I'd make a great Gershwin, and they began looking me up and down to see if I walked like George, if my hair grew like his, etc. In the end, I didn't make the test, after all; I signed with Twentieth Century-Fox, instead."

But the incident is typical of the new Conte—as is the fact that, since then, he's been working on that "embarrassing moment" composition and now has a really good musical piece to show for his experience.

He likes to paint, too. And the house he shares with his wife in Beverly Hills is a veritable gallery of "masterpieces."

Living in a house is one of the things Dick likes best about working in Hollywood. In those early New York days, you see, "home" was a furnished room, eight floors up.

"There was an all-night restaurant across the street," Dick adds, "and every time they used the cash register it sounded a gong and woke me up. I could tell how much business the place did, without ever leaving my room!"

Dick's wife is the former Ruth Strome, a fellow actress from his Group theatre days. He sent for her after he signed his 20th contract, and they were married—in Hollywood. (Fact is, they honeymooned on the "Guadalcanal Diary" location, at Oceanside, Calif.)

Ruth is small, dark-eyed and vivacious; an established actress in her own right, but she has put aside all professional ideas other than those having to do with her husband's career. She is content being just Mrs. Richard Conte.

Dick likes to tell the story of how he got his biggest break on the stage. It was with the role of Mike, in "Jason." (Mike was a character patterned after William Saroyan, a little detail no one had bothered to explain.) When he turned up to read for the role, between performances in a play about to close, Conte gave his own interpretation. Sampson Raphaelson and George Abbott were not impressed. They told him they didn't think he was right for the part, and went on interviewing other actors.

They tested several dozens, and were still stuck for a Mike. It was then that Dick's agent called the discouraged casters and suggested that they go to see Dick in "Walk Into My Parlor," in which our Horatio Alger hero played a dashing gangster. The agent was sure if they saw Conte work, they'd change their minds.

"They agreed to have a look," Dick says. "So Raphaelson said to Abbott: 'Go down and see him.' And Abbott said to Raphaelson: 'You go down and see him.' With the result that it was Abbott's daughter, Judith, who got the assignment."

Judith went to see him, and came back raving enthusiastically. Next day Raphaelson actually did catch the show, and after the first act he went backstage: "The part is yours, Conte," he said.

But Conte didn't want it that way. He had a hunch that Raphaelson wasn't completely sold on him; so he told him to think it over and let him know when he was really sure. They left it like that.

That night at Sardi's, Dick ran into Raphaelson again and joined him at his table. By that time, he had a pretty good idea what was wanted in the role, and pulled the same stunt he used later when he was trying for the Gershwin part. He began talking and acting like Saroyan, and—it worked!

What's more, even Saroyan was pleased. "Jason" was Conte's last show before he went into the Army. One Sunday afternoon, while on furlough, he was walking along 53rd Street. Saroyan spotted him. "Come here, come here!" he called excitedly. "I've got a part for you . . . in 'Across the Board Tomorrow Morning.' The character is supposed to be me, and you're the only guy who can do me."

Dick said, "But look!" and pointed to his uniform.

Saroyan looked. "Oh, that's all right," he said pleasantly. "Can't you get away for a few weeks?"

But for all that the stage was his first love, and Dick naturally hopes he'll get back to Broadway occasionally to do a play, still he's well-satisfied with the movies. He likes the medium; likes the chance to do a variety of roles.

He's had to make one concession to Hollywood, however; his name. It's really Nicholas Conte. On the stage it was Nick Conte, but he agreed when his studio protested that it sounded "too foreign."

"I was afraid it would type me," he explains. "I could see myself playing Italian fruit dealers, or icemen, from here on in!"

Possible, we say, but not likely. For both his studio and the public are agreed that Dick Conte is one of the best bets of this or any other year. There's small chance of his being typed, but he'll have to go some to equal the variety of his real-life roles. From waiter to screen star, and making all stops enroute!

LOUISE ALLBRITTON

pace. "Invariably on these days, I wind up with a smashed fender or a torn bumper," she said, "but were I driving at my normal rate, they would have spelled serious accidents."

Sometimes her hunches come only a few moments before the events they involve. Sometimes they hold for situations several days or weeks in the offing. Rarely indeed do they concern her friends, and never her business associates; a great empathy such as exists between her father and herself, or a great fondness for a person, must be present before they will work for others.

"The only sad thing about it is that I get no surprises," she said. "Darn it, I always know when someone is coming, or when I'm going to get something nice, or when a present is going to arrive!"

She always knows too, she says, when something isn't going to happen. Right now Universal is in a tizzy because Louise calmly is going ahead with her plans to go to New York next month, despite the "fact" that the script and preparations for her next picture (after "That Night With You.") are in work.

"It's all right," Louise answers the studio's vehement protestations, "I'll be back by the time you are ready for me. The script and things won't be finished as soon as you think."

They probably won't, at that! Those Allbritton hunches have a disconcerting way of proving right. It's only when someone manages to talk her out of her hunch that trouble begins to pop. A small scar on her throat still bears mute testimony to one such occasion. She was about 12 at the time and in high school in Wichita Falls. Every week-end it was her great delight to accompany her father to the family ranch some miles out of town, but on this particular occasion her father was amazed to find her lounging around the house instead of clad in her boots and jeans, ready to go with him. In answer to his query of how come, Louise said simply that she didn't think she should go that time. One of her hunches told her.

"Nonsense!" Mr. Allbritton insisted. "Climb into your clothes and let's go!"

Reluctantly, Louise went. The next afternoon she was watching a polo pony being broken when the animal suddenly started raring and leaped in her direction. In trying to escape, and with the hot sun in her eyes, she ran full tilt into the barbed wire which fenced the enclosure, collecting a broken tooth, a torn lip, and the deep cut in her throat.

Recently she again disobeyed a hunch, and with evil results. Visiting friends near San Francisco, she dressed for an evening of dancing. When they were ready to leave, her hostess noted that Louise wore her pearl necklace and earrings but was not wearing a beautiful pearl bracelet which matched the set. The bracelet, four strands of pearls with a diamond clasp, had belonged to her dead mother and was one of Louise's most cherished possessions.

"I just don't think I ought to wear it tonight," Louise tried to explain. While dressing, something had told her not to wear it, even as she held it in her hand ready to fasten it about her wrist.

Louise has just been assigned to a supporting role in the Maria Montez picture, "Tangiers," at Universal.

"How silly!" her hostess scoffed. "And really, it looks so beautiful with that costume. Don't be a goose; put it on and forget about it."

Louise wore the bracelet—and lost it that night. No trace of it ever has been found.

Vivid among her recollected hunches was the telephone incident at college. Because she was only a precocious 14 when she entered the University of Oklahoma, Mrs. Allbritton accompanied Louise to the school and lived with her near the campus. At home in Wichita Falls the telephone had become the bete noir of the Allbritton household; even the two lines in the home were insufficient to handle all the incoming calls, and the persistent ringing of a phone got on the nerves of the entire family. Mrs. Allbritton therefore suggested to Louise that it would be a blessed relief to have no phone in their campus home, and Louise was pursuaded to agree.

One afternoon while walking home from classes Louise suddenly stopped at the telephone company and asked that a phone be installed immediately. When told it would require several days for her order to be filled, she pleaded almost desperately for quicker service. Something in the urgency of her face and voice must have impressed the telephone company, for the phone was installed and in working order by noon the next day.

Two hours later, while Louise was in school, Mrs. Allbritton suffered a paralytic stroke. By dint of great effort, however, she was able to pull her self to the telephone to call for help.

Later the same year Louise again had an uncanny hunch about her mother. Mrs. Allbritton had returned to Texas after suffering the stroke, and apparently had regained complete health. Every letter Louise had from home, in fact, stressed how well her mother was feeling. Two days before she was to leave for home for her Easter vacation, however, Louise awakened suddenly one night with the certain knowledge that something was amiss at home. So strong was the conviction that she persuaded the dean to permit her to leave for home one day ahead of the school schedule. While she was enroute, Mrs. Allbritton suffered a second stroke and was unconscious until the hour of Louise's arrival. She awakened briefly when Louise entered the room, talked lovingly with her for 15 minutes, and died.

"But for that hunch, I could not have reached home in time," Louise said. "Too, it had prepared me for mother's death, so the blow was not as shocking as it might have been."

Louise long has had an aversion to locks of any kind, and admittedly is often guilty of leaving her automobile parked on the street without locked protection of any kind. One night recently she returned from the studio and, as usual, left the car on the street with the keys dangling in the ignition. While eating her dinner a sudden compulsion made her leave the table, walk out to the car and, for the first time in months, thoroughly lock it up tight.

The next morning she heard considerable commotion all along the block in which her charming apartment is located, and upon investigating the hubbub, discovered that every car parked on that street, save hers, had been robbed during the night of its radio or some other valuable accessory!

Then there was the case of the mink coat. Lunching one day last winter at Club 21 in New York, she was persuaded against her will to check her mink coat. Keeping it with her at the table would crowd things, her friends said, and besides, it was safer to be checked anyway. When she went to reclaim it, the checkroom was thrown into an uproar upon the discovery that in some inconceivable manner the mink coats belonging to Louise and another patron had been given away, and only two cloth coats remained in their place. The other patron became frantic, but Louise took it calmly.

"Don't worry," she said casually. "I'll get it back."

Three days later she had another lunch date, this time at the Colony Club. As she and her escort were stepping into the cab, Louise impulsively suggested they go to Club 21 instead.

"But I have a reservation at the Colony, and we'll have to stand in line at 21," her escort protested.

"Never mind that," Louise said. "Let's go to 21 anyway. I have a feeling about the place today."

While waiting for a table as her escort gloomily had predicted would be necessary, Louise suddenly excused herself and walked over to the checkroom. There hung her mink coat, carefully checked by someone who, incidentally, never presented the check which had been issued for it. As Louise said, maybe that woman had a hunch it would be an unhealthy thing to do! Although the thief had attempted to eradicate identification of the coat by removing the name embroidered on the lining, the stitch marks still clearly spelled out

Louise Allbritton, and the management thankfully returned it to Louise.

Even her hunches about her career have an eery way of coming true, Louise has discovered, although none of them has been exactly spectacular. When she left for her USO overseas tour, for instance, the script of "San Diego, I Love You" was being prepared especially for her. Telephoning the studio when she arrived back in New York to learn of the progress of the picture, she was told by Dan Kelly, then head of casting, that the studio had switched plans and Susanna Foster was to star in the picture.

"Oh, no, you're wrong," she corrected him. "I'm going to do that picture."

"Don't be impertinent, young lady," Kelly snapped. "You're not running this studio! I'm telling you Susanna is going to play that part!"

"I don't mean to sound impertinent, Mr. Kelly, but I just know I'm going to do it," she insisted.

"San Diego, I Love You" starred Louise, if you remember.

As for romances and her love life, Louise has her hunches in that department too. She "knew" her recent romance that seemed headed for the altar really was headed for the rocks, she said, although everything seemed to be in its favor. What's more, she "knew" (even when things were at their rosiest) what would break up her romance and that's the way it worked out. Right now she is convinced it will be a good 4 or 5 years before she marries.

"I'd really like to marry before that, but just the same, I know it will be that long before The Man comes along," she says.

Once in a while her hunches have a way of proving right convenient, particularly in the date department. The other afternoon, for example, she was dishing with a couple of girl friends in her apartment. When it got to be around 5 o'clock she announced she had better start getting dressed for the evening.

"Going out tonight?" one of the girls asked.

"Yes," Louise answered. "For dinner and dancing."

"With whom?"

"I don't know," Louise said. "He hasn't called yet."

"Oh, fine!" said the friend. "Dream one up for me while you're at it!" Louise smiled but said nothing. By 7 p. m. she was showered, coiffured, and dressed in her "best black," for all the world as if she really had a date. At 7:05 the telephone rang. It was an old friend, just landed in town from overseas.

"Any chance you could do a little dining and dancing with me?" he asked. Louise said she would love it.

"Fine!" said the man. "How long will it take you to get ready?" Louise said she was ready, and the man said "Good lord, what a woman!"

No doubt about it, a girl's best friend is her little blue fairy. IF she's lucky enough to have one like the Allbritton version.

MOVIE QUEEN A LA KING

your name. Andrea's bid to fame was nothing but unadulterated talent, and she had plenty of that. One look at her in her first picture was proof of it, and the brothers Warner—never wont to let the lawn grow under their solid feet—tacked a star after her name and handed her a big sheaf of new scripts to read.

Though her cinematic change has been startling, her personality continues to be the same as when she first hit town: A lonely war wife whose husband had just shipped out somewhere in the Pacific. Enthusiasm has long been counted a strongpoint in all personalities, and it may be recorded here that it is the basis of Andrea's charm and appeal. Honesty is there, too; an amazingly frank and sincere approach to every situation and to every person she encounters. Honesty with herself comes first, and it makes for a very level-headed kind of gal. She's like an old shoe that wears extremely well.

Let it also be noted that Andrea was not discovered while sipping a double-coke at a drug store across the street from Hollywood High School. Nor did she win a local talent contest. She didn't send her picture to the Warner casting office, nor pull a faint in front of director Peter Godfrey's car. She went to school at the age of two and studied like a fiend for ten long years. Then, she attacked the stage bodily and drained every last ounce of pure theatre she could out of every stage encounter.

Born in Paris, France some twenty-six years ago, Georgette McKee (as she was known in those days) never met her father, a French pilot killed in the last days of World War I. With the small legacy he'd left her, Mrs. McKee trotted home to New York and began reading the Want Ad section of the local press. Andrea found herself enrolled in the Isadora Duncan School, to fulfill a promise her mother had made that famous dancer.

"That school," Andrea tells you, "was my only home for ten years, except for wonderful holidays with Mother. At the age of two, I became a resident student while Mother worked, and I loved everything about the place.

"I studied dancing, singing—all the arts—and an endless procession of scholastic courses in the Little Carnegie Studios on 56th Street, where the school was located.

"We spent summers at the Gardner-Doing Camp, where all sorts of famous artists dropped in to visit. They left a lasting impression on me, and I made up my mind then to become famous.

"Ruth Doing, the director of the school, was my guiding light, and everything I have achieved today is directly traceable to her intelligent and understanding handling of me. She is the most amazing woman I've ever met.

"She had a miraculous kind of faith that seemed to help and heal everyone she touched. I remember when one of my best friends fell from a ladder backstage and spent months in the hospital. Doctors said she'd never walk again. I didn't see her again for two years, until I ran into her one day at a theatre. Ruth Doing had been working with her every day; had helped her overcome her great mental hazard about never walking again, and the girl was on the road to success—as a dancer!"

Acting wasn't the only King forte. At twelve she was one of the ablest set builders in school. After a little probing Andrea will confess she had a major hand in creating the balcony scenery for "Romeo And Juliet," the production of which was to be attended by various producers and agents.

As Juliet, Andrea was pretty good—until the balcony collapsed and she landed plunk on Romeo's head about halfway through the romantic scene. This conniption so impressed C. P. Greneker (the Schuberts' right hand man) that he interviewed her at once for a walk-on in "Growing Pains." (This play later became the first of the Hardy Family series).

The guardian angel who's been hanging around Andrea for the past few days suddenly patted Mr. Greneker on the pate and he found himself just as suddenly dissatisfied with the second lead of his production. Andrea promptly replaced her.

Before two weeks were up, Andrea found herself signed for "Fly Away Home" with Thomas Mitchell. Then "Growing Pains" folded and Andrea went to Florida.

There she bleached her hair, got a crew cut and had a little fun. When she got home her step-father took one look at her and went into hysterics. Recovering, he took her hot little hand in his own and marched her down to the barber shop.

Pointing dramatically at the fright-wig, he ordered, "Remove that mess!"

Looking more like a peeled egg than a charming young girl-actress, Andrea braved the producer's office. This worthy repeated her father's hysterics, while Andea's knees and teeth began beating an off-beat tattoo to break the frigid silence. The upshot of the shaved-head episode was that she was cast as a tomboy in the play instead of her original role, and life began running in its normal channels again.

Then came "Ah, Wilderness." Nine months of it on Broadway, and then a road tour. When Andrea finally returned to the Great White Way, she had skinnied out into that age of complete horror—the growing girl. With more feet than her legs could handle, and hands that looked like they'd be more at home on a banana tree than on her wrists, she just wasn't the type for anything.

"If they'd written 'They're Either Too Young or Too Old' a few years earlier," Andrea laughs, "it would have made a perfect theme song for me. That's all I heard from producers for four long and lonely years."

"Then came a break: 'Boy Meets Girl'. The Broadway opening, and I was the lead's understudy. This girl was the frailest looking thing I'd ever seen in my life. My hopes were very high. It seemed so likely she'd break a leg while stepping off a curb, or develop double pneumonia. But in all the two years the show ran, she never once even had the sniffles! "And I never even got to poke my nose on stage."

VICKS VA-TRO-NOL

Then came "Life With Father." The Chicago company beckoned a long finger New York way, and Andrea packed her bag and trained West to step into the role created by Teresa Wright on Broadway.

The guardian angel got nudged out of the way by Cupid when a friend of Andrea's mother took her to dinner to meet another family friend, young attorney Nat Willis.

"I thought he was insufferably conceited," says Andrea. "So handsome, and knowing it so darned well. I had a miserable evening! It was a nice feeling to hear later that he'd been summoned to Maryland on business. I didn't see him for three weeks, and I put him out of my mind completely. Then I received a wire giving me a train-arrival time and the order, 'Meet me!' I was furious! I made up my mind to ignore his command performance.

"But the next day I met the train."

Followed pool sessions (swimming variety) at the Willis home in Hinsdale, a Chicago suburb. Then there were luncheon dates. And dinners a deux.

Two months later the insufferably conceited guy and the completely disinterested gal were engaged. Another month managed to slip by before they were married at Nat's home. It was October 6, 1940, and "Life With Father" was still playing to SRO houses. The Willis honeymoon consisted of two days at the Drake Hotel, with time out for a Saturday matinee with "Father."

A year later Andrea returned to New York and grabbed off the role of the Cockney maid in "Angel Street." The show went on the road. Alone, Nat looked up one day and saw Uncle Sam in belligerent mood pointing that long finger at him. "I want you!" said Sam on the sign, in no uncertain terms. Nat was so impressed he went right in and enlisted in the Coast Guard.

The Midshipmen's School at New London, Connecticut, wasn't too far from Boston, where Andrea was playing, and they spent delirious Sundays together. That is, if you can call four hours together in a crowded classroom "delirious."

"It was horrible," Andrea recalls. "We always looked forward to those week-ends. Then we'd just sit across from each other and stare. It was frightening to try to keep your emotions to yourself, and not be able to—with all those other couples in the same room. But it didn't last long. Nat got his commission, and was stationed in New York for four months. My play had closed, and we had the four months together.

"When Nat's orders to report to San Francisco came through, my agent suggested I go along to try pictures. I went, mainly to be with Nat. We thought we'd have a whole week together before he shipped.

"He checked in at the Naval Base after we registered at the hotel, and phoned to say he'd meet me in ten minutes for ten minutes! Maybe it was best. It didn't give us time to think about his going. We just met, said goodbye, and then he was gone."

"Somehow I got out of San Francisco that night. I came right to Hollywood and contacted my agent's West Coast representative. He took me to Warner Bros. the next day, and after the producer of 'The Very Thought Of You' likened me to Ida Lupino, who was scheduled to star in that picture, I was signed to play her sister.

"Then Ida's illness kept her out of the film. I thought I was a dead duck. But I was kept on—and that's the way it all started."

And there's no stopping it, this career of Andrea King's. For the present, she is awaiting release of her latest picture, "Shadow Of A Woman," with Helmut Dantine. For the future? Well, there's the magnificent role of the nurse in the film Version of Broadway's "The Hasty Heart"—and Dennis Morgan and Dane Clark to swap lines with.

No, Lieutenant Willis doesn't think she's changed much. And he finds the stardust in her eyes darned attractive.

THE END

YOU ASKED FOR IT!

In answer to those many requests for "more about Tom Drake"—watch for his story in the January issue of MOVIELAND.

tous slant, trying to look nonchalant as she steered the car. Service men went quietly mad with appreciation of this situation. They strolled along beside the car, calling wise cracks. They said, "Can we help you, Cutie?" and "What are you all up in the air about?" They said, "Can we bring you a drink, beautiful?" and they said, "How about climbing out and helping me celebrate, or how about letting me climb in with you?" She will never forget it. Neither will Mr. Andrews, who was sitting at home going crazy with worry, yet without enough gasoline to start on a tour of investigation.

On the day following the end of gasoline rationing, a Hollywood chap drove into a Sunset Boulevard station and ordered ten gallons of ethyl. When he proffered his stamps, the attendant said they were obsolete—didn't the man read the papers? Groaned the motorist, "And to think that I just paid $3.00 for them."

And, inescapably, in Hollywood, a Helen Hokinson sort of woman drove into a station, ordered five gallons of gas, then flew into a rage when the attendant said, "That will be one dollar, madame." Scorched the lady, "You can't get away with that with me. Don't you know that gasoline is now free?"

FRESH TALENT:

Perhaps the truest Hollywood cliché is: You can never tell what is going to happen next, in this crazy picture business. Latest addition to a formidable accumulation of testimony is this lovely fact: Standard Productions, one of the smaller film outfits, assembled a company to go to Las Vegas, Nevada, to make a picture to be titled "Helldorado." (If you've never been in Las Vegas during a Helldorado celebration, you've missed a pageant that turns the Pendleton Roundup pale, and makes the backers of Cheyenne Frontier Days furious.)

When Standard Productions was ready to shoot "Helldorado," they detected a shortage: they had no leading man. Quickly they asked the leader of the orchestra at Las Vegas' swank hotel, El Rancho Vegas, to pinch hit. He was a likely looking chap, someone added, "and might make a hit."

Name of this exciting discovery: Nick Stuart, who was the Van Johnson of his day, and former husband of luscious Sue Carol Ladd.

DENNIS MURPHY DEPARTMENT:

Here is the latest in the doings of George Murphy's fabulous six-year-old son: George recently brought home a new poodle named Lafayette, bringing the total number of Murphy pets to two, as Scooter was already in residence. George was reading his evening paper, the two pups were getting happily acquainted, and Dennis was playing with them, when George became aware of a psychic summons. He glanced at Dennis, and found that young gentleman semaphoring. Paying close attention, George decided that Dennis was trying to tell him that a man-to-man talk outside the room was desired.

He went out of the library, and closed the door. A few seconds later, Dennis—conspiracy personified—let himself into the corridor. In a stage whisper he said, "I didn't want to say anything in there, in front of the two dogs, Dad—but the truth is that I like Lafayette much better than Scooter. I'm going to give Scooter to Missy (his younger sister), but don't ever let him know, will you?"

GOOD BOOK:

Pat O'Brien is justly proud of his brood of three, but his parental complacence occasionally undergoes the shock treatment. Recently the clan O'Brien was lined up in two rows at church, the children in front, parents behind. Pat fondly watched daughter Mavourneen as she bowed her flaxen head in devout concentration over her prayerbook. "Such piety," thought Pat in tender satisfaction.

At which point, Miss Mavourneen slid the book beside her on the pew, as she rose for the service, and Pat—bug-eyed—read the title: "G-Men And Their Clues."

ALLEY CRITIC:

Bill Eythe owns a cat who must contain the reincarnated soul of some ancient Olin Downs. As long as Bill plays symphonies on his phonograph-recorder, the cat sits in a high window—which she has staked out for her own—and listens critically, or dozes. The instant he puts on boogie-woogie, the cat stalks up and down the length of the window sill, uttering cries like a long-haired soul in torment. Occasionally she pauses long enough to give Bill a baleful glance from infuriated eyes. "She's very autocratic about our musical selections," is the way Bill puts it.

DREAM REALIZED:

The telephone rang in the comfortable suburban home, and three girls made a dash for it. Irene, the youngest, arrived first. Her greeting was answered by a deep, well-modulated male voice. "May I speak to Miss Marguerite Baum?"

Irene, being curious and efficient in the same breath, said, "May I tell her who is calling, please."

"Lionel Barrymore."

Miss Irene, pop-eyed, turned from the telephone to her older sister. "He says he's Lionel Barrymore, and he sounds like Lionel Barrymore, but somebody must be kidding."

It was no joke, Marguerite Baum is a name for you to remember, because she will someday be giving a piano concert in your town. In planning for her first one-woman show in Los Angeles, she studied the lists of newly-published compositions, and in the catalogue chanced upon "Scherzo Grotesque, by Lionel Barrymore." She wrote to Mr. Barrymore, asking if she might be the first to perform the work in concert.

Mr. Barrymore answered by telephone. He gave her permission to play the Scherzo, and was delighted when she said that his phrasing and the use of certain chords indicated Russian influence. He said, yes, that he was deeply interested in Russian music and that it had probably colored some of his work.

Said Marguerite, "Each Christmas I look forward to your performance of Scrooge in Dickens' 'Christmas Carol.' Although I'm certain the characterization is not innate, it is eloquent of insight."

Mr. Barrymore laughed at the big words and important thought. "Oh, I'm probably like that," he said.

COLD CALCULATION:

Joan Loring, Warner's brilliant starlet introduced in "The Corn Is Green" and further displayed in "Three Strangers," is currently living in an old apartment building. A building so aged, in fact, that refrigeration is accomplished by a water-ice ice box. Joan repaired to the box for some chipped ice one afternoon, and removed a priceless antique ring while she wielded the ice pick. She forgot the ring on top of the ice box until the following afternoon.

But the ring was gone. She telephoned the ice company and told her story. The company representative was apologetically sad; seems the ice man had been a substitute, employed on a temporary basis that turned out to be a one-day affair because the man was so unsatisfactory.

Miss Loring's attitude toward ice men is frigid.

FAMILY AFFAIR:

Humphrey Bogart's butler is a magnificent ebony Jamaican with a Basil Rathbone accent; his manners are punctilious, his loyalty to Mr. Bogart is monumental.

Lauren Bacall and Bogie were on his boat one Sunday when a noted columnist announced that she had it on personal confidence of the stork that the Bogarts were shopping for three-cornered slacks. (At that time, and as this copy goes to press, the rumor is untrue; the Bogarts are not buggy-buying.)

However, on Monday, when Lauren returned to the house after the marine weekend, she was admitted by the beaming butler who said, "I understand from the wireless, madame, that we ahr to have the pleasure of reahing a child."

BASIC:

This is an earthy story; if you do not enjoy such, simply skip this paragraph. Otherwise:

You probably remember Moyna McGill for her brilliant bit as the inebriated counter-sitter in "The Clock," and as the older sister in "Uncle Harry." You probably remember, too, that she is the gifted mother of Angela Lansbury. What you may not know is that she owns and operates a wit like a whiplash.

Shortly after VJ Day, an acquaintance of Miss McGill's was boasting about how shrewdly she had managed the war years. Said the chatterbox, "I still have almost a case of pineapple left, and half a dozen boxes of black pepper, and six pairs of nylons, and five boxes of cleenex, and a girdle I've never worn. I made my plans carefully, so that I didn't suffer during the war at all."

Miss McGill leaned forward. "Tell me," she said tonelessly, "how ever did you manage about toilet tissue?"

EVERY KNOCK A BOOST:

When the parcel arrived, addressed to Master Charlie McCarthy, that willowy gentleman was out somewhere with Stinky Dugan. So Edgar Bergen opened the wrappings. Beneath a card signed "Greer Garson" lay a wooden door-knocker in the form of a woodpecker. When a dependent string is pulled, the bird's beak drums at the door.

LE MOT JUSTE:

Merle Oberon likes to name her dresses, tongue in cheek.

The diaphanous, sequin-spattered trousers which she wore in "Night In Paradise" were ticketed "Miss Oberon's Bejeweled Zooters."

The tight-bodiced gown with tantalizing decolletege, which she wears as a night club entertainer in "As It Was Before," is tagged "Miss Oberon's Drool Dress."

APPLY HERE:

There are two dynamic Little Theatre movements getting started around town at present: Kent Smith, recently discharged from the army and welcomed with open arms and a part by RKO, is organizing a group to consist entirely of discharged service men. Those interested may write to him at 780 North Gower Street, Hollywood 38.

Boris Karloff is advisor for the second group, which is planning to use the recreation hall of Calvary Methodist Church for its meetings and rehearsals. Anyone interested in this group may write to Mr. Karloff at 780 North Gower, Hollywood 38, or may call WAlnut 7433. Incidentally, no collect long distance calls will be accepted.

CLASSIFICATION:

At a recent Hollywood party, attended by Mr. and Mrs. Frank Sinatra, a chap who had been at the San Francisco Conference was seeking to describe the intense attractiveness of Anthony Eden. Said the speaker, having enumerated Mr. Eden's graciousness, his charm, his unique appeal, his hypnotic effect upon older women, "Well, I guess you could say simply that he's the Frankie of the Plus-forties."

LENSERS LENSED:

When Mr. and Mrs. Joe Pasternak arrived at Ciro's one night, and were besieged by photographers—as usual—Mrs. Pasternak said, "Poor men, always working when others are playing. I'll bet that sometime they yearn to attend a party just for fun."

That gave Mr. Pasternak an idea. A few weeks ago, he issued party invitations to every lens-snapper in town, specifying that no one was to bring his camera. He then employed downtown photogs who made a pictorial record of their fellow clickers, eating beautiful food, and chatting with such friends as Katharine Grayson, Jane Powell, Carmen Miranda, June Allyson & Dick Powell, Walter Pidgeon, Xavier Cugat, Diana Lewis & Bill Powell.

DISCOVERY:

Eddie Albert and Margo have known each other for years. Each liked the other and enjoyed the other's presence at a party, but both would have indulged in hearty laughter if their names had been seriously coupled in the parenthesis of romance . . . until Eddie came back from overseas and called Margo recently. He told a friend about it afterward: "Suddenly I discovered that I was trying to get run over by streetcars; I was trying to rhyme Margo with June or moon or something romantic. I was putting the butter in the sugar bowl, and the shoe polish in the refrigerator. Can you beat it!"

So they plan to marry.

a company that included a comic who shall remain nameless. (He is known best in local, not national, circles.) This comedian had a gargantuan complex; he wanted to be in every act, he gagged up the performance to make everyone stooge for him.

But when he tried to interrupt Vivian Blaine's singing act, he was quietly but effectively eliminated by Dennis O'Keefe, who was acting as master of ceremonies. It was the first time Miss Blaine had ever seen Mr. O'Keefe, and she didn't see him again until recently.

When a list of possible leading men for "Doll Face" (in which she has a starring part) was submitted to Miss Blaine, she uttered a squeak of pleasure and pointed to the name of Dennis O'Keefe. That's the man for the part," she jubilated.

ALMA MAMMY:

As you know, Jean Pierre Aumont and Maria Montez are prospective parents. Jean Pierre, remembering some of the more agile scenes in Maria's previous Technicolor pictures, tried to dissuade her from making another film until after Junior arrived. "No," said Maria, "I can't refuse this part. The studio has promised to be very careful and take good care of my condition."

CUPID-ITY:

Marissa, who is Margaret O'Brien's vivacious, Titian-haired aunt, was engaged for some time to a chap who lived in New York. Margaret grew to recognize his handwriting on letters, knew when Marissa answered the letters, and took a great interest in the romance. In the meantime, Marissa met an attractive Air Corps Captain of whom Margaret approved as a kitten approves a dairy. When the fiancé came west from New York for a visit, Margaret took an intense dislike to the man. She had just learned to keep a diary, so she scribbled, "I think Marissa is in love with my Captain," and left the book where the man from the east couldn't avoid seeing it. This brought on questions, and eventually a broken engagement.

While Margaret was on location in Wyoming, Marissa married her Captain. This was a civil ceremony, entered into because it was feared that the Captain was to be ordered overseas. Now that war's end has changed everything, a religious ceremony is to be held. Flower girl: Margaret O'Brien, match maker par excellence.

Bill Eythe and Buff Cobb Chapman. She's the daughter of the late Irvin Cobb, popular writer of many humorous stories.

SPY:

Peggy Ann Garner has had her first date. It was with an attractive 14-year-old boy who suggested, originally, that he and Peggy Ann attend the ballet. Mrs. Garner demurred; she believed that the excitements of adult life should be enjoyed gradually and at advancing periods, so she suggested that luncheon at the studio commissary would be pleasant.

Peggy Ann, breathless with importance, entertained her first beau at one table; a few discreet tables away, Mrs. Garner entertained a woman friend. Everything appeared to be highly auspicious. At which point, another junior actress, aged 8, arrived in the commissary. It occurred to her, patently, that it would be pleasant to be admired by an "older man." Peggy Ann's beau satisfied the description, so the wee one stood at their table, carrying on a one-woman conversation, while Peggy Ann and her escort answered in monosyllables.

Somewhat discouraged, the youngster returned to her own table. Then she thought of a particularly felicitous remark and hastened to confide it to Peggy Ann. Each of her approaches and each of her departures were followed by one of those groping silences during which Peggy Ann and her boy friend tried to reassemble their truncated conversation.

All together, there were about five such intrusions. Observed Peggy Ann somewhat stiffly afterward, "I hope that the next time I have a date, Mother, I can enjoy it without the interruption of mere children!"

SAY "AH":

Charles Korvin, for his second Universal picture, "This Love of Ours" (originally titled "As It Was Before") enacts the role of a doctor. Naturally, a practicing physician was employed to act as technical advisor to insure accuracy of Mr. Korvin's professional behavior. During a rehearsal one morning, the doctor looked at Mr. Korvin fixedly. "Open your mouth," he adjured.

Mr. Korvin, bewildered, obeyed. "Hmm—just as I thought," said the medical man. "Bad tonsils. Should be removed."

So, as soon as Charles Korvin finishes the picture, he will carry the advice of the picture's technical adviser into surgery.

NUDIST:

Butch, Gene Tierney's dog, has earned—with justice—a reputation for being a ham. It seems incredible that an animal could know when a cameraman has arrived to take pictures . . . but then, Butch is an incredible dog. He has always managed to get into a maximum of Gene Tierney's home sittings.

On the set of "Leave Her To Heaven," a still cameraman was preparing to make a shot, so glanced around for the ubiquitous hound. No Butch. "I'd be lonesome if that dog wasn't trying to get in the pictures; probably ruin my technique," said the cameraman, and went in search of his problem pooch.

Butch was located in Gene's dressing room, huddled in a corner in the hope of being inconspicuous: he had been shaved like a lion (Gene thought this undress would comfort Butch during the hot weather.) But Butch was embarrassed. If he could have found a barrel, he would have been wearing it.

Anna Lee in "A Tale of Bedlam" (RKO)

AT REPUBLIC:

CONCERTO is being shot in Technicolor with Maria Ouspenskaya, Philip Dorn, Bill Carter (one of our earliest returned Hollywood heroes), Catherine McLeod, Felix Bressart, Fritz Feld, and Elizabeth Patterson. Frank Borzage is producing and directing, and Tony Gaudio is photographing this picture that promises to do great credit to a studio not usually turning out such an ambitious product.

VALLEY OF THE ZOMBIES is a they-went-thata-way with Robert Livingston, Adrian Booth, Ian Keith, Tommy Jackson and Leroy Mason.

THE MADONNA'S SECRET is featuring Francis Lederer, Ann Rutherford and Gail Patrick.

DAYS OF BUFFALO BILL stars Sunset Carson and Peggy Stewart.

AT WARNER'S:

CONFIDENTIAL AGENT is the spy story now in its third month of production with Charles Boyer, Lauren Bacall, Katina Paxinou, Peter Lorre, Dan Seymour, Victor Francen, George Coulouris, Lynne Baggett, Miles Mander and John Warburton.

NIGHT AND DAY is the Cole Porter story in Technicolor starring Cary Grant, Alexis Smith, Jane Wyman, Monty Woolley, Henry Stephenson, Donald Woods (who was so good in "Roughly Speaking"), Selena Royle, Eve Arden, and Alan Hale.

NEVER SAY GOODBYE is the Errol Flynn Starrer, with Eleanor Parker, Lucille Watson, Hattie McDaniel, and S. Z. Sakall.

THE MAN I LOVE is in its second month of production with Ida Lupino, Robert Alda, Andrea King, Martha Vickers, Dolores Moran, John Ridgely, and Monte Blue.

HER KIND OF MAN is a comedy with Zachary Scott, Janis Paige, Faye Emerson, Dane Clark and George Tobias.

THE VERDICT is another of those foggy British thrillers at which Sydney Greenstreet excels. Peter Lorre, Joan Lorring, George Coulouris, and Paul Cavanagh complete the vivid cast.

To People who want to write

but can't get started

Do you have that constant urge to write but the fear that a beginner hasn't a chance? Then listen to what the editor of Liberty said on this subject:

"There is more room for newcomers in the writing field today than ever before. Some of the greatest of writing men and women have passed from the scene in recent years. Who will take their places? Who will be the new Robert W. Chambers, Edgar Wallace, Rudyard Kipling? Fame, riches and the happiness of achievement await the new men and women of power."

Young Mother Delighted With Writing Success

"After taking the N.I.A. course, the first article submitted to a top-flight woman's magazine resulted in its prompt acceptance. Despite my domestic duties, including the rearing of a small daughter, I have found time to write a dozen stories, all of which have been accepted. All potential writers should sign up with N.I.A." — Marcia Audrey Garden, 2302 West Main St., Richmond 20, Va.

Writing Aptitude Test—FREE!

NEWSPAPER Institute of America offers a free Writing Aptitude Test. Its object is to discover new recruits for the army of men and women who add to their income by fiction and article writing. The Writing Aptitude Test is a simple but expert analysis of your latent ability, your powers of imagination, logic, etc. Not all applicants pass this test. Those who do are qualified to take the famous N. I. A. course based on the practical training given by big metropolitan dailies.

This is the New York Copy Desk Method which teaches you to write by writing! You develop your individual style instead of trying to copy that of others. You "cover" actual assignments such as metropolitan reporters get. Although you work at home, on your own time, you are constantly guided by experienced writers. It is really fascinating work. Each week you see new progress. In a matter of months you can acquire the coveted "professional" touch. Then you're ready for market with greatly improved chances of making sales.

Police Captain Burke (Warren William) who likes to use psychology when tracking down killers. The killer is college student Larry Crain (Peter Cookson). Ann Gwynne, James Cardwell, Nestor Paiva and Francis Pierlot are part of this we-know-who-done-it-so-what drammer.

HOLD THAT BLONDE (Paramount) is a "who-got-it," with Eddie Bracken playing a kleptomaniac who gets involved in a $500,000 necklace robbery. Among those passing the necklace around are Veronica Lake, Albert Dekker (why isn't he given better parts?) and Frank Fenton.

CONFIDENTIAL AGENT (Warner Bros.) The trend is for suspenseful films—and this one is a topper in the field. Directed by Herman Shumlin, it couldn't very well miss, with a distinguished cast that includes Charles Boyer (confidential agent of the Republican Party in Spain on a secret mission to England in 1937), Lauren Bacall (sans her Bogey-man), who helps Boyer get coal for the lamps of the Loyalists; and three formidable Fascists — Victor Francen, George Coulouris and Peter Lorre, who plot and plan Boyer's demise . . . unsuccessfully! Katina Paxinou, Wanda Hendrix and a host of other competent actors keep you well chilled with their performances.

PARDON MY PAST (Columbia)—with Fred MacMurray as a discharged soldier planning to invest his and side-kick Bill Demarest's $3,000 savings in a Wisconsin mink farm. They just stop off in New York long enough to change trains . . . they think. A gangster-bookie has other ideas when he mistakenly identifies Fred as a New York playboy who left town owing him $12,000.

Fred is relieved of his $3,000 on account, whereupon he and Bill go to the home of Fred's double to get the dough back. It's natural that the family think Fred the prodigal son returned. You can take it from there—with Marguerite Chapman, Akim Tamiroff, Rita Johnson, and Harry Davenport contributing their shares.

KISS AND TELL (Columbia) When Corliss Archer (Shirley Temple) and her chum Mildred Pringle (Virginia Welles) decide to sell kisses to step up the sale of their hand towel booth at a USO-Red Cross Bazaar, a feud is started between the Archer and the Pringle families. Result: a battle of words between Mrs. Archer (Katherine Alexander) and Mrs. Pringle (Edna Holland); a bloody nose for Mr. Archer (Walter Abel), an ill-fiting denture for Mr. Pringle (Tom Tully), a secret marriage between Mildred and Lenny Archer (Scot Elliott), a near-scandal for Corliss, and no end of mental and actual physical torture for Dexter Franklin (Jerome Courtland), whose favorite expression is "My cow!"

In fact, the only person who seems to survive (without mishap) the impulsive actions of Corliss and Mildred is Raymond Pringle (Darryl Hickman), whose favorite expression is "People are so dumb."

"Kiss and Tell" comes to the screen from the New York stage with very few changes.

Dear Miss Wyman:

My folks are divorced and I live with my father who is a well-to-do attorney, and mayor of our city. As an only child, I am considered spoiled.

I met a new boy at the Youth Center, who asked me for a date, and I accepted. When he said good night, he told me it was all a bet, and that he truly hated me and all that I stood for.

You see, he comes from a poor family and the boys at High have been kidding him about having a case on the brain of the senior class, and the mayor's daughter.

I'm at my wit's end, and have tried every way to work it out. I really think the world of him and it just makes me shudder to think he will soon be going to the Army hating me.

What would you suggest?

Marion

Dear Marion:

Since you have exhausted all your efforts to clear up this situation, and without success, why don't you take your problem to your father?

He must be an able and intelligent person to have become a successful attorney and mayor, and I am sure nothing would please him more than to have you come to him. I know it would make him proud to feel he had your confidence.

This problem needs a man's viewpoint to solve it, and your father is the logical person to help you.

JANE WYMAN

Dear Jane:

My problem may seem kind of childish to you, but it is awfully important to me. You see, since my father passed away a few months ago, I have been living with my sister, and we just don't get along.

I have no one else to go to or live with as I am only seventeen, so I have to live with her, but it is becoming an impossible condition. We fight all the time, and as she is five years older than me, she tries to tell me what to do and generally run my life, criticizing everything I do. I try to get along with her, honestly, but it just never works out. We always end up mad at each other.

Please tell me what to do.

Barbara K.

Dear Barbara:

I believe you answered your own problem in the first line of your letter, when you said that your situation was a childish one.

Getting along with one's relatives when one is forced to live with them is nearly always a trying situation.

However, remember that today, when normal living is forgotten and everyone is improvising as best as possible, there are thousands of people in similar circumstances. There are girls living with in-laws who are practically strangers, members of families pitching in together to share expenses and living quarters although they might have been 'on the outs' with each other for years past. In short, you must think of your problem as a 'war casualty,' a temporary circumstance, and, like many, many others today, make the best of the bargain.

Just think of the good side of the picture—that you are lucky to have a sister to go to, be a big person about meeting her more than half way, and see if some of the wrinkles don't smooth themselves out.

SUB-SIXTEEN

Connie, who was born in New York City, comes from a long line of ancestors who made their mark in the world too. There was Gerardus Beekman, first Colonial governor of New York, John Marshall, first Chief Justice of the United States, Jonathan Trumbull, one of George Washington's pals, and last but not least Priscilla Alden.

When Connie speaks for herself, she looks at you through wide blue-grey eyes that express sincerity and an anxiousness to please. She talks of such things as big sister Priscilla who takes her swimming and with whom she fights upon occasion. "But" says Connie "they say true love never runs smooth." She tells you that right now her hobby is philately (and she doesn't stumble over the multiple syllables) . . . that her pets are two goldfish, a snail, and a canary, but she'll be owning dogs and cats too as soon as her father, Lt. John Marshall, comes home from Europe and they find a house with a yard . . . that her idol is Helen Hayes whom she hopes to meet some day . . . that her favorite food is a man-sized steak with french fries, but hamburgers with plenty of mustard and onions will do in a pinch . . . that she usually wears her hair in pigtails, but when she wants to be glamorous, she curls it, the hard way, by sleeping in metal curlers . . . that she's now reading Paul De Kruif's "Microbe Hunters," a book brought home by Priscilla and appropriated by Connie, who is just too interested in everything in the world to let anything escape her eager eyes. (Incidentally, Connie's I. Q. is 135, so you can be sure that Mr. De Kruif is being understood.)

Her most prized possession? A charm bracelet because each charm commemorates a step in her movie career—a ring given her as a good-luck token by the actor with whom she made her screen test, a chicken for "Sunday Dinner for a Soldier," a goat for "Dragonwyck" and a ship from "Enchanted Voyage."

Connie gets a big kick out of watching the talking mynah at the Farmers Market.

AFTER

should happen to me, it would break Mama's heart, but aside from her there wouldn't be anyone on earth who would really care."

When a girl feels sorry for herself in that vein, there is one simple explanation: she craves to fall in love, and to be fallen in love WITH.

At which point—exactly as it would be done in a smooth motion picture scenario—Betty became aware of the electric gaze of someone. Slowly, so as not to attract attention, she turned her head and stared straight into a pair of the brownest eyes she had ever seen. Naturally, Betty has been stared at by men before; the mere fact of intense observation was not unique, but something about this man was.

He and a male companion were seated by the head waiter in a booth in full view of the Hutton table. Betty, whose interest in her favorite food (spareribs) had been negligible until that moment, abruptly attacked her food with gusto.

Her fainting spirits revived as if given a whiff of triple-oxygen. She became—to the pop-eyed amazement of Max and Eunice—the life, not only of their table, but of the Singapore. Afterward, Betty confided to a friend, "I imagine that I made the world's biggest fool of myself."

This is doubtful, as the result of her vivacious return from the land of zombies, was the attraction of half the enrollment of The Singapore. Everybody wanted to join the party.

The man with the eyes ordered a steak. He looked at Betty. He chatted easily with his companion. He looked at Betty. He smiled ever so faintly. And then, after having paid his check in such a manner as to bring a vast smile to the waiter's face, he left.

Betty wanted to arise and call after him. What to say—that was the question. She thought of ships that pass in the night, of Dante and Beatrice, and of Evangeline.

To the astonishment of her companions, who found the chameleon-moods of Miss Hutton extremely difficult to comprehend, Betty lapsed into her morose megrims. People drifted away from the table: there were enough blues stacked in the booth to supply Tin Pan Alley for two decades. Then the headwaiter said, "Excuse me, Miss Hutton. We have a telephone call for you."

Betty stumbled to the booth. "Hello?"

"Hello," said a deep, calm male voice. A voice utterly without artifice or hesitancy. "You know who this is, don't you?"

Said Betty, "My escort, Mr. Max Sachs, said that he knew the man with you as Phil Briskin, and he thought you were his brother. I—er—asked."

"I asked who you were, too," said Mr. Briskin. "Now, let's see if we have any mutual acquaintances so that we can be formally introduced."

"Wouldn't Max count, since he knows your brother?"

"I should think so. We'll be back in a few minutes."

Betty squeaked, "Oh, no. I know almost everyone in here, and they're around the table, and there's so much confusion, and it would look, well, odd, and . . ." Her voice trailed off.

"Very well. My brother and I will be parked out in front in twenty minutes. We'll pick up you and your friends."

When Betty confided the plans to Max, he said judicially, "The Briskins are fine people, Betty. They're well and favorably known in Chicago."

Gasped Betty, "It can't be. For a man to be that handsome, unmarried, successful in business, and to come from good family—that can't happen to me!"

After the proper introductions were made, the party proceeded to the Chez Paree, where Betty used to sing. It would be impossible for Betty to tell anyone whether the Chez Paree now has a good orchestra, whether it has been redecorated, or what the color scheme is. She and Theodore J. Briskin were too busy talking.

In effect, she told him the story of her life, so that if he were oofully, oofully prep school and University and that sort of thing, he would know at once that she had been theatrical since she was a nubbin. To her amazement, she discovered that he had started to work in his father's plant when he was fourteen. Mechanically inclined, he had been unable to wait for formal education; he wanted to be doing things, to be perfecting processes, and inventing gadgets. He invited Betty to go through his Chicago plant, the Revere Camera Company, the following day. "I'd love it," enthused Betty.

One of the first things she noticed was the gilt label on his office door: "Theodore J. Briskin, President." "Get you," grinned Betty, knowing that she had fallen in love.

By this time it had become "Ted" and "Betty." He told her about inventing a new type camera in 1939. He told her about the time he spent in the Navy, and his return to civil life to supervise the expediting of a government contract for precision instruments.

Betty said afterward to Eunice, her hairdresser, "No. I don't believe it. This is all too good to be true. It simply can't happen to me."

Because Betty's itinerary had long been planned down to the last minute, she had to go on to New York. She had been on the 20th Century Limited for an hour when the first wire arrived from Ted. An hour later, a second wire arrived. When she reached New York, there were flowers awaiting her in her hotel suite. The wires and telephone calls and flowers continued to arrive; then—two days later—Mr. Briskin, himself, telephoned to say that he was in the hotel lobby.

Together, they took New York apart. New York is a fabulous place in which to fall deeper and deeper into love: there is so much to do, so many places to see, such enchantment in unexpected spots.

Then it happened! Betty and Ted had their first quarrel. Betty, being under contract to a studio, is—naturally—an employee. Her employers had a good many duties mapped for her; about 25 hours out of every 24 were carefully planned. Ted couldn't understand it. "But you have the right to some time to yourself!"

Sometimes she did have an evening, but wherever she went she was mobbed by autograph hounds. Betty loves her public; she would stand for hours, shoving a pencil over a series of books, patiently signing her name.

Ted Briskin, a quiet man with strong convictions about the conventions, could neither understand, nor endure it. "What a confused, chaotic way to live!" he said. Whereupon the quarrel ensued. It ended with Ted returning to Chicago, and Betty making dismal arrangements to finish last minute packing for her European tour.

For two long, solid, endless weeks, Betty heard nothing. And then, getting ready to leave New York, she received a long, explanatory, apologetic wire, followed by a telephone call.

Her overseas trip was a rugged one; Betty lives on raw courage most of the time, and simply knocks herself out to give a brilliant performance, no matter what the handicaps. She hasn't the physique to underwrite her furious vitality; she's like a Wright cyclone engine installed in a little red coaster wagon.

The next thing Betty knew, she was resting in a government hospital, where she received a cablegram from Ted reading, "Please cable size of third finger, left hand." She was better at once; thirty minutes later she was ready to go home.

Ted waited in New York, improving his time by shopping for a ring that would represent, in token, his esteem for Betty. When Betty flew in on August 26, there was Ted, round-shouldered under the weight of the engagement gem: an EIGHT carat stone set in platinum, with one slim baguette diamond on each side.

On Monday, they returned to Chicago where Betty took a suite at the Ambassador East, and telephoned her mother in Hollywood. "Come to Chicago," she trilled. "I'm going to be married . . ." and she named a tentative date. Mrs. Hutton managed not to faint. "But I'll never be able to get reservations," she squeaked.

"I'll see about that," answered the resourceful daughter, and promptly called her best friend at Paramount, Lindsay Durand. "Come to Chicago to be my matron of honor," jubilated Betty.

Then she talked to Edith Head, Paramount's brilliant designer and Betty's good friend, "Do me up the most gorgeous white satin wedding dress you've ever seen in your life," ordered Betty. "Veil, everything . . ."

An hour later, Betty called again—she had thought of a particular headdress she wanted. Three hours she called again—would ivory satin be better than white?

In Los Angeles, Lindsay Durand and Mrs. Hutton shopped frantically for what the well-dressed bride's mother and matron of honor will wear. It was impossible to find much but black dresses. They went from one shop to another, staring into the eyes of saleswomen with melting glances. "No, we have nothing."

But on Wednesday they found a gold crepe frock for Mrs. Hutton, and complemented it with brown accessories. On Thursday, Lindsay found a suitable ice blue frock of nubby crepe, and added brown accessories. On Friday they left on Santa Fe's crack Chief.

When Betty learned that her wedding could take place on Sunday, September 2nd, instead of a week later, she cancelled plans for the white satin gown. Or rather, Edith Head said over the telephone, "Look, Baby, it would take every bit of power in the department to turn out that frock in ten days' time. Either you postpone your wedding, or wear something else."

Betty decided to wear the sumptuous gold suit that she wore in "Stork Club," the picture she finished just before going East. The wardrobe for the picture had marked a high spot in Edith Head's artistry, and the studio had given the entire array to Betty as a bonus.

During the days when Betty was waiting for her mother and Lindsay to check in from the coast, a number

TRUTH AND CONSEQUENCE:

Barbara Stanwyck has long stressed the importance of truth to her young son, Dion. Recently Barbara heard Dion talking to a friend. "You know, it's really swell, lying in bed in the morning and ringing for my valet."

His friend was pop-eyed. "You mean you have a valet?"

Dion considered. "Well, no. But I've got the bell."

Ted and Betty took themselves off to Miami Beach for their honeymoon. Latest word is that she's tired of being typed the "rah rah" girl and is asking for dramatic roles from Para.

of charming things happened; she met Ted's entire family and liked them tremendously.

One afternoon she found a huge bouquet of flowers in her room and with it was a poem written by Joseph Zivny, an engineer in Ted's company:

"TO A TWINKLING STAR—BETTY HUTTON!"

Twinkle, twinkle, little star,
We know how real and sweet you are.
Up in the movie world so high,
We're honored with your stopping by.

In talent you and Ted abound,
To place you both on common ground.
In leadership we feel that he
Is the guiding star of our company.

Like heavenly stars, you're both aglow
With infinite love; this, you show.
He is your dream—you are his pride,
God speed the day you'll be his bride."

Betty is saving that to show her grandchildren.

Mrs. Hutton and Lindsay arrived in Chicago on Sunday, September 2, and were met at the train by a car Ted had sent. They were taken to the hotel, and there Betty and her mother had a precious hour together, tactfully provided by Ted, before he arrived. He also had sent roses to await her arrival.

When Ted was announced from the lobby, and arrived a moment later, he smiled at Mrs. Hutton, said, "Hello, Mother," and extended his arms. Mrs. Hutton stepped into that welcoming circle and burst into tears. He let her cry, soothing her only with silent strokings. That slight, eloquent incident, as much as anything that had gone before, assured Betty that she had made a wise choice.

The ceremony was performed in the small private room off the Drake's Camellia Room, and the reception was held in the larger space. United States Judge Philip L. Sullivan read the service at six o'clock in the evening. As "something old," Betty wore her suit; her "something new" was a pair of nylons that she had treasured and saved for years, without quite knowing why she had saved them; her "something borrowed" was a handkerchief loaned by Bea Allen who had been in the overseas troupe with Betty; but the "something blue" was utterly unique. Doris Harris, once Betty's hairdresser, but now with the WAVES, stationed at Great Lakes, was able to attend the ceremony. When Betty was dressing, she snipped a small section of blue fabric from one of the seams of Doris' skirt for the "something blue." This, Betty carried in her prayer book.

The bride's gift to the groom was a gold cigarette case with appropriate inscription; the groom's gift to the bride was extensive: (1) a gold mesh purse; (2) a white Persian lamb purse; (3) a gold pen and pencil set engraved with Betty's new initials, B. H. B.

Said Betty, "If I weren't already known as Betty Hutton, wouldn't Betty Briskin make a beautiful professional name?"

And, as the troubadours closed every story of true love—"They lived happily ever after."

that we weren't going, so he's calm. He's like a child in loving attention."

The Weatherwax brothers—there are four of them: Rudd and Frank are partners, Jack and Mac train and work for them—recently moved their kennels some twelve miles farther out in the San Fernando Valley, to keep Lassie happy. He didn't like the noise of planes that have grown increasingly numerous overhead, or the sudden blasts from motorcycles starting up around war plants near the old kennels. He couldn't sleep, and when Lassie can't sleep neither can Rudd nor the folks at MGM, where Lassie has a five-year contract (two more years to run) at what looks like fabulous money even to a two-legged star.

The new kennels are built scientifically, so that in winter they are snug and warm and in summer, delightfully cool. There are shade trees on the two and a half acres, where dogs can enjoy a nap after a run or a gopher hunt. Each pen in the kennels has its own outside yard and private inner entrance. Meals are chockful of vitamins.

Lassie lives in the bungalow on the lot with Rudd and his family. No other dog may enter there, unless for some specific training.

Before Lassie made his phenomenal hit in "Lassie," studio calls were usually for police dogs or mutts. Rudd had acquired the collie because it was necessary to keep every variety of dog in the kennels. But collies weren't fashionable then, and the dog was taught only obedience and to take the first few easy directions given all Weatherwax pups.

A call had come in for a police dog, and Rudd took one in for a test. It didn't get the part, but while they waited, Director Fred Wilcox came in. "Can't find a pup?" he asked the test director, "Tough luck. I can't find a collie, either."

Rudd looked up. "I have a collie."

"Big eyes? I need a collie with big eyes, a white ruff all the way around his neck, white blaze on his nose, and nice markings," stipulated Mr. Wilcox. "If that fits your dog, bring him in."

Lassie, being quite young, wasn't in coat at the time and didn't photograph in black-and-white as well as another collie, but Mr. Wilcox said he thought he could use Lassie to double the chosen one. However, as time went on, it was decided to do the picture in Technicolor, and tests showed that Lassie, whose coat had now grown out, was far more beautiful. He is a glorious gold color, with white ruff, blaze and fine black markings—all in the right places. He got the role, and Rudd sat up every night reading the script and teaching Lassie what he had to do next day.

"The hardest thing he had to do was to limp, walk with his head down, very dejected and slow. It's difficult for a dog to concentrate on three things at once, and it takes patience to get him to do it. But Lassie caught on swiftly," his owner remembered proudly.

"If a dog has confidence in you, you must deserve it and never let him down. If I should tell Lassie to jump off the Woolworth Building, he'd do it, because he's convinced that I'd never let him get hurt. He's never been hurt. When he has a difficult jump to make, I always stand below and catch him, breaking his fall. In "Hold High The Torch," I doubled for a Jap officer, and a stunt man stood by and collected $75 for it. But it was a 12-foot leap, 10 feet out, and I knew Lassie would feel more confident if I were there to take care of him. He doesn't fight me as well as he fights others, because he thinks I'm playing; anyway, he won't hurt me. So after the big leap, I made a lot of wild motions and they cut to a shot of Lassie with the real actor."

When the Weatherwax boys were small, they lived on a ranch near Silver City, New Mexico, where their father raised Angora goats. The elder Weatherwax trained collies to bring in the goats, and in his latest picture, that is what Lassie does—only he brings in sheep. Ranch collies were all trained to obedience; learned to sit up, lie down, charge, retrieve on command. It's second-nature for a Weatherwax to train dogs.

In "Son of Lassie," Major, the star's stand-in, played "Lassie"; one of Lassie's own sons played the puppy, Laddie, and Lassie himself played Laddie, full grown. (Get it?) At Major's first appearance on the screen, the audience thundered applause, which was deeply resented by Rudd, who felt that Major was getting credit for Lassie's first film. Lassie so far has not been quoted.

The puppy learned so much in his first three months that he can now do all his father does. But nobody asks him to—he's getting a long rest while he grows up.

"We had to trick the little pup into doing some of the things he does in that picture," commented Rudd. "He chews Peter Lawford's sock, tears June Lockhart's skirt, knocks a ball downstairs, etc. He was too little to do those things on cue, as an older dog would have done, so we put small pieces of meat in Peter's sock, on June's skirt, and on the ball. The pup's scene on Peter's bed contains a lot of action, more than most dogs can do in sequence. He whines, yawns, scratches Peter's face; Peter wakes and speaks to him; then the puppy yawns again and the mother dog comes in. The little dog did all this so well that a woman behind me in the audience said: 'That must be a stuffed dog. No puppy could do all that!'"

In silent pictures, it was harder to get dogs to do their stuff, for then carpenters were always hammering somewhere, whistles were tooting off-stage, people were laughing and talking out of camera range, all sorts of noises were going on to distract a dog's attention from his trainer. Now a sound stage is quiet, a trainer can give a brief command or cue signal, or an actor can say: "Charge!" and the dog will obey at once.

"Elizabeth Taylor, who loves all animals, learned how to train dogs while we were making this picture," recalled Rudd. "When she and Lassie did their scenes, she'd say: 'Come on, Bill!' (That was his film name), or 'Lie down, Bill!' or whatever the action called for. Mr. Wilcox, the director, is wild about Lassie and has learned to handle him, too. In 'Lassie', Mr. Wilcox kept putting in things for the dog to do, making up new scenes, but even then the picture was inexpensive. No one knew it would be such a terrific hit. Up to now, I'm told it has grossed up to five million dollars."

Lassie knows he is highly paid and important. He ignores all other dogs, including Major, who'd love to romp. On location, he travels in a compartment, where his meals are served, and shares his hotel room with Rudd. His indifference to other creatures served him well when he did a scene with Curly Twiford's wonder bird, Jimmy the Raven. Jimmy was to ride on Lassie's back. A playful pup had once pulled out Jimmy's tail-feathers, and it was only when he was convinced that Lassie meant to ignore him that Jimmy would consent to the ride.

Most kennel owners have cats around, so their dogs will learn to work with them and not to chase them, as is dog nature. Cats are smart, Rudd says, and can learn to do anything. Studios, however, won't pay enough for them to make their training worthwhile.

Hollywood has a new organization called "Animal Owners and Handlers Association," which posts the following prices for trained animals:

Cats, atmosphere	$5.00 a day
Cats, minimum for work in scene	$12.50 a day
Dogs, atmosphere	$10.00 a day, or $7.50 each, if several dogs.
Dogs, atmosphere	$15.00 a day, for selective breeds unless 6 or more dogs supplied.
Dogs, trained to do tricks,	$25.00 a day or $125.00 a week.

This is the first time dog owners have had an association, and it saves them money, for each can borrow dogs from the others, sharing their earnings. For example, Rudd borrowed a coach dog from Renny Renfro, paying Renny half the dog's earnings.

"Naturally, we don't lend our best dogs, who bring higher prices," Rudd pointed out, "but this way only one of us has to keep a Great Dane, a St. Bernard or other big fellows who cost a lot to keep and seldom work. We have from 40 to 50 dogs in our kennels, as a rule. There are Poms, Pekes, German shepherds, collies, poodles, Cairn terriers, cockers, Scotties, etc. We have an English sheep dog that works maybe once a year, but somebody must keep one.

"My brother Frank owns Rommie, the little Cairn terrier who worked in 'Without Love' and 'Sunday Dinner for a Soldier,' and is now doing 'Enchanted Voyage' for 20th Century-Fox. Rommie is little and costs almost nothing to keep; but big dogs, with the exception of Lassie, are usually more expensive than they're worth."

When Rudd wants to buy a new puppy, he picks out one from 10 to 12 weeks old, takes a rag with him and shakes it at the prospective purchase. If the little fellow wants to play, he's in; if he runs away, he's out. If he has a vicious look in his eye, no money changes hands, either.

The smartest dog is the German shepherd, for out of 10 of this breed, 6 can be trained; out of 10 collies, only

The housing shortage postponed the marriage of Martha Vickers (WB) and Al Herd 'til Oct.

3 will respond to training. For "Seeing Eye" work, a dog must be trained for a long time, and he must have brains to act in an emergency; but for a like role on the screen, a week's training is usually sufficient. The trainer simply goes over and over each scene until the dog can't miss.

When you watch a dog do his stuff on the screen, it seems almost supernatural; but his training isn't complicated once he's learned to obey. Say a dog must open a door in a scene. He knows how to fetch a ball, so you fasten a ball to a doorknob and say: "Fetch it!" He twists the ball in his efforts and the door opens. The dog is gratified at the applause and petting that follows this feat. Next time, the ball is taken off the doorknob, and the knob is taped so as not to hurt the animal's teeth. Again he opens the door. Now, convinced he is the world's cleverest beast, he opens it without tape. The minute he accomplishes the trick, his trainer quits.

"Don't sour him on it," warns Rudd. "He'll have a nervous break-down if he gets too much schooling."

When Lassie began his first picture, he hadn't learned to whine on cue. He had to whine, and Rudd was worried. The answer came by accident.

"On every set, if a dog works, there's a man from the Humane Society," said Rudd, "One day he and I wrestled for fun. Lassie saw us, thought he was hurting me, and began to whine. That was my cue. When we needed a whine, we wrestled. Pretty soon, all I had to do was to beat my own breast and Lassie would whine.

"Accidents often happen in training—I mean, happy accidents. Once I was training a dog to sit up, but instead he lifted only one paw in a perfect salute. I let him keep doing that and they used it in a picture.

"Chris, the mutt in 'Kiss and Tell', is the only dog who can do a double-take on cue. I was trying to teach him to sneeze when he suddenly came out with his funny-business; the only dog who ever did it. I took him out to see Director John Stahl for a role at 20th Century-Fox. Mr. Stahl said; 'No, I need a smaller dog.' I showed him Chris' double-take and he laughed. 'All right, he's in!' he said."

Dogs fill engagements anywhere. Mac Weatherwax has been in Florida for three months with a troupe of bloodhounds for "The Yearling." Rommie has just returned from weeks in New Orleans.

Henry East, one of Hollywood's veteran trainers, recently had to call in Lady, 18 years old and long since retired from the screen, to play in "Uncle Harry" for Universal. Lady plays a dog almost too ancient to move. She was "just the type."

Mr. East also owns Corky, half-Welsh-terrior, half-mutt, who is now working with Ingrid Bergman and Bing Crosby in "Bells of St. Mary's" at RKO. Corky does several intricate scenes, for which he gets $250 a week.

That English bulldog, Soda, who was prominent in "Since You Went Away," was actually a show dog, not an actor. He had to learn to sit down, as show dogs only stand or lie down. Inclined to be slow, it took Soda two weeks to learn what was wanted, but he got tremendous fan mail on the picture's release.

If you saw "Maisie Goes To Reno", you'll remember the little Scottie who was always going into or getting out of the elevator. That was Dooney, Ann Sothern's own Scottie, who insists on accompanying Ann to the studio. Dooney wandered into the scene after Ann, looking about in a peculiarly bored and blasé manner. Ann shooed him away, but she wasn't quick enough and cameras caught him. When the day's rushes were viewed, Dooney convulsed the projection room and promptly went on the payroll.

For "State Fair", 20th Century-Fox rented 50 Hampshire pigs and bought four Hampshire boars, two of which—Blue Boy and Esmeralda—are stars in the film. Meat shortage was on, and Dick Haymes and June Haver eyed Blue Boy's 880 pounds of pork with dreamy eyes.

"He'd make at least 700 pounds of meat," sighed Dick, "I figured that's 2500 red points. How could we come by that many points?"

For days the cast wrestled with the problem, until Dick called the OPA and discovered that there are no ration points on live animals! Dick didn't buy Blue Boy—his owner won't sell.

Sheep and goats were used in "The Corn Is Green." Warner Brothers' prop department was prepared to cope with scenery-chewing goats, but the nannies behaved well. It was the sheep that grazed on the strips of sod brought in to dress the set.

Bob Hope insists he aged several years in the making of "Road To Utopia" because he had to work with a 700 pound Russian bear, which had to cuddle up to him in the dark and be mistaken for bearskin-clad Dot Lamour. "Look," suggested Bob, "I've seen that bear's teeth. They're sharp. Ask him if he'll have them pulled before the scene. I'll take my teeth out, too."

There must be a simpler way of dropping his option, Bob complained, to no avail. They got the scene without mishap, but Bob had something to worry about: Stanley Beebe, who owned the bear, is reported to be in a hospital now. The bear bit him.

That same picture called for reindeer which, it seems, disappear in winter The company couldn't wait for summer, and an S.O.S. reached the ears of the Canadian government. At a cost to Paramount of $27,000, Canada delivered seven reindeer. Santa Claus, the party needing the span of Christmas transportation, always drives eight, as every infant knows, and at first the director thought he'd better drop the whole idea. Still and all, there was that $27,000 on the budget. In the end, seven reindeer worked, Santa explaining that No. 8 was on a date with Dottie.

The horse used in "Duel In The Sun" earns over $5000 a year. Dice is part-Arabian, part American saddle horse, and can do all the usual things: nod "yes" or "no", bow, lie down, rear up, retrieve, walk lame, kneel, side slip and come on call. For the picture, Gregory Peck must jump over Dice's rump into the saddle, at a run dismount by swinging over Dice's neck, at a gallop, and bring the horse to a crashing halt. Dice also must rear up and fight with his forefeet in a wild scene. He's a real ham and can't wait to get into a scene. In fact, he'll dash onto the set before his director is ready. They had to use silent signals instead of the customary "Roll 'em!" because Dice insisted on starting at the first word.

The secret of teaching any animal to act lies in getting its confidence. Once he trusts his trainer, he'll do whatever that trainer asks. To get a horse to nod his head, you touch a certain place on his neck; touch him there, and any horse will nod, but he must then be taught to make it into a slow and graceful dip of the head. Another signal brings a shake of the head; still another, and the horse paws the earth with one foot, counting up to the number his owner indicates. As he learns each trick, he is rewarded with a piece of raw carrot. (Before rationing, the reward was a lump of sugar.)

Some horses "spook" easily. That means they shy away and buck at strange sights. The smell of camels will make almost any horse spook, but some will stop it if gently led around the humped creatures to observe them at close range.

"That's a funny-looking creature," the horse presumably says to himself, "but I suppose he can't help it." Thereafter, he ignores the beast.

If a horse still spooks after being permitted to investigate everything odd about action required of him—such as his rider's flowing Arabian robes, say, or shields and spears to be carried, or a girl's fancy dress, or something that clanks—he's withdrawn from the picture.

Animals on sets, as has been mentioned, are carefully guarded. Although a Humane Society representative is always on hand, no trainer who values his animal would permit it to risk its life or limb. During the first days of any picture the cast is usually nervous and tense while launching new characters and getting used to each other—and who cares? But let there be a horse, dog, chimp or other creature present and the set is closed to press and visitors for at least four days, while the animal star is getting acclimated.

equal results. More restrained members of the motion picture colony had her typed as "a goodlooking, average girl whose connection with the Art of Cinema would be sensational rather than lasting." How wrong was that guess, we know now!

But in addition to underrating her determination to improve, most people were slow to understand that it was more than just that she wanted to; it was that she could! She was equipped with certain specific assets —a flair for observing and discriminating and making right choices.

Her critical ability is good and she can look at the world and at people with a very critical eye.

Joan's earlier marriages (to Doug Fairbanks, Jr., and to Franchot Tone), it should be mentioned, both influenced her "development" rather importantly. Indeed, her being married to Doug was a turning point—and contributed, perhaps more than anything else, to her being the Joan Crawford we know today.

It was then that Joan "grew up"; that the marriage lasted only three years (much to Hollywood's surprise, at the time) doesn't alter that fact. And when the Fairbanks chapter in her life finally came to an end—they had been having marital difficulties for some time—Joan wasn't prepared for the ultimate decision of divorce.

I don't think in general she is introspective. She doesn't brood over what she does or what has been done. However, she doesn't like to act the fool, in spite of her extrovertiveness and her rather vivid imagination and susceptibility for illusions.

Her emotional collapse was enough to create a social blackout for the next few years. It's a weakness with Joan (one of few) that her first urge, when there's trouble, is to run away.

Enter Franchot Tone and, strangely enough, a psychological courtship. Understanding her depression over the divorce, Franchot was able to convince Joan that her "ego" was hurt, and that life (with him) could be beautiful. And out of this marriage did come happiness, for Joan's amazing vitality and energy were diverted to a new enthusiasm—the theatre.

There was a dark cloud on that "dramatic" horizon, however. The Crawford career was at a peak; Tone's unfortunately, wasn't. This presented a situation which led, rather inevitably, to unhappiness in their marriage —and finally, divorce.

Again, Joan's inclination was to escape from her unhappiness. Living the life of a recluse, she made determined vows never to marry again. "Marriage is not for me," she was quoted as saying. (Which just goes to show the folly of making predictions about the unpredictable!

Joan had always wanted children. That she hadn't had any was a tragedy in her life. But that was before Christina and Phillip II came to live at the beautiful house in Brentwood; both children were adopted at the age of eight months, and all the vitality, love and affection that makes up so much of the Joan Crawford personality was diverted to the two little babies she considered her very own. Having had her own childhood marred by the accidental and shocking discovery that the father she loved so well was her step-father, Joan has been very careful to explain to both her children that they are "adopted because I wanted you so much and love you more than any other little boy or girl in this world."

But for a woman of Joan's temperament, it was inevitable that some day someone would come along who could understand the conflicts of her spirit; who would love her and admire her and give her the happiness she sought and so rightly deserved. When a friend first brought Phillip Terry to visit Joan Crawford, he wasn't aware of being instrumental in creating one of Hollywood's happiest couples. Yet that's how it happened. It took only six months for Joan and Phillip to know that they were in love, and for Joan to know that "this time it's the real thing." They were married during the filming of "Reunion" in 1942.

Contrary to past records, she is not the "divorcing type." Her complete make-up shows a yearning to be a good wife and mother; to have a husband who shows the same tendencies of giving that she does. The intensity which directs all her emotions makes her an ideal wife for the man who is compatible, in that sense.

I remember asking, several months later: "But Joan, is the honeymoon really going to last forever? Can you possibly stay this happy, you and Phillip?" They were still telephoning one another several times every day—and they do now, if they're separated as long as an hour or two. In my "friend of the family" capacity, I suppose it wasn't so surprising that they didn't hesitate to exchange "I love you's," in my presence—with an accompaniment of tender endearments. But the point is: They never hesitate! They're so delightfully frank and honest about their love.

In public life, she's inclined to be conservative. (This is an example of Spontaneity vs. Control.) In her private life, Spontaneity has its opportunity to overcome Control, with the result that at home or with close friends, her exterior conventionality turns into warmth and exuberance.

I'm convinced now—after three years—that my question about the perpetual honeymoon has been answered. And the answer is plainly there, for all to see. Joan and Phillip are temperamentally suited to each other—but wonderfully!

Joan's mother-instincts are not confined only to her family however: They cover a much greater area. Nothing pleases her more than to advise, guide and take care of her friends, as well. Never one for half-measures, when Joan offers friendship, she does so wholeheartedly. She admits this is a fault in some instances; that it's being over-emotional, that it's something she has struggled for a long time to control.

Impassive as well as excitable, she possesses much affectivity. She's quite taken in by her own emotions but that comes under the creative part of her personality. She has imagination, is very optimistic, likes to travel, and has quite a flair for adventure. Because of her amazing vitality, she's excellent at sports.

A romanticist? But yes! So often instead of facing trying situations, she has idealized them, given them a reasonableness and an appealing quality which few difficult things ever actually achieve. When they don't work out as she's counted on, she's lost and disappointed. But fortunately her great enthusiasm for life usually involves "quick come-back" powers, and a readiness to jump into new fires.

With all this, she's restless and has a tendency for overdoing. Because she has a way of putting all of herself into a project, and a way of being aggressive about her likes and dislikes, she overemphasizes everything she does.

It's a pleasure to be invited to the Terry home, for it's such a perfect home, in every sense of the word. By the way, it's the house Joan bought in 1929; started as a seven-room cottage, it has gone through various stages of wrought iron gates and Moorish doorways—'til today, having undergone a series of alterations, it's a model of present-day smartness; decorative, but in tune with pleasant living. So representative, it occurs to me, of Joan herself.

But don't think you can knock at the door of the Brentwood house, and find Joan Crawford! Because she's Mrs. Terry. It was "Mrs. Terry" who answered the telephone when the help shortage was most critical, and they were without maids; it's "Mrs. Terry" if you're introducing her to new friends; "Mrs. Terry" to the grocer, when she telephones for a delivery. Who's Joan Crawford? She's Lucille LaSueur as registered in the birth records of San Antonio, Texas; the studio thought LaSueur sounded too like a deliberately "adopted" movie star name; so they ran a contest, inviting fans to select a name, and Crawford was the "people's choice."

In spite of her success, she has not fully succeeded in integrating her private life with her role as a star. The image of a successful actress is a top veneer, but underneath is a certain insecurity. There are indications that to some extent she even dislikes being a star. (This would be the combination of a forceful personality competing with a "star personality.") I'll go so far as to bet she doesn't like to be called "Crawford." Any sort of interference could be listed as another "dislike."

But let there be no mistake: Joan is no Mrs. Doormouse! In matters pertaining to her career, she's both ambitious and decisive. Though I remember her saying: "Ambitions have no limit. Once I asked a friend about his ambitions, and he enumerated the things he wanted to do. Suddenly I realized he was not ambitious, at all; he just had aims. There are always newer and higher goals to strive for and no person has ever achieved perfection."

Narrowing down her too expansive energies and putting herself to the service of a purpose, directs her to external success. She has the psychological make-up of an actress who wants to be appreciated for having worked hard to give shape to one of her many personality facets. She's quite emotional and shows vitality; however, stronger than all that is her tendency to give a definite direction to her urges. There again you get the formative tendencies. She doesn't want to indulge in fun only for the sake of having fun. She must direct her urges toward a goal. She has done this and the result is a deserved success.

Joan still retains the serious dramatic ambition and fierce independence that brought her up from the Broadway choruses. One of the many facets of the Crawford personality is determination. When she decided to be a dancer, she became one; when she decided acting was her forte, so it was.

In her determination to become an actress, many of her actions were criticized; but the criticism served only to put her on the defensive and strengthened her will to succeed. Her seemingly exaggerated indifference to gossip was assumed to hide the fact that the talk really affected her.

To this day, Joan still worries (perhaps more than she realizes) what people think, for painful incidents have taught her that it is simpler to abide by the rules of conventional society. Too close to her heart are the memories of childhood exclusions, and the snubs of those first Hollywood years will never be entirely forgotten.

The ability to work hard and forget about herself while she works is a tremendous source of satisfaction, because her "ego" feelings are expansive. What she accomplishes while she works is the partial sacrifice of her propensity for expansion, to more or less narrowly circumscribed concepts of actual work.

At the beginning, Joan wanted to be taken seriously as an actress; but the "great powers" were not nearly so serious when they listened to her plea. It was her sheer persistence that finally dug her out of the rut of the "Dancing Daughter" series, which she feared—and rightly so—would inevitably type her as "the girl who dances the Charleston better than anyone else," and with 84 shining golden "champion cups," to prove it!

She's aware of the danger implied in both her excitability and her propensity of spirit. A born organizer, of course she has a flair for taking the initiative.

Her first type-breaking role—and testimony to this hard-won victory in the battle to "let me try something else"—was in the "Gorgeous Hussy," a costume picture. Next, she told the studio bigwigs that she wanted a mother part—the result, "Susan and God." And for being right, every time she'd insisted on these departures-from-the-expected roles, she was allowed to do "A Woman's Face." The truth of it is, she demanded it! And I think it's quite generally agreed that no picture she's ever done contributed more importantly to "the Crawford prestige."

Joan's afraid of mother roles? Certainly not! Ann Blyth is her daughter in "Mildred Pierce."

Her spontaneity and imagination are of a formative nature, since she seems constantly searching for a way to make herself useful. In line with this, she has a way of withholding her energy and applying it where it can be used to best advantage. She has an extraordinary ability to think rather precisely and in a practical manner. Her thinking is "goal directed." That's the main force which keeps her on her feet; it is a capability for working toward a very definite goal with a practical purpose in mind. Since she has imagination, she's also capable of attaining that goal. Consequently, everything she undertakes in her mind is bound to lead to success . . . even before there seems a chance for the idea to materialize.

In my own opinion, "The Woman's Face" was in every way her best picture—her most dramatic performance, and doing most to establish her right to be known as "a great actress." But I say was her best; because now, having seen her in "Mildred Pierce," I'm confident that Joan's "best" has been equalled. She's done it again!

Always a good actress, but she can better express parts that are parallel with her own personality type. For instance, playing the role of a villainess wouldn't be suitable for her talents—she's too natural. Her creativeness as an actress springs from a tension within herself and is proven by the fact that she becomes quite emotional at times. A state of Hypomania may reach a high that is almost manic. (This is not abnormal.) This combination of almost fierce spontaneity and a serious attempt to control herself, results in a more than restrained conventionality. There are a few signs of anxiety in her handwriting, showing that she tends once in a while to shrink away from visualizing her future. Basically it is underlining the feeling of having given away too much of herself, and being left without enough for her "self." Although she's able to concentrate while working, she's not always able to concentrate on her basic problems. A little on the "escapist" side, she is nonetheless quite realistic and practical in regard to the "task in hand."

It would be difficult, I contend, to point to any one climax in Joan Crawford's career and say: "That was the peak." In suggesting that she reached the height of her success in 1933, what I mean is: it was then she first hit "the top." She's been a star for 17 years (which is a record!); so who's to say now: Is her success going to last? Is Joan Crawford going to stay a star?

What seems to characterize her as predestined for acting is the ease with which she transforms her impulses (which are strong) into action. Very often this is without sufficient inhibitive forces.

She was, at that time, so thoroughly representative of the period—of the "gay 30's." It was the devil-may-care era, the reckless prosperity previous to 1929, and the grimness of the depression which followed. Those were the ups and downs of the times, but Crawford "came through."

Not smugly, however—and not selfishly! For there could never be any justification for saying, "Oh, yes, she's doing all right; she happens to be one of the lucky ones." Joan isn't the sort to hoard her blessings; she's an individualist, but not in the sense of feeling that she's worked hard for her success, and others can do the same.

I've never known anyone more thoroughly generous. And so thoughtful, too. The kind who "never forgets a birthday," never misses an opportunity to "do something nice." Joan's unpublicized charities form a background for philosophies that have aided her to a great career and to create a great woman within herself.

It is her tremendous spontaneity that keeps her in constant danger of giving away too much of her "self" and the things that belong to her.

In noting that her career has been such a long-lasting achievement record, I call your attention to the fact that Joan was only 16, when she started! You should know, too, that it has always been accepted that she works for "the glory"; rather than to get more for doing what she considers a mediocre part, she'd prefer do a role that would be remembered for 10 years, and make only a thousand dollars a week. (Only? But don't forget, this is Hollywood!)

It's an additional credit to her cleverness, however, that she managed to do both. She's had good parts and she has made "big money" for herself, and for those who've produced her pictures. (Joan Crawford was voted one of the best money-making stars in Fame polls every year, for five consecutive years—from 1932 through 1936.)

She's more or less aware of a conflict resulting from the unexplainable fact that she's very successful—and yet, she's not quite satisfied with that success. While she likes to make money, because it is a tangible gauge for success, the success itself is the integral factor so necessary to her ego ideal.

But for all the heights she's attained, here's one actress who has never been accused of "going Hollywood." For being too honest with herself, and too sincere . . . honest, I don't believe she could.

All in all, she doesn't really know herself. Forever trying to expand, she risks expanding too much—indicating that she doesn't realize or know how far she reaches. This may be due to a natural factor within herself or due to her surroundings, the artificial environment of Hollywood.

The real complication is the constant conflict which occurs when she attempts to superimpose the Hollywood movie star, or Joan Crawford personality, on the real-life personality of Mrs. Phillip Terry.

So you see? Joan Crawford really isn't "Mildred Pierce"—and the parallels between that character and her own are "just coincidental." If there appears to be "any similarity" which, knowing Joan as I do, I'm not sure that there are—there are reasons for it. And above all, that she has succeeded in giving that impression, with most every role she's ever played . . . well, why do we look further for an explanation? Why not just accept the fact: Joan Crawford is a great actress!

ONE MAN CROWD

effort and funds) so far. Currently there is Orson the ventriloquist, the close-lipped companion of a hill-billy belle calculated to make Mortimer Snerd look like a sophisticate, who will shortly introduce the gal and her gags to the service camps.

Becoming increasingly important as a political columnist is Welles the newspaperman, who writes on national subjects with both intelligence and wit. (The Welles wit, written or spoken, is a handy gadget—like a broadsword. Used whimsically, just to prove its point, or if the occasion demands, brought down flat on an opponents head.) Although there were many broadcasters at San Francisco recently it was Welles the commentator who properly upheld the American side of the international spectacle. Many a Nob Hill spectator considered the home grown Welles beard highly superior to the best the Russians could import, and while the Arabian princes had their jeweled turbans and flowing burnooses, Orson had Rita Hayworth.

To all these must be added the Welles who's merely a guy seeking a little self-expression: The rhumba master, who despite his 200 pounds swings a light and expert hip . . . the bull-fight authority, who is currently teaching his lovely wife to be the most graceful "matador" in the world . . . the authority on Spanish Gypsy music and customs (he once lived with the Gypsies of Seville) . . . and the connoisseur of such additional folk-rhythms as Mexican music and good ol' Harlem jazz.

There is, as this goes to press, no Orson the crooner, nor Welles the Presidential candidate—but then, he's young yet. There is a limit to what can be accomplished in just thirty years, and no one knows it better than he:

"I have a lot of interests I haven't done anything about—" he says, "and I probably never will—".

The "probably" is because as a young man who doesn't know his own strength, he is not committing himself. Meantime, "He has no hobbies," writes a studio publicist, and some people agree with the statement:

"A hobby introduces itself to Orson at its own risk," says a close friend. "First thing it knows it's become a talent, an achievement, or an innovation."

Welles the actor is currently engaged at International Studios, in the highly dramatic "Tomorrow is Forever." Tri-starring with Claudette Colbert and George Brent, he plays a gentleman who returns from abroad much the worse for age and illness, and finds his beautiful wife, believing him dead, happy with a new husband.

Watching The Beard Jr. (as distinguished from Monty Woolley) at work, is something like watching a legend add on a new paragraph. There is the scene, fr'instance, in which the unhappy returnee stands in front of his once happy home and finds it as deserted and run-down as he is. "Who lives here, now—"he asks forlornly. With his hair and beard frosted with dusting powder, his face a network of pencilled lines, shoulders bent and step heavy, the old man is a very throat-catching sight—or should be. It happens that at his saddest moment a burst of hot swing music crashes in from an adjacent sound stage and interrupts the scene. The sound man and Director Irving Pichel are highly indignant, and so too is Orson.

"Lousy piano—" he booms. "Somebody tell 'em if I'm going to be interrupted I want more drums—"

Quiet comes again to the soundstage and deep emotion holds sway again, but briefly. This time when the neighboring swing orch gets going, it has, as if by request, a very active drummer. The star had just attained a perfect pitch of pathos—the stage crew looks apprehensive when he gives the first thump of his cane. Thump da-de thump thump—thump da-de thump thump—it works into a very hep and very hot bit of thumping, accompanied by various rhythmic vibrations of the above mentioned 200 pounds. ("The Body Beautiful as they call me at Ocean Park"). . . .

Doubtless, the aged gent eventually finds out who lives in the aged house, but as you leave the set the stage crew has joined him in his tom-tom rhythm, and tall, distinguished Director Pichel has run two fingers upright through his own hair, is slapping his mouth with the other hand to make an Indian war-cry, and is doing his Rain Dance.

All of which may be proof that you can do it quicker making a picture with Welles, than you can by cutting out paper-dolls. And positively is proof that Hollywood and Orson have learned to be comfortable with each other. There was a time when they got along together like a sunburned back and a hair shirt; when the Broadway Blaze first arrived with the announced intention of showing the movie town something about making pictures, and, unforgivably, did it . . .

It was during this period that Orson is rumored to have attended a party and sat listening to one of the town's most fabulous producer-directors orating on his latest super-super.

"Tell me, Mr. Producer—" said one of the guests,"—just what do you try to put into a picture?"

"Into every one of my pictures," said the producer, "I try to put something of the people, something of myself, and something of God—"

"How cozy—!" Mr. Welles is said to have exclaimed distinctly—and left.

The Outline of Welles History may yet fill as many volumes as that other similarly-named and well-known work. Since much of it has been widely printed, this story will attempt only a few of the facts and figures leading to the gradual evolvement of the young man who is actually one of the most remarkable figures of his time—and several other times:

Although we are one of those who flatly insist Orson Welles was never a child, there is good evidence that he was born (probably because it was the quickest way to get goin') in Kenosha, Wisconsin. From that day to this, there has been little change in appearance or personality, except for the considerable increase in size. At 13, Orson looked as he does now, but in short pants. We omit mention of the beard, because if he had wanted a beard at 13 he would no doubt have raised one. For a part of his life he had an amazing dignity for one so young, and since then he has been amazingly young for one with such dignity. Said dignity, he early learned, was shatterproof against anything or anybody except Welles, and breaking it up is the most fun he's ever had since.

Orson was born of wealth and culture. His father was Richard Head Welles, manufacturer and inventor. His mother, Beatrice Ives Welles, was a concert pianist. From his parents came the seed of his brilliancy. It was at the Todd School for Boys in Woodstock, Illinois, under the tutelage of Headmaster Roger Hill, that the brilliancy took root. In fact, it began to grow like crazy.

"Skipper" Hill is himself a genius; a gentleman who has a closer understanding of the feeding habits and individual markings of the young male species, than any other headmaster in the country. Faced with the galloping glandular processes of young Orson he recognized him as a genius's genius, and aided and abetted him in acting like one. It was at Todd that the theater entered the life of Orson, and vice versa. There he staged his first production of Julius Caesar and, just to make it harder, assigned two roles to himself.

Together, he and Hill published the revised works of another smart fellow, Bill Shakespeare, Their Mercury Shakespeare Texts are valued today at high schools and colleges, and the recorded versions of the Bard's classics as done by Welles and Burgess Meredith, have led to new methods in the study of drama. (Also to the line most frequently used by Welles caricaturists, "I don't object to Shakespeare, I just rewrite him.") Other school-day exploits can be summed up by the fact that when a few years later the Welles radio "Invasion by the Martians" scared the nation purple, Todd pupils alone were fully in mood with the broadcast:

"For goodness sakes—" they said with amusement, also a slight bit of impatience, "What's the matter with people? They ought to know that's just Orson—"

At 15 his painting had advanced to where he decided to accept the advice of his tutor, noted Russian artist Boris Anisfield, and continue his studies abroad. Touring Ireland with brush and burro, he attended a performance at the famous Gate Theater in Dublin. It was then the legend of Welles actually began. Depositing sketchbook and donkey cart in a ditch, he announced himself at the stage door as "a star of the Theater Guild" who might be prevailed upon to accept one of their better roles, and remained at the Gate for an entire season. During that time he made an appearance as guest star at the world-famed Abbey Theater; the first American so honored.

New York, when he tilted his lance at it in 1932, was not quite as easy as Dublin. It was taken by what has since been adopted by our armed services and named "a war of attrition." He had two moods at the time; one in which he wore a flowing artist's tie, the other in which he puffed fiercely on an underslung pipe. In spite of both, the general impression was still that of a King-size Cupid looking for a haircut. He also had a habit of making an entrance wherever he wished to make an entrance, and introducing himself to anyone he felt worthy of the introduction, as "being with Kate Cornell." This was extremely annoying to many of the better-established Broadwayites, for the reason that this hunk of high school-on-the-loose was with Kate Cornell.

MERCHANTS STUDIO, 2815 Glenview Rd., Wilmette, Ill

Miss Cornell, by the way, thought he had one of the most remarkable speaking-voices ever encountered. She encouraged the public to listen to it in such distinguished roles as that of Marchbanks in "Candida," Mercutio in "Romeo and Juliet," and Octavius Moulton-Barrett in "The Barretts of Wimpole Street,"—all of which he played while still in his teens.

The entire tale of how Orson made New York say "Uncle" is too long to detail here. The exploits of his Mercury Theater Group included showing the theater world how to produce plays without scenery, without costumes, without the original play, and sometimes, he is proud to say, even without customers. He hit the top both as an actor and a producer, on the stage and on the air. As a personality he hit so many headlines there was sometimes hardly any space left for the editorial writers to bait the Roosevelts, and some people say this was the beginning of his close friendship with our late President. Soon there was hardly a revue that dared call itself either "smart" or "intimate" unless it included that skit wherein someone advanced to the footlights and made exclamation: "I am Orson Welles, the Mercury Miracle. 'Mercury' because I run the Mercury Theater, 'Miracle' because I am one!"

It was inevitable that Orson should go to Hollywood since he'd gone every place else there was to go.

He had always been a camera enthusiast and was enough impressed by what Hollywood was doing to believe the screen offered more possibilities than any other medium. A less stout-hearted character might have allowed these softer statements to precede him to the West Coast, but the Welles modus operandi has rarely varied from his very first year, when he learned that cooing in his crib was no way to get people to come running.

It was purely as a missionary that he arrived in movie-town it said here, in most of the columns. He would show the people who had been making pictures for years how to make them better, first by doing away with half the people who had been making pictures for years. His actor-writer-director-producer contract at RKO split the town into two factions (1) those who considered it an affront to the whole town and, (2) the two or three odd souls who secretly believed he could fulfill every phrase of it, and with one hand tied behind his back.

"Citizen Kane" was his first picture, although there was a long, strange interlude during which he had announced "The Heart of Darkness" as his first production, but seemed to be producing nothing at all. The fact is that while the movie colony held its properly baited breath, Orson was looking for a river. It has long been established that any terrain or topographical peculiarity of any part of the world, can be duplicated for the cameras, within a few miles of the studios. It was also true, however, that practically anyone can make a picture with a river already there, so after looking over and turning down the region's best streams, Orson decided to dig his own. Just why the Welles river was never dug has not be revealed, but it was possibly because RKO was afraid of the task of having to put the state back together again. At any rate, Orson was probably right all the time because when later, "Journey into Fear" was made with just an ordinary river, it proved to be the least successful of his pictures.

"Citizen Kane," when it finally hit the screen, was a thoroughly impressive picture. The controversy between its producer and publisher Hearst is worth reviewing only because of its vindication of that part of the Welles energy which could supply the horsepower for a bulldozer. Even when Variety, that gospel sheet of show business, predicted that the film would be burned; and Winchell, who usually knows what he is Winchelling about, said it had been permanently shelved, Orson said the film would be released.

It was released. Instead of doing things "without", as he had on Broadway, Welles had now done things with. With camera angles that were new—with sets that had ceilings, as real rooms do—with conversation that over-lapped as real conversation does (actors usually wait until another actor has finished his dialog line, before starting their own). Even in an industry that had already hit the top, something new had been added. Some of the virtues of "Kane" have been quietly absorbed by other producers; the sets with ceilings, Joe Cotten and actor Welles.

All of which brings us to the Orson we omitted from our first listing—Welles the Human, the guy who will always be obscured, as far as the world at large is concerned, by the brash and blazing exploits of the Wonder Boy. He's the fellow who, publicly or privately, never picks on anyone who isn't bigger than himself—whose private "heart," humor and graciousness match the size of his public and physical stature. The man who is deeply loved by his beautiful young wife, Rita, whose best friends are still those who have known him longest and best and who is (and this is something!) still a hero to his valet.

It was this very human Orson who used to wait on a side street each evening, a couple of blocks away from Columbia Studios, 'watching for his girl-friend with the same hope, love and uncertainty on his face any anxious Joe Blow wears while waiting for his own precious Tillie the Toiler. And who, when he had won her, was as nervous a bridegroom as any who ever wilted a collar or choked on his "I do." With Rita and small, chubby Rebecca Welles, he now lives in the kind of a home you'd expect, in a spectacular mansion effulgent with terraces, landscaped acreage and colossal swimming pool. At every opportunity the three of them sneak off to the kind of a place you wouldn't expect—an unaffected, two-bedroomed bungalow at Carmel. It's strictly their own, and the embodiment of all those things they enjoy most and are not to be found in the rented mansion.

Almost as familiar a Hollywood sight as Orson, is the valet, chauffeur and general man-about-Welles, known as "Shorty." Once officially recognized as the shortest man in uniform in World War I, he's still a happy little character who's got himself a very large job. His pockets bristle with well-sharpened pencils and large cigars for his boss, and snapshots of Miss Rebecca Welles for himself. One of his biggest responsibilities is keeping Orson supplied with reading matter:

"Mr. Welles and I get in the car and go to the book stores and buy up a big armful—and in a couple of days he's saying, "Shorty, I haven't got anything to read.' You wouldn't think he

Can't Keep Grandma In Her Chair

She's as Lively as a Youngster—Now her Backache is better

Many sufferers relieve nagging backache quickly, once they discover that the real cause of their trouble may be tired kidneys.

The kidneys are Nature's chief way of taking the excess acids and waste out of the blood. They help most people pass about 3 pints a day.

When disorder of kidney function permits poisonous matter to remain in your blood, it may cause nagging backache, rheumatic pains, leg pains, loss of pep and energy, getting up nights, swelling, puffiness under the eyes, headaches and dizziness. Frequent or scanty passages with smarting and burning sometimes shows there is something wrong with your kidneys or bladder.

Don't wait! Ask your druggist for Doan's Pills, used successfully by millions for over 40 years. They give happy relief and will help the 15 miles of kidney tubes flush out poisonous waste from your blood. Get Doan's Pills.

could possibly remember what was in them, reading so fast, but just ask him anything you want to know about the story!"

That tremendous energy of Orson's requires a lot of feeding and refurbishing. He requires a complete change of clothing three times a day, and "gallons" of coffee and tea, iced and hot, from early morning to late at night.

He re-fuels on an energy diet—good steaks and chops, plenty of green salads, milk with an egg whipped into it—but like most large fellows, has to watch the sweets and starches.

" 'Shorty,' he'll say—", according to the man who answers, " '—you've been eating cake again—yes you have, I can smell it. Don't come near me for an hour—you'll keep reminding me of cake and then I'll want some!' "

It's easy to see there's a rare understanding here: "What a guy—" says the fellow who knows, "—he'll be sitting in his dressing room writing his column, with the phonograph playing jazz records so loud he has to yell to make me hear him—'Shorty,' he'll say, '—you've got a faucet running somewhere. How can I concentrate with all that noise?' "

"But look, don't you put any of this down if it doesn't sound right in print—" continues Shorty, "I've got too much admiration for that man and he's too good to me, to say something that sounds wrong about him. Only the other night I could hear him coming up the hill and saying, 'Don't wake Chiribelli, he needs his rest.' Chiribelli is my last name, you know. Of course I was wide awake anyhow, because he and Mrs. Welles, and Joe Cotten and Mrs. Cotten, all decided it would make a good opera and came the rest of the way singing 'Don't wa-ke Chiri-bel-eli—chiri-bel-eli don't wa-ake.' It sounded pretty good, too—" says Chiribelli, doing his best to show you how it sounds to be immortalized in four parts.

At thirty, Welles has inherited and earned several fortunes, the speed with which he acquires money being surpassed only by the speed with which he lets go of it. Very little of it has gone into personal possessions or pleasure. He gives of his wealth in the same prodigious way he gives of himself, a quick example being the aforementioned $65,000 he put into his free-for-servicemen magic show. Too, each year some small boy with big ambitions and talents straining at his blouse-buttons, goes to Todd on a scholarship provided by the fellow who hasn't forgotten what encouragement and achievement can mean.

Distinguished, dynamic Roger Hill is still his best companion and adviser. The first trip flaming-haired Rita took with her groom was back to the tree-shaded campus he has never wanted to grow away from; the Welles loyalty and capacity for friendship being as quietly enduring as all the rest of his less-publicized qualities. For a number of years, when Broadway's most spectacular producer suddenly had something "more important to do," he could have been found back on the small, well-worn stage he started on, goading one of Caesar's eager henchmen into better graduation-play efforts with such a succinct critique as "I am not impressed!" Much of the perspiration that goes on in his old classrooms is caused by the legend of Welles that hangs there inescapably and recurringly—and the amount of inspiration, personal advice and real interest he still gives to the youngsters' movie-making and broadcasting station, couldn't be bought by a Hollywood or Broadway tycoon no matter how willingly he would pay the current Welles prices.

For the rest of the statistics pertaining to Welles the inner-man: He is an avid reader of comic strips, loves good, argumentative conversation, and never goes anywhere without taking his sense of humor along. He has an odd, easily erupted giggle that doesn't seem to be on speaking terms with his deep, resonant voice, and likes it best when the laugh is on himself.

He hesitates to name the sight that has stirred him most in his life, for fear it will sound "either arty, or maybe blood-thirsty." It was the face of a matador at a bull-fight: "The look on his face when he killed the bull—and it had nothing to do with lust or blood-letting. He was a young fellow, it was his first bull, and he'd had a very dangerous time with it. I've never forgotten his face as he raised it just after the bull fell dead at his feet, tears streaming from his eyes as he realized that he himself was still alive, and the crowd was cheering him instead of hissing as they had been. It was such a fiercely beautiful look of realization and exultation of triumph and thankfulness all in one, an intensity of feeling I have never seen on a face before nor since—"

The wags look forward to that movie biography to end all movie biogs—the Life of Orson Welles, written, produced, directed and re-lived for the screen by Orson Welles. As far as O.W. himself is concerned, so far, this is just an idle rumor. So is any prediction that he will enter politics—likewise, any prediction that he won't. It is this Welles fan's private prediction that someday he will do something of great spiritual or inspirational significance. He has a deep knowledge and love of the Bible and, since his schooldays, has also had a slight impatience with some of its complexities.

"You just wait—" says a very close friend, "—some day that fellow is going to re-write the Bible!"

The remark is made with all credit to Orson's sincerity and his deep reverence. It may be that someday he will do the really practical spiritual drama Hollywood has so far not accomplished, and the world is much in need of—a modern interpretation of the Bible that could be understood, and lived up to, by the troubled citizens of a world that has changed much since it was written—a world that could use the guidance of such a picture. As to immediate picture plans, he has none, except that he would like to use the controversial South American footage he recently purchased from RKO—the miles of reelage which RKO insisted was too expensive, and which Orson insisted was a good investment in foreign relations. . . .

Says he, "I never did intend it as a commercial venture, certainly I took enough footage for three pictures—and I may still make all three, all of them according to my own idea of what I, and the South Americans, would like—"

In the meantime, there is no definite assurance as to just what the next Welles activity will be. There is only the remark made by another Welles fan: "Betcha anything, we just get the war all over, and Welles breaks out again!"

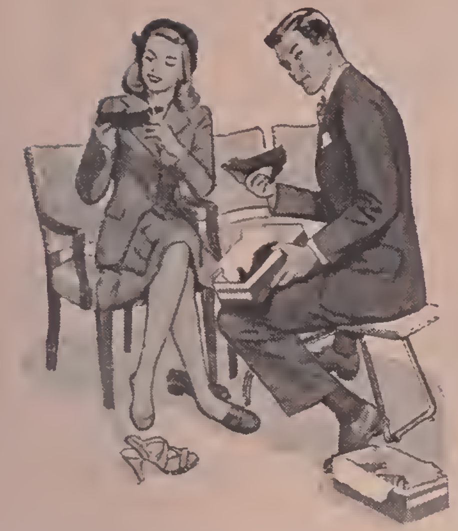
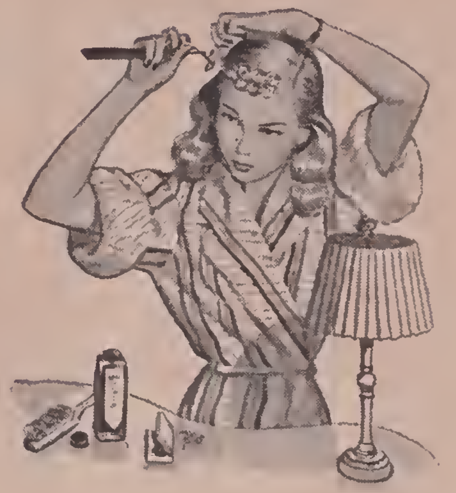
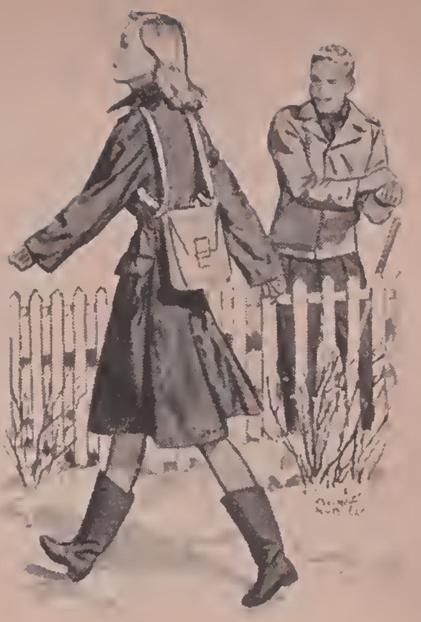
Are you in the know?







How to belittle a too-big foot?

- ☐ Wear shoes with instep interest
- ☐ Choose cut-out toes
- ☐ Shun fussy, light-hued shoes

To "shorten" king-size tootsies, mind all three admonitions above. Choose shoes with a bow (or suchlike) at the instep. Go in for open-toed, sling back types. But not for you the over-elaborate light hued models—they make your foot conspicuous. Be as cautious in choosing sanitary protection. Remember, Kotex is the napkin that is really inconspicuous, for those special flat tapered ends of Kotex don't show! The fact is, Kotex' flat pressed ends actually prevent revealing outlines. So there's no worrisome "give-away" bulge with Kotex!

Is this the technique for a—

- ☐ Water wave
- ☐ Pin curl wave
- ☐ Finger wave

You, too, can set a pin curl wave! Starting at forehead, moisten small strand of hair with water or wave lotion. Hold strand taut . . . wind "clockwise" in flat coil from ends to scalp, and pin flat. Alternate the winding direction of each row. It's smart to learn little grooming aids. And to discover, on problem days, how Kotex aids your daintiness, your charm. Now, Kotex contains a deodorant. Locked inside each Kotex, the deodorant can't shake out—for it's processed right into every pad, not merely dusted on! A Kotex safeguard for loveliness.

Do you think she's carrying a—

- ☐ Ditty bag
- ☐ Knitting bag
- ☐ Bicycle bag

Grand carry-all for those umteen gadgets you're always cramming in your purse. A large charge—the bicycle bag! No need to wait for cycling weather. You can tote this high-wide-and-handsome job practically anywhere, right now. And any day, you can be carefree, confident—when you have the plus protection of Kotex. You're confident for you know Kotex has a special safety center that won't betray you. It keeps moisture away from the sides of the pad. You're assured because you're safe—with this exclusive Kotex feature.

Should you let him pay your way if—

- ☐ It's a pre-arranged date
- ☐ You meet unexpectedly
- ☐ You never saw him before

Whether you meet him at the movies or the "Marble Slab," go dutch—unless it's a pre-arranged date. He may not have the moola to spare. And you don't want to embarrass him. Know the right thing to do at the right time. At "those" times, you're always at ease when you choose the right napkin for comfort. That's Kotex! Because Kotex has lasting softness—different from pads that just "feel" soft at first touch. Kotex is made to stay soft while wearing. And you're free from bunching . . . roping!

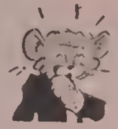
The METRO-GOLDWYN-MAYER'S LION'S ROAR

Published in this space every month

The greatest star of the screen!

We're embarrassed! Caught, as it were, with our paws down!



* * * *

Just when our Dictionary of Superlatives has disappeared, along come not one — but two magnificent M-G-M musicals ...' The Harvey Girls" (ahhhh!), and "Ziegfeld Follies" (more ahhhh!).

* * * *

"The Harvey Girls" is the romantic, wide, wild West—set to wonderful music —in Technicolor! And it stars our own honey-voiced, vivacious Judy Garland! It couldn't happen to a nicer picture.

* * * *

Besides lassoing our heart with her grand portrayal of one of the adventurous Harvey Girls, Judy sings the nation's top tune, "On the Atchison, Topeka, and the Santa Fe"!

* * * *

Supporting our scintillating Judy G. (for Glamorous, for Gorgeous, for Garland) is a swell cast of favorites, headed by John (handsome he-man) Hodiak, Ray Bolger, and Angela Lansbury. You'll love 'em all!

* * * *

Ten more top tunes, besides "Atchison", from the popular pens of Johnny Mercer and Harry Warren, earn "The Harvey Girls" a double-E award—for Excellent Entertainment! That goes, too, for the direction of George Sidney ("Anchors Aweigh") and the production of Arthur Freed ("Meet Me In St. Louis" and "Ziegfeld Follies"—see below!)

* * * *

Hold on to your heart...or you'll lose it to—"The Harvey Girls." As we did!

* * * *

And speaking of Girls leads us, naturally enough, to ZIEGFELD FOLLIES, a huge, star-studded Technicolor spectacle. Only Vincente Minnelli could have directed, only Arthur Freed produced. And only M-G-M could have brought it to the screen.

* * * *

Its roster of Stars reads like the Who's Who of Show Business from A to Ziegfeld: There's Fred Astaire, Lucille Ball, Lucille Bremer, Fanny Brice, Judy Garland, Kathryn Grayson, Lena Horne, Gene Kelly, James Melton, Victor Moore, Red Skelton, Esther Williams and William Powell! If it's true that "Names make News"—here's the Movie News of the Month!

* * * *

Flo Ziegfeld would have been proud of "Ziegfeld Follies" on the screen.

* * * *

One of the biggest follies would be your failure to attend.

So Proudly We Hail

This is the third in a series of special features dedicated to Hollywood's war veterans and men still in service—keeping up with the stars who've been away, and reporting on the many who might have been stars by now if their careers hadn't been interrupted.

ROBERT RYAN says he "entered the Marines as a simple buck private, and after only 18 months worked himself up to the rank of Private First Class." Although he makes light of his almost static status, Bob performed some very important work at Camp Pendleton, and was just about to be shipped overseas when the Japs surrendered. As a combat physical instructor, Bob taught such hair-raising subjects as jujitsu, bayonet fighting, the art of handling knives and machêtes in a deadly fashion, beach landings, surf swimming.

All this activity over now, and Bob returns to the less dangerous (but no less rugged) job of house-hunting in overcrowded Hollywood. Once he has a roof over his head, he will be back at RKO.

Bob had leading roles in several RKO pictures before he joined the Marines ("Tender Comrade"—with Ginger Rogers, and "Marine Raiders" with Ruth Hussey and Pat O'Brien), but his Marine buddies are still talking about a small part he did in "Behind the Rising Sun." Remember him as the American boxer who was pitted against the Jap wrestler in one of that picture's most dramatic scenes?

BERT HICKS might have been starring in pictures by now had not the war interrupted his career at 20th Century-Fox.

A Chicago boy, Bert was "discovered" there by a Metro talent scout; and upon graduation from high school he was snapped up by that company for "Reunion in France," "Presenting Lily Mars," "Three Hearts for Julia," and "Assignment to Brittany." Moving on to 20th, Bert had a role in the

1. Dan Dexter (nee Dan Taylor) of "Winged Victory" fame, will do a Broadway play before returning to Hollywood pictures. 2. By this time, Lieut. Henry Fonda has packed away his Navy "blues." The lovely lady is Mrs. Fonda. 3. The U. S. Navy continues to keep Bob Taylor very busy as narrator for their post-war films.

Movieland's New Picture Guide

FALLEN ANGEL (20th Century-Fox), produced and directed by Otto Preminger. A Saroyanesque - realistic mystery story based on the premise that:

Love alone can make
The Fallen Angel rise
For only two together
Can enter Paradise.

It's Alice Faye in her first dramatic role: she doesn't sing a song, she dances only a few steps (as Dana Andrews' ballroom partner), and we defy anybody to say that her being the church organist, playing Brahms and Beethoven, makes the picture "a musical."

Dana, as Eric Stanton, is not unlike the detective in "Laura"—performing with the same natural sureness, but given a part that's even better. Linda Darnell is no longer "merely beautiful" (Merely? That's understating the face!) . . . she's developed remarkably as "all this, and an actress, too." She really has!

THE BELLS OF ST. MARY'S (Rainbow Production, RKO release)—It's inevitable that "The Bells" will be compared to "Going My Way" . . . and that "The Bells" will suffer by such comparison. But forgetting its much-Oscared predecessor, we have here a very beautiful and moving picture.

It is the story of conflict between realistically-minded Father O'Malley (Bing Crosby) and spiritually-minded Sister Benedict (Ingrid Bergman); a warm and sincere story, a picture altogether worthy of its three Academy winners, Ingrid Bergman, Bing Crosby, and Director Leo McCarey.

THE SPIDER (20th Century-Fox)—An exciting murder mystery, starring Richard Conte and Faye Marlowe. Kurt Kreuger is in the cast, too . . . but seemingly as an afterthought; his part is that small, his fans will have to look quick to see him.

To be briefed as: a dramatic "thriller", laid in romantic New Orleans. Conte is terrific, Faye Marlowe (did you know the famous Fanchon, director of musicals, is her mother?) shows definite promise, and the plot rates as not good, not bad suspenseful entertainment.

THE HOUSE I LIVE IN (RKO release)—The 10-minute Frank Sinatra "Americanism" short suggested by Producer Frank Ross, directed by Mervyn LeRoy. All profits from the film are to go to organizations working on problems of juvenile delinquency.

Inspired by Sinatra's work in schools and youth groups in the cause of inter-racial and religious tolerance and understanding, it's a message presented in terms of entertainment. Frank sings two songs; the only other characters in the picture are ten teenage boys.

SPELLBOUND (United Artists) is the long-awaited Selznick International picture, co-starring Ingrid Bergman and Gregory Peck (together for the first time); a Ben Hecht screen play directed by Alfred Hitchcock. Nothing but the best, as you'll see from that lineup; and you can rate it as being "the best at their best." With psychiatry and psychoanalysis as the basis and solution of the story mysteries, it's superbly "different." Yet suspenseful, through every tense moment. And in addition to the award calibre performances of the principals, there's strictly Grade-A for excellence mention due Michael Chekhov and Rhonda Fleming.

THE STORK CLUB (Para.)—Atomic blonde Betty Hutton and team-mate Barry Fitzgerald, plus an excellent musical score, add up to good entertainment in any picture. But in "The Stork Club," it's super-entertainment. Nothing new about the plot: poor-but-honest working girl befriends down-and-out old man, who turns out to be an anonymous benefactor. Gal finds wealth leads to complications, when fiance Don DeFore refuses to understand. With Robert Benchley, Bill Goodwin and Iris Adrian for extra laughs, and Andy Russell for the croon spots.

SNAFU (Columbia)—comes from stage to screen, and nothing lost in the transfer. The trials of the 16-year old veteran-hero of Pacific warfare, who is jerked from further deeds of valor by his mother's discovery of his whereabouts; and subsequent re-adjustment of family to the bitter facts of life—that Junior no longer is a child—makes for good entertainment. With Robert Benchley, Vera Vague, Conrad Janis, Nanette Parks, Janis Wilson and Jimmy Lloyd.

GETTING GERTIE'S GARTER (Released through U.A.)—Many years have passed since this stage play was the talk of the town, but its theme—of the marital mix-ups of two young couples and the extenuating circumstances which Bing—America's best beloved actor—is back again, as genial, lovable Father "Chuck" O'Malley—and right by his side, Incomparable Ingrid, the screen's finest actress—together in the kind of wonderful roles that top anything they've ever done for heart-appeal—for tears and laughter—for great and unforgettable story!—And when Bing and Bergman sing . . . the world's in tune!

YOUR PROBLEM and MINE

by Jane Wyman

Next pic is "Night And Day" (W.B.).

Dear Miss Wyman:

I was married to a man ten years older than I, but we have been separated for five years. I am now 23, and my little girl is 8. About a year ago I met a boy, 26, whom I love more than words can tell. He wants to marry me. He tells me he loves me and I believe him—but here's my problem. I would never give up my baby and though he has never asked me to, he still never says anything about her in his letters. This boy is in a hospital, he was hurt very badly, but he wrote that they were sending him back for plastic surgery and was told he'd be as good as new. I wrote him it made no difference. It would make no difference to me if I had to work every day the rest of my life to take care of him, that's how much I love him. Do you think it fair to marry him when I have my little girl? Do you think a boy could love a girl as much as he should when she has been married previously? Please tell me what you think.

Cathy

Dear Cathy:

I believe you are getting yourself worried for no good reason at all. The boy probably thinks it is understood that you would not part with your baby, so does not mention it. However, if his letters or conduct have led you to believe that he would not be willing to have your little girl with you when you marry him, you had better bring that out in the open at once and have an understanding on the matter. He must be a mighty fine chap to inspire such love as yours, and I cannot believe he would expect you to do otherwise than be a good mother to your child. You ask if a previous marriage would make any difference. Now let me ask you a question. Would it make any difference in your love for him if he had been married before? Then that is your answer. I hope you will be very happy in your marriage to him, for I admire your unselfish spirit of devotion.

Sincerely,
JANE WYMAN

Dear Miss Wyman:

I am asking your help in all sincerity. I am 13 years old and my problem is my sister.

She is 18, and in the past year, "males" have become the important feature in her life. Once a boy comes to see her, she acts very nice, and after she has seen him approximately five times, she confesses her love to him. During this time, the same process is going on with other boys.

One of her friends, a Seabee, proposed to her and she accepted. In every letter she writes him, she professes to love him, while at home she is leading on other boys.

I do not think this is a bit fair, and I have talked to her about it, but she says that she cannot sit home and knit while awaiting her Seabee. Many hearts are being broken by her; I want to stop it.

Please tell me how to convince my sister that what she is doing is unfair.

Charlene

Dear Charlene:

You have taken on a problem which is completely out of your power to solve. Talking will do no good, for your sister is so enwrapped in her own selfishness that you cannot break through it by words.

I had a letter from another girl of her type, who is even more heartless, for she has a husband overseas, and brazenly admitted leading other men on. My heart aches for the men who have put their trust in such girls.

I suggest that you act as a balance wheel so far as possible in this situation, and just wait. The law of compensation finally acts, and one of these days your sister will get a lesson that will really hurt.

That is the only way she can be touched, and when this happens, she probably will come to you for advice and help, and you will have your chance to use your good influence.

Yours truly,
JANE WYMAN

AT COLUMBIA:

GILDA is the musical dealing with the life and times of the creator of the shimmy, Gilda Gray, starring Rita Hayworth, Glenn Ford, George Macready, Joseph Calleia, Ludwig Donath and Steve Geray.

BLONDIE'S LUCKY DAY is another in the series starring Penny Singleton, Arthur Lake, Robert Stanton and Angelyn Orr.

PERILOUS HOLIDAY is the story of dark doings in Mexico City. Pat O'Brien is cast as a dubious gentleman whose right thinking is not disclosed until the final reel, but he is suspected all along of being involved in a ring which is counterfeiting invasion money. Ruth Warrick is cast as a girl reporter who is, of all things, set to expose the counterfeiting ring. Edgar Buchanan, Audrey Long, and Minna Gombell assist in the fast action of this comedy thriller.

TERROR TRAIL is a bang-bang involving Charles Starrett, Smiley Burnette, Ozie Waters and his Colorado Rangers.

AT MGM:

THE POSTMAN ALWAYS RINGS TWICE is now in its 4th month of production, after having encountered all manner of setbacks. Lana was ill; Director Tay Garnett was ill; the company went to Laguna on location and for three consistent weeks they were able to shoot for a brief hour each day because of the unseasonable overcast.

As you remember, the script is an adaptation of the James M. Cain novel of lust and murder, and the brilliant cast includes John Garfield, Lana Turner, Cecil Kellaway (who is excellent as Thomas Gainsborough in "Kitty"), Leon Ames, Hume Cronyn and Jeff York.

BLACK SHEEP stars James Craig, Butch Jenkins, Skippy Homeier, Dorothy Patrick, Sharon McManus, Ray Collins, and Darryl Hickman. Much of the picture was shot on Boy's Ranch in Amarillo, Texas, as the story deals with the successful attempts of a Texas cattleman (Craig) to regenerate a gang of youthful hoodlums. This is, in effect, "Boy's Town" of Texas.

BAD BASCOMB will soon be finished, as it is in its third month of production, employing Wallace Beery, Margaret O'Brien, Marjorie Main, Frances Rafferty, Marshall Thompson, J. Carrol Naish, Connie Gilchrist, Warner Anderson. It is the story of the caravan trek of a group of pioneers to the west. Wallace Beery, in an attempt to escape the law, joins the wagon train and is assigned—since he is a single man—to one of the wagons occupied by single women. Naturally, he draws Marjorie Main, who is accompanied by her small granddaughter, Margaret O'Brien. When the train is beset by Indians, Beery . . . well, you'll have to see the end for yourself.

HOLIDAY IN MEXICO is being shot in Technicolor—and you won't miss it unless you are quarantined with small pox. Walter Pidgeon, as the American Ambassador in Mexico City, meets a mysterious European countess, Ilona Massey. (This is Miss Massey's first picture in far longer than we care to mention.) The romance is aided and the intrigue deepened by Jane Powell, Jose Iturbi, Xavier Cugat, Roddy McDowall and Helen Stanley.

THE GREEN YEARS is the dramatization of Cronin's precise novel and stars Charles Coburn, Tom Drake, Selena Royle and Hume Cronyn.

NO LEAVE, NO LOVE will coin money because of its male star, Van Johnson. The picture also introduces England's beautiful acrtess, Pat Kirkwood. The story deals with the experiences of a war hero (Van) who returns to that state, only to find his girl married to another man. When he is induced to appear on a radio show, things begin to improve with speed, aided by Keenan Wynn, Marie Wilson and Edward Arnold. (Incidentally, weren't Wynn and Arnold handsomely guilty of scene stealing in "Weekend At the Waldorf"?)

TIME FOR TWO gives promise of being a fast, furious, brilliant picture. Most of the action takes place on a transcontinental train; John Hodiak is a crook who is carrying five hundred thousand ill-gotten dollars between the covers of a cookbook, of all places. Lucille Ball, on the same train, is a lady of dubious honesty but moral integrity. In hot pursuit is Lloyd Nolan. Tab for future reference.

THE YEARLING, the Technicolor dramatization of Marjorie Kinnan Rawlings' vivid book, is now in its

Your standard of losing

Plumpness just isn't pictorially pleasing. So glamor-gifted girls like Mary Anderson are guided by the wise words "Watch Your Weight."

Now you may not be counting on a career in pictures but you very well may be finding that plumpness—on you—is far from pretty. With New Year, the season of sensible resolve, there should come a desire to diet. Possibly the extra padding is the result of too many parties. Then cut down to slim down.

But, if your figure problem is formidable, learn the fundamental facts and follow the rules. As Mary, our lovely model of the month advises, "Consider calorie-counting part of your health program, because real beauty begins with health."

That's why, when you're ready to reduce, you should first consult your doctor and follow his counsel. Weight control is intensely individual. It depends on the size of your bone structure, the way you live and the climate in which you live. While it is agreeable to assume that "glands" are responsible for "avoirdupois," science shows that this is seldom the case. However, should a glandular condition be the cause of your trouble, only a physician can correct it.

The first thing your doctor will want to determine is your general physical fitness. Then he might wish to measure your basal and total metabolism (the amount of energy required by your body at rest and in the full round of a day's activities). Finally, if he finds no fault with your physical well-being you will find that your food intake is too far in advance of your beauty fulfillment. Your next move is to start paring proportions.

Check up frequently and keep a firm check on your diet. See the result when you see Mary in Paramount's "To Each His Own."

Here, for your general information, is a standard chart of approximately ideal weights. No chart can list your correct weight. It is accurate only as an average. Remember, when you check with any chart, that five pounds, one way or the other, may be the normal number of pounds for you.

AVERAGE GUIDE TO APPROXIMATE WEIGHTS

4'10"	109	5'3"	121	5'8"	138
4'11"	111	5'4"	125	5'9"	142
5	114	5'5"	128	5'10"	145
5'1"	116	5'6"	132	5'11"	149
5'2"	119	5'7"	135	6'	153

Note: It is generally believed that it is healthier to be slightly over-average weight under thirty years, and under-average after thirty.

As your diet dwindles in quantity, quality and variety must remain. You need the carbohydrates found in foods like fruit, vegetables, cereals, breads and candy. They supply fuel. You must have protein foods like meat, cheese, milk, eggs and nuts, for growth and repair. Fats are fuel, too. And they help to protect and lubricate the sensitive internal organs.

To slim with success, settle for a slow but consistent rate of weight reduction. The well-balanced diet makes the Body Beautiful!

Snacks should be unsweetened. Instead of a soda, settle for a refreshing glass of lime or grapefruit juice, sans sugar.

CLIFTON WEBB says "Yes!"

Logical choice for "Dark Corner" after precise, murderous portrayal in "Laura."

He made his mind up, when he was 7: it's best to accent the positive, eliminate the negative

Webb wardrobe is notably elegant and extensive. (Above, in fancy dress for Elsa Maxwell party.)

Bea Lillie used to sing and dance with Cliff in musicals. Above, with her 21-year-old son, Sir Robert Peel, who was killed in action with British Navy.

Clifton Webb is no Hollywood yes-man. His assents came when people asked: "Can you act?" "Can you sing?" "Can you dance?" "Will you teach?" "Yes!" from him accounts for a long, varied and brilliantly successful career, although frequently when Mr. Webb said it, a lesser man would have murmured: "I don't think so," or "Certainly not!"

He is lean and handsome in an elegant and immaculate fashion, with graying brown hair, hazel eyes and a shining personality that makes you forget everyone else in the room.

He must have been like that when he was seven and his parents went to Washington on a trip, leaving their son in the care of his grandmother. The governess of the little girl next door to the Webbs' New York home interrupted the children's play one day to take her to dancing school.

The Whistle Girl

Like thunder follows lightning, a long low whistle invariably trails Jane Russell. She's a girl's girl, and a man's dream!

Blessed with charms supposed to make commercial photographers swoon between "takes"—and Jane is quite a remarkable young lady in others ways, too. She may have been a myth to moviegoers for four years—except to the few who saw the brief screening in San Francisco of her one and only picture, "The Outlaw"—but there's nothing mythical about her personality, or her talent.

It is a matter of record that Producer Hunt Stromberg hastily ordered a swim suit for Miss Russell, and had a bathing scene inserted into the script of "Young Widow," because there was such a hue and cry of protest when word got out that her wardrobe for the picture (her second, to date) would be "just tailored costumes."

My first impression, on meeting the screen star who'd been waiting so long to be seen, was of rich brown eyes, hair to match, and a manner both gracious and friendly.

"It's another example of that old formula for getting any place in life," she said, relaxing deep in a comfortable studio chair and preparing to explain how all of a sudden—after four long years—Hollywood has discovered her all over again. "It's perseverance, confidence, and patience, most of all—patience!"

A less stout-hearted lassie might have bid Hollywood farewell, after appearing in a film never generally released, and being relegated thereafter to a four-year period of unbroken obscurity. Not Jane! She was undaunted, determined.

Perhaps it was for being destined to an acting career. Her mother, Geraldine Jacoby, had been an actress on Broadway; when her daughter was born, she fondly named her after stage star Jane Cowl. (Add note on that infant item: Jane was almost born in Canada. Her parents lived in Edmonton, but her mother crossed the border to Bemidji, Minnesota, so that her first child would be born in the States.)

Later, the family moved to Burbank, California. Jane's mother formed a family dramatic group. "We had many a good time," the young star tells now, "and we learned a lot, too! We even had a family orchestra." (The "we" included her four younger brothers; Jane played piano for the group. They entertained at neighborhood dances and on amateur night programs.)

My Screen Son, Tom (DRAKE)

By SELENA ROYLE

You've noticed the amazing similarity between Selena Royle and her screen-son, Tom Drake? "Like mother, like son," laughs Selena; but it's more that they're the same kind of people

Selena Royle appears in Tom's new pic, "Green Years" (MGM).

THE first time I met Tom Drake was when we were called in for wardrobe tests, after being cast in the Wallace Beery picture, "This Man's Navy." I liked him at first sight . . . partly because we seemed to be the same sort of people. He was my screen son in that picture; he's my grandson in "The Green Years."

I thought: "Why, he even looks as if he might be my son!" Tom and I have the same shaped faces, and there's an odd resemblance between us that may have something to do with the way we hold our heads; or it may be just that we have a good many of the same ideas about life.

Tom is a worldly person, I believe, but at the same time he's singularly unsophisticated. He has great poise; he knows his own mind; he's frightfully stubborn and insists on making his own mistakes, but he's very charming, even when most stubborn. Tom's off in the clouds much of the time, but he's not too complex. He has moods of being very gay, but while he makes fun of himself and of acting, underneath it (Continued on page 88)

The place was Independence, California, and the time was just after seven . . . when a Hollywood car, occupied by a handsome man and a pretty blonde girl, limped into town.

This automobile, in keeping with the defiance of things mechanical when put to exceptional test, had been sulking along the highway for seven arduous hours. No one would have guessed, to look at it, that it was not merely a mule-blooded motor, but a marriage carriage.

The driver of the car, Richard Cromwell, said to his passenger, Angela Lansbury, "The first thing for us to do is to line up the Justice of the Peace."

After a brief delay, they located the spot in which the local judge should have been; but he was, according to reliable witnesses, "out somewhere, having dinner."

Independence, although it is a proud city, is not particularly large—so Dick set out to locate the JP's favorite restaurant. He hurried into one dining spot, saw a dignified, iron-grey-haired gentleman, and approached with proper diffidence.

"I beg your pardon," he said. "Are you the JP?" (Continued on page 70)

Vital statistics: Picture was more than a year in preparation. Cast includes Errol Flynn, Paul Kelly, Alexis Smith, Florence Bates and many others. In one fight scene alone, 20 tables, 300 bottles, 22 bar stools, 60 chairs, 2 pianos (upright), six chandeliers and 10 roulette wheels were shattered over the heads and anatomies of rugged Warner thespians. Add note of determined realism: the Los Angeles Dog Pound received an order for "one batch of fleas"; histrionic (but hygienic) canines, hired to enact bedraggled pooches of the period, had to be "loused up," so they'd scratch as did their Texas ancestors. A Spanish girl, signed for a semi-nude bathing sequence, was too pink for Technicolor, had to undergo a repaint job. The vegetable shortage created a dearth of "props," but hand-painted plaster cabbages, carrots, etc., were supplied. Initial cost was high, but there's this advantage: they can be used again, in other pictures.

1. Alexis and Errol both sing in "San Antonio." 2. The Alamo, Plaza and infamous Bella Union dance hall were faithfully reproduced. 3. Flynn and P. Kelly were ostracized when ersatz whiskey, spilled during a battle, developed a stench comparable only to fuzzy animals with the white stripe. Boys were banished from set until new clothes were provided.

Don Comes Along

HOLLYWOOD is nuts! That's axiomatic. To say nothing of its being a theme with unending variations—for example, Mr. Don DeFore.

Every year, Hollywood spends thousands of dollars hiring creatures of classic facade . . . with an eye to making them stars. Can they act? "Of course not," is the answer, "but we'll groom 'em!" (Whatever that is!)

So along comes a guy who is an actor. An actor who has groomed himself. Who has learned his business from the basement up; learned it thoroughly, well. He hasn't a perfect mug. "He's no lover!" Hollywood screams. He's neither classic nor beautiful, but the fans don't care. And while Hollywood watches, confused, the fans make him a star. Because he's Johnson or Dane Clark or Hodiak.

Or—he is Don DeFore. "A comedian," affirmed Hollywood, some years back. "Never be a leading man!"

So six foot two, 190 pound, brown haired, green eyed Don, has just finished playing leading man to Joan Fontaine, Lizabeth Scott and Betty Hutton in "Affairs of Susan," "You Came Along" and "Stork Club," respectively. Hal Wallis and Paramount did it. Even then, it wasn't easy. Oh no—not by a long shot!

"I think maybe I want you for 'Susan'," Producer Hal Wallis had said.

"I'm going to New York," replied Don DeFore. He had heard "I thinks" ad nauseum throughout his career. He'd reached a point where he refused to listen to one more "maybe." Call him cynic, if you like. With Don, it was just plain smart. He'd found out long before that playing hard to get was the surest way in the world to cadge a job.

Don had just finished a contract at Metro - Goldwyn - Mayer, where things hadn't worked out as hoped, despite good minor successes in "Thirty Seconds Over Tokyo" and "Human Comedy." He had in his pocket an offer to play in "Hasty Heart" in New York. He had rented his house, packed his family and wangled gasoline to make the trip. So when the Hal Wallis interview occurred, he ignored it almost completely.

A wire caught him in Chicago—his agent ordering him back at once. "Show it to me in writing!" wired Don, and set out for New York. When he reached New York, it was waiting: two pages of contract in a telegram, legal and binding and not one single loop-hole. But still it was not so simple. Another wire from Don. "Square me with the ration board. Get me gas. Then maybe I'll return."

Paramount squared it, and made Don a leading man—as you know perfectly well, if you saw "Susan" or "You Came Along."

To the other studios who had the chance and muffed it, a good-natured horse-laugh from Don; but a horse-laugh combined with awareness that no actor is made overnight, and you can't cheat on the time that is needed to learn an art or a craft.

And anyway, Don is used to it now, all the ups and downs. He's packed his bags often enough to do it in his sleep, clear back to the day when the acting bug first bit him.

Back home, that was. Back in Cedar Rapids, Iowa, where Don was born. (The date, August 25th; the time, some thirty years ago.) Don was one of seven children; father, who has sinced passed away, was a locomotive engineer on the Chicago and Northwestern line.

It was in Cedar Rapids that Don played baseball at Washington High, and where he got his first acting experience—in church plays, directed by his

Inside Hollywood

THE SOSHUL WHUR-RUL:

After five years of austerity, Hollywood has tied ribbons in its hair, gripped a rose in its teeth, and taken up the fandango. Such gaity, such verve, such parties at the slightest provocation!

Tops in every respect was the soireé tossed by Mr. Jack Warner (arrangements made by that able executive, Alex Evelove) in honor of Sergeant Harry Lewis, Captain Ronald Reagan, Pharmacist's Mate Gig Young, and Lt. Wayne Morris. (See pic above.)

Guests included Bette Davis, looking like an ingenue who has just returned from a summer at the beach, complete with red coat, softly curled mop of chestnut hair and plenty of sunburn; Dolores Moran, who was hobbling around on a cane because of her broken great toe; Mr. and Mrs. Zachary Scott, Zachary gracefully expressing gratitude for critical raves about his work in "The Southerner" and "Mildred Pierce"; Margo avec Eddie Albert, talking like mad about the house they plan to build soon on a knoll in the Riviera district; Alan Hale, one of the handsomest men in Hollywood, telling some of his cataclysmic dialect stories; Alexis

Sonja Henie, Louis B. Mayer, Marie McDonald and agent-husband Vic Orsatti. Sonja and Don Topping have "agreed to disagree."

QUARTET:

When Mona Freeman and Pat Nearney were standing in line at the marriage license bureau, they made friends with a young couple just ahead of them, an army lieutenant and his fiancée.

After the ceremony, solemnized in the Church of the Good Shepherd in Beverly Hills, Mona and Pat went to Lake Arrowhead for their honeymoon, and there . . . you guessed it. They met the lieutenant and his bride on their honeymoon. So the four joined forces to do household tasks. The girls prepared the food, the lieutenant gathered firewood, and Pat washed dishes.

RECOMPENSE:

Zachary Scott is known on his lot as the hard luck kid. The porcelain handle on his shower broke one morning, cutting his hand so badly that 22 stitches were taken to close the wounds. He developed a tumor of the vocal chords, which had to be removed in a very delicate operation. He threw his sacro-iliac out of joint. While taking shots to build himself up, he developed hives because he was allergic to the medication. At the final point in this woe, he was hospitalized for a few days. A new nurse came on duty, having no idea of the identity of her patient, and observed cheerfully, "Well, there are some compensations in being ill in this room! Do you realize that you are occupying a bed that was once occupied by Joan Leslie?"

PINK BOOTEES:

Brenda Marshall and Bill Holden have announced their expectation of a second child early in the summer of 1946. Their first child is a boy, Peter.

Veloz and Yolanda recently parented their third child, a little girl to dance with their two sons. Considering the cancellation of their remunerative dancing schedule in honor of the stork's three visits, Veloz and Yolanda estimate that their family has cost about a million dollars—and is worth every penny of it.

RETAKE:

Some four years ago Jacques Thiery, Hollywood man about town, brought Frances Ramsden to meet Preston Sturges. Mr. Thiery thought Miss Ramsden had an unusual quality, something totally different than the stereotyped beauty of most starlets. Mr. Sturges cast a cursory glance over the tall, spindling, hollow-cheeked girl and said, "Go home and grow up."

Involved in the growing up process was serving as a model for Howard Greer and Adrian, then Frances Ramsden was tested again by Mr. Sturges, and is now enacting the top feminine role in the latest Sturges' opus, "The Sin of Harold Diddlebock."

COURTSHIP BY PROXY:

At Metro, director George Sydney was working on "Holiday In Mexico." On a nearby set, Lana Turner was working in "The Postman Always Rings Twice." When Mr. Sydney discovered a seven-year-old Turkish boy working among the dress extras, he had the wardrobe department fancy the boy up in a miniature tuxedo and fez, and dispatched him to Lana's dressing room.

When Lana answered his timid knock, the demi-tasse sultan said, in accordance with instructions, "My name Abdullah Bey, brother of Turhan Bey. My brother loves you!"

HUMANITARIAN:

When Fred MacMurray was on location at Kanab, Utah, for "Smoky," he was living in a Lodge run by a gentleman who meant it when he said, "No Dogs Allowed." This edict didn't bother Fred in the least until he was adopted by a mongrel who showed up amid the rugged territory where the company was working. The dog followed Fred back to the Lodge that night, but managed to keep out of sight. Since Fred's room opened onto a patio, Mr. Mac. managed to sneak a bit of food to the dog. For several weeks, this clandestine friendship continued.

Knowing that he couldn't bring the dog back to Hollywood, and knowing also that the hound would get into serious trouble if he lingered around the Lodge, Fred took his charge into town and made a deal with two small boys, who agreed to give the dog a good home. "For you, Mr. MacMurray—a real, live movie star—we're glad to do it," they jubilated. End of tale.

LIFT:

Frances Morrin, brilliant Hollywood writer, is telling this exclusive story around town: Seems that Johnny Coy left the home of a friend one night, after an evening of music and yarning, and tried to start his car without success. When he stepped on the starter, the effect was like that of a very large, very hungry locust, buzzing in an empty auditorium.

Johnny got out of the driver's seat, jerked up the hood of his car, and didn't believe what he saw, or rather, what he didn't see. Some thief had stolen the engine—completely.

DOE, SEE DOE:

Cornel Wilde and his beauteous wife, Pat Knight, recently moved into the house once owned by Norma Talmadge. High in Benedict Canyon, the home and grounds have a Disney-esque, out-of-this-world air: each dawning, a doe—who is obviously anticipating a Bambi—minces down to the swimming pool for a drink.

GALLOP FOAL:

All her life, Betty Grable has wanted to become an equestrienne. Recently she and Harry James purchased a pair of gray saddle horses, a male and a mare; as a result, the James pair have been investigating all the bridle paths in the vicinity of Beverly Hills. It is hoped that this team of equines will do right by Miss Victoria James, and present her—in due time—with a colt to ride.

TOPPER:

Carole Landis, currently working in 20th Century's "Behind the Green Light," was still in New York when she was notified that she must do a fashion sitting for Esquire (a much-coveted assignment). Further, she was instructed to wear a certain turquoise outfit that best delineated the Landis charms; there was only one problem: Carole owned no hat to match.

She spent three fruitless days trying to find the proper topper, then, exhausted, she went to a cocktail party (Continued on page 54)

JANIS PAIGE

Born in Tacoma, Washington, 23 years ago; Donna Mae Jaden arrived at Warner Bros. via the talent scout method. After attracting attention in "Hollywood Canteen," she was given a part in "Of Human Bondage." Janis is 5' 5", weighs 125 pounds, has green eyes, red-brown hair—and with her role in "Her Kind of Man" opposite Zachary Scott, she's rated a star.

Best ort callectian in Hallywaad is owned by Edward G. Rabinsan—although ne doesn't paint, himself. Artist John Decker did the octual painting for Rabinson's rale in "Scarlet Street."

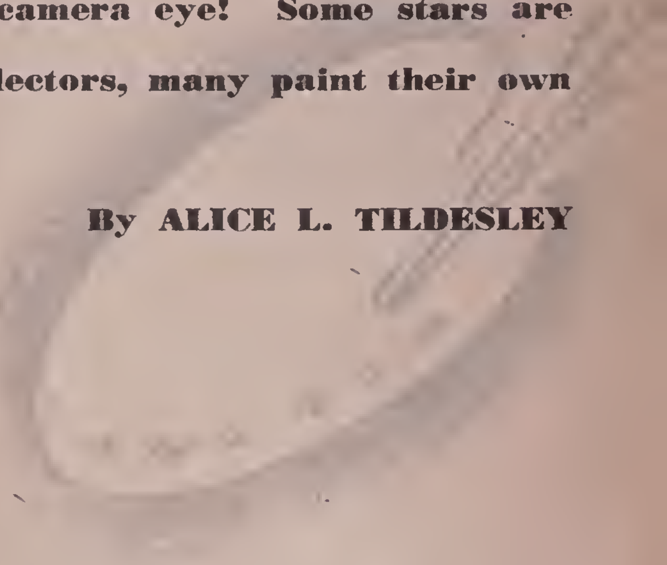
ACTING ARTISTS

Art in Hollywood—there's more there than meets the camera eye! Some stars are famous collectors, many paint their own



By ALICE L. TILDESLEY

Indian masks were picked up by Rita and Orson Welles on their last trip to Mexico.

Jeanne Crain used to sketch in watercolors on sidewalks; won art award in third grade.

California is more interested in art than is the East, according to Vincent Price, who should know as he has been associated with it on both coasts.

Hollywood goes in strongly both for creating and collecting art. We have widely recognized artists, like Richard Whorf; brilliant beginners, like Linda Darnell, and stars whose collections are famous, such as Edward G. Robinson, Hume Cronyn and Iturbi.

Vincent Price's Little Gallery in Beverly Hills, which he ran "for excitement" before picture commitments took up all his time, used to give generous space to home-town boys. Although people thronged to the gallery, four and five hundred seeing each show, they were not like some big-city crowds, passing through because an artist happened to be the fad of the moment, glancing at canvasses casually while they gossiped or compared operations; they stayed on to discuss the exhibits, argue over them and buy them.

Actors, Vincent thinks, have great sympathy for the other arts. They turn to writing, music and painting because acting is insecure.

"You never know how long you'll have a job on the stage, or whether a studio will pick up your option or cast you in a picture. You can't act unless you have a part, and you can eat your heart out waiting. Acting is only a creative art when you can do it before an audience, so except for hamming around the house—which is only showing off—you have no outlet," he explains. "That's why actors invade other creative fields."

The field Vincent once expected to invade was that of painting. As a very small boy he could enjoy himself for hours looking at pictures in the local art gallery in St. Louis while his mother shopped. When he was twelve he put down 50c to purchase the first picture he ever owned, bringing in 50c each week thereafter for what seemed at the time the rest of his life. As soon as he was old enough, Vincent studied art, but he must have been singularly clear-eyed, for he was in his early teens when he decided he had no unusual talent. He kept on studying in order to understand technique, and for a space gave lectures on art at the Riverdale Country School in New York City. He had a theory that the arts are all man leaves behind him and thus they reveal much about each period of history. Under a dictator, he contends, art is smothered and generally worthless, but when a country is free, it's stimulated and flowers.

While the actor was playing on Broadway in "Victoria" with Helen Hayes, and later in "Angel Street," former students used to surge backstage to thank him for stimulating their dormant interest in painting. Vincent has always encouraged young artists. Seven years ago, when an unknown youth named Bernard Perlin was having a tough time eating, and Vincent was not so affluent as he has since become, the actor tided the artist over a dull period by engaging him to paint a bathroom mural. The mural was brilliantly executed. How the artist has developed is apparent in his war sketches.

James Warren, now starring in cowboy roles at RKO, was a commercial artist with studios of his own before he entered films, four years ago. Since coming to Hollywood, Mr. Warren has had a one-man show at the Little Gallery, and is giving one shortly at another gallery.

"At our place, Warren showed very saleable stuff," commented Vincent. "He had marine sketches of Nassau and tropical islands, interesting and colorful. Katharine Hepburn, George Cukor, Lee Tracy and Bob Montgomery were among those who snapped them up, I remember."

"James Whale used to do flower paintings. Now he's gone in for theater stuff, scenes at Santa Monica—exciting things that hold you before his canvasses." Vincent is not particularly fond of flower paintings, but he bought one of Vlaminck's with the first money he ever earned. He still has the picture, and he and Edith Barrett, his wife, decorated the master bedroom in their new home around it.

The veteran Lionel Barrymore's etchings are the finest ones Vincent has ever seen. According to this expert, Richard Conte, who has just painted his very first picture, shows great promise.

"I think of art as essentially a man's medium," he confessed. "Our actresses do excellent work, too, but to me, an actress' personality is (Continued on page 68)

Hollywood's favorite indoor sport is gilding the lily. To do this, the town takes some attractive person (male or female) puts her before the public, finds that her personal charm creates a following—and then proceeds to make her into something completely unbelievable.

Take the case of Lana Turner, for instance. Lana was picked up by an agent because she was sweet, pretty, and quiet. Hollywood discovered that she could be something else, too: she could be sensational. And, being Hollywood, the village went overboard. For three or four years now, as a result, you have been reading stories about Lana and seeing pictures of Lana which made her into a paper doll; a girl with nothing but beauty, whose life was spent in such glittering surroundings that she wasn't even human.

Well, kids, Lana is not like that. (No one else is, for that matter). Instead, she is one of the most human gals in town; and in private life (for she respects her studio's wishes enough to play along with them in public) Lana is exactly the girl she was when she was first discovered: a sweet, pretty, quiet character whom you would like very much.

Actually, the emphasis must be on the word "quiet," for—believe it or not—Lana rarely goes to night clubs. Yes, I know you have seen an occasional magazine picture of her in evening clothes. But they probably were worn for a premiere or something like that; and to Lana or any (Continued on page 73)

SHOOTING STARS . . .

So-o-o delightful was the Saturday night Western Dance given by Ross Hunter in honor of Judy Canova, with whom he had just finished a picture at Columbia titled—improbably enough—"Hit The Hay."

Guests parked their cars at the Bel Air gates, and were driven to the party spot on a hay rack that groaned along behind two white horses. The playhouse, borrowed by Ross for the evening, was decorated with pumpkins, corn stalks, and hay. The guests came in costume, so there was everything in evidence from a fairly frightening Indian to a girl in a short red sun suit.

Marjorie Reynolds, prettier than ever with her hair dark instead of blonde, wore western riding togs, as did her dashing husband, Captain Jack Reynolds. Hurd Hatfield brought Virginia Hunter, and Bob Anderson brought Buff Cobb. Andy Russell and Della Norell were there, and the Sinatras.—By FREDDA DUDLEY.

GREGORY PECK...

Letters to His Son

EDITOR'S NOTE: On location for the filming of "The Yearling," Gregory Peck spent two months in Florida; not the Florida of the tourist, but the state of the native. During that time, he recorded his impressions in a series of letters to his young son, Jonathan. We print the letters herewith.

Hello, Son:

Well, here your mother and your dad are, just about as far from California as it is possible to get and remain on American soil. We've missed you; missed that call you give us around six a. m., missed the mixing of your formula, the cooking of your vegetables, and a dozen other things. However, we're storing up some good stories for you.

Florida is a fabulous state. The land itself is sandy and the highest elevation in this district is 90 feet above sea level. One of the loveliest sights in the world is a grove of oak festooned with Spanish moss, standing restless in a silver-grey blur by moonlight. I examined some of the Spanish moss; to glance at it, one would say—from California experience—that it was a dead growth, but when I broke open several of the tendrils, I found the center vital and green.

The cypress trees are fascinating. Because their roots can gain no secure hold in the swampy earth, they do what your mother described as crocheting themselves through the ground. (Continued on page 78)

Once upon a time, Greg wanted to build boots.

The natives were on-the-spot with helpful technical advice.

He'd like to be a producer. Met Mrs. Peck while acting in K. Cornell show.

Pals: Claude Jarman Jr., 10-yr.-old Nashville boy, was chosen to portray "Jody" Baxter, Greg's screen son.

I remember Christmas

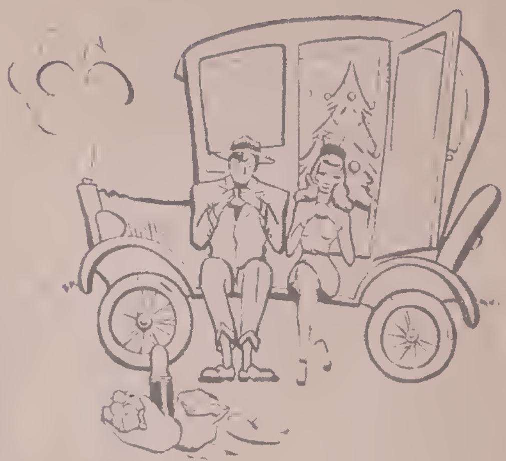
By

AVERY CARROLL

Santa Claus got strict instructions from Sharyn Moffett.

What Christmas out of your life, to date, do you remember most vividly? What brings tinsel to your veins and a quick catch in your throat? What precious recollection is brought back, nostalgically, by the pungency of pine, the tinkle of a distant bell, the shout of crimson ribbon against sharp green leaves?

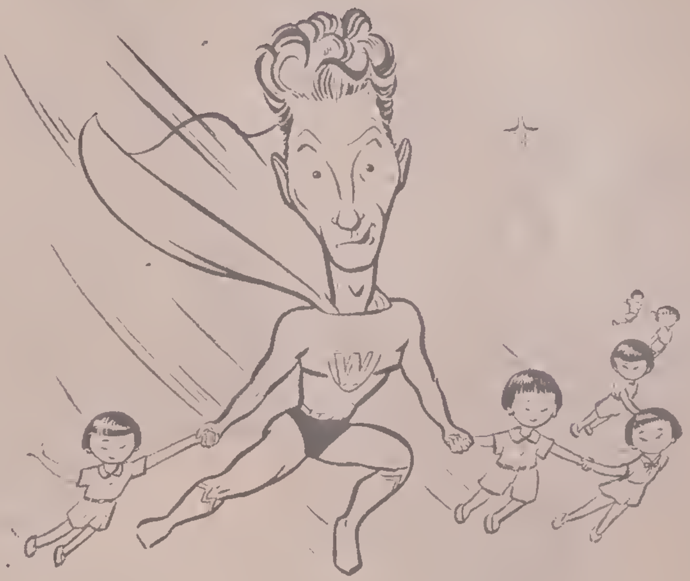
But before you answer in the quiet of your heart, here are some Hollywood Christmas stories that we think you'll enjoy and cherish.



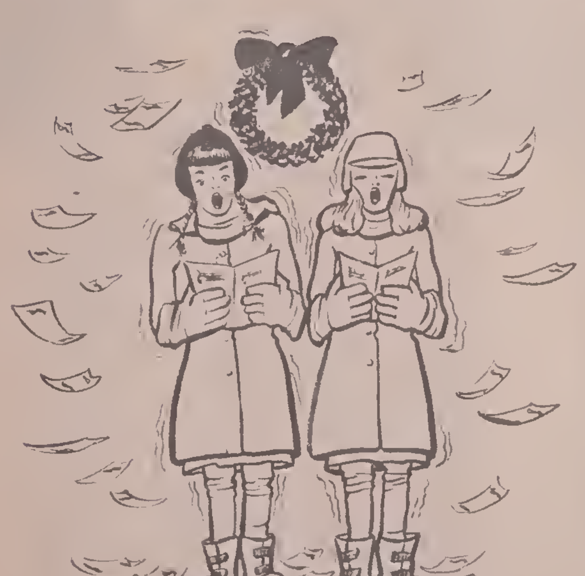
Mark Stevens and his girl spent Christmas on a vacant lot.

The Christmas that Mark Stevens will remember forever was the first he spent in Hollywood. Now that he is working opposite Joan Fontaine in RKO's "All Brides Are Beautiful," it is fun to look back, but that initial Southern California Christmas failed to be grim only because Mark exercised his resourceful sense of the unique.

He was homesick, because it was his first holiday away from his family, and he was broke. But he had a girl friend (later she became Mrs. Stevens). And he had a sackful of dreams.



Chinese orphans sang for Danny Kaye's troupe in Shanghai.



Virginia Mayo collected $200 singing carols—for charity.

Christmas morning, he rolled out at four; the room in which he was living was cold and he lacked enough blankets for his bed, so he decided he would be more comfortable to be up and dressed and about the business of the earth's greatest holiday.

He telephoned his girl friend's apartment, said gaily, "Merry Christmas—let's go to five o'clock mass!"

Anticipating JUNIOR JACKSON

Deanna Durbin is practicing lullabies for her "coming attraction"

Universal's sound stage for the production of a gay comedy to be entitled "Because of Him" is also fondly called, by beaming members of the publicity department who loooove that picture title, "The Stork Club."

Both labels are fair. During the first few weeks of the picture, Mr. Franchot Tone, already father of one, was anticipating his second. Since his elder child was a boy, he insisted (thinking the stork would hear him, no doubt) that his second should be a girl. He conferred on names with his leading lady, Deanna Durbin. "We're going to call our girl, Theodora," he opined. "And we'll shorten that to Teddy. I think Teddy Tone is a terrific name."

"And if it's a boy?" queried Miss Durbin.

"Well—er—in that case, I guess he'll be Thomas Jefferson Tone, and we'll call him Tommy."

Deeply interested in this pre-christening conference were Red Christy, the associate producer (former All-American at California), who was awaiting the birth of his second child, and Glenn Tryon, about to become a father for the first time.

Came the day when Franchot Tone was called to the hospital. The next morning he reported to work with the announcement that Thomas Jefferson Tone had checked in successfully. "So, I'll give you the name we had picked out for our girl," he told Deanna.

"Teddy Jackson," said Deanna thoughtfully. "Hmmm, I don't know. If it's a boy, I think Jeffrey Allan will be perfect, and we'll call him Jeff. Jeff Jackson. But Teddy for a girl . . . well, I think I'll ask my fans what they think."

Take it away Poughkeepsie. Take it away Denver and Dallas and The Dells. It's up to you; deadline about April 15.

As deeply interested as anyone you could mention is Deanna's young nephew, Dick, who is now four. He and his Aunty Deanna recently spent a Saturday at a junior carnival in perennial operation in the westerly section of Los (Continued on page 52)

The rumors have been flying thick and fast that Harry James is really breaking up his orchestra for good. Though Harry has said he is just taking a vacation, there are many who insist he is disbanding and will only get a group together for recordings now and then. I do know that Harry wants to remain on the Pacific Coast, and is tired of traveling, but I think he will compromise and play one-nighters in the Hollywood area, or short dates. He is too smart a business man to give up the baton permanently. However, Kitty Kallen is definitely leaving Harry to go out on her own. She has had all sorts of offers, but will probably play some theatres first.

Angeles. They rode the ferris wheel and merry-go-round. They tried out the miniature train that snorts through tunnels and roars over Disneyesque causeways. They tried to win a kewpie by knocking down milk bottles.

When they reached the home of Deanna's sister, Deanna was somewhat wearied by the day's excursion, but Dicky was ready for a few fast games of ball in the backyard. "No, darling," objected his mother. "Aunty Deanna is tired. She's played all day."

"Well, she never used to get tired. I'm going to ask her if she's tired. Are ya, huh? Huh?"

Aunty Deanna said, after a sigh, that she was actually somewhat weary. Dicky settled down, but he was far from satisfied. That night, when he was being put to bed, his mother decided to have a conference with him. "The reason Aunty Deanna gets so tired is simple: She's going to the hospital to have a new baby."

"Oh. A baby sister!" exclaimed Dicky, enormously pleased. Since the new baby in his own family was a girl, he has reached the conclusion that only little sisters are in the stork's repertoire. "How soon does she get this baby sister?"

"Next spring. After Christmas," explained his mother.

Dicky looked relieved. "That's a long way off," he observed. "She won't have to start getting rested up to take care of that baby until after Christmas. She and I can have lots of fun yet."

Up until the present time, Deanna hasn't "dreamed" anything about her baby, but time may correct that omission. That is meant literally: Deanna dreams about things, and the dreams come true. For instance, before she and Felix Jackson were married, Deanna began to dream about a house. In that mystical land through which the sleeping mind wanders wide-eyed, she found exactly the sort of home she had always wanted. Oddly enough, she said nothing about it to anyone. When she would awaken in the morning it would be with that obscure happiness that forestalls discussion.

One day Mr. Jackson said to Deanna, "I'm seriously considering the purchase of a house out in Pacific Palisades. I won't describe it, nor recommend it. I want you to see it and reach your conclusion."

They drove around the curving drive and parked before the door; Deanna was helped out by her gallant husband, but she was so busy looking at the house that she forgot to meet his eyes in their usual visual greeting. "Felix—this house!" she breathed. "It's the one from my dreams!"

Naturally, they bought it.

There is some sort of extra-sensory perception in the story of their wedding rings, too. Several months before their wedding date was set, Felix Jackson brought a velvet box to Deanna one evening, saying, "Something to keep me always near you." The gift was a large, antique, diamond-studded locket.

When Deanna snapped it open, to examine the picture sections, she found her wedding ring: Platinum, set with baguette diamonds so perfectly cut that no inner setting was necessary; each stone slid in tightly beside the other, forming a circlet of light.

When they reached Las Vegas, Nevada, where they were marred, both Deanna and her husband presented one another with a jeweller's box. Deanna hadn't wanted a double ring ceremony, nor had she wanted her husband to wear a wedding ring; she has an antipathy toward that custom for men. However, she did want him to have a memento, so she had selected a heavy gold band, carved octagonally, for the small finger of his left hand.

Felix Jackson opened his package first. After examining the ring, wonderment struggling with incredulity in his expression, he said, "Open your package, my dear. This is amazing."

The gold ring he had bought for Deanna to wear for sports and on informal occasions was an exact duplicate, in feminine size, of the ring Deanna had selected for him.

This meeting of the minds and squaring of the tastes, coupled with their identical viewpoint on what constituted a satisfactory home, served as a cherished wedding omen.

Mr. Jackson was, at one time in his romantic, exciting life, a critic of musical and dramatic presentations in Berlin, and his column of comment carried much authority. Naturally, he knows a great deal about the classics, but he is somewhat baffled by American jazz. Deanna, who has a terrific sense of humor that fools a good many people because her best comments are delivered dead-pan, likes to tease her husband by introducing an occasional jive term in her conversation.

Because Mr. Jackson speaks both French and German in addition to English, Deanna has been learning a few words of German. So far, her working vocabulary consists of "bitte"—please; "shon"—nice; "liebling" — darling; "schats" — sweetheart, and "Ich liebe dich"—I love you. Which is certainly an ingratiating approach to a language!

Deanna's hairdresser speaks some German, so she likes to coach Deanna during the hairdressing session each morning, then to send her to Mr. Jackson with some sentence. Deanna learns the comments phonetically, and has no idea what she is saying. There have been times, furthermore, when Mr. Jackson failed to translate, but roared over his wife's patter.

On one of California's baking October days (temperature 100, humidity 48) a wilted Deanna approached her husband and, in German, suggested that the weather was censorable and why didn't he send her home.

"Nien," said Mr. Jackson, "and that you can understand without an interpreter."

Mr. Jackson, who has produced Deanna's last three pictures, spends a good deal of time on the set, and this presence gives rise to a number of gentle, attractive passages between Deanna and her husband. One day she was to make an exit from a scene, toward the camera. Standing behind the camera, watching every detail with the intensity of a good producer and the interest of a good husband, was Felix Jackson.

Walter Pidgeon and daughter Edna turned out for the Cugat Concert at the Hollywood Bowl.

When Deanna left the scene, she set out in determined fashion, passed the camera, passed the head sound man with his "mixing machine," passed the script girl, and walked into her husband's arms. There she grinned up at him, then turned around and returned to the photographed area of the set for another take.

When a new set-up is being perfected, involving light changes and the moving of wild walls, Deanna, her husband, and Charles Laughton get together in a remote corner of the stage, or in Deanna's trailer, and the men talk. Both express themselves concisely and both have positive ideas. While they engage in a verbal fencing match, Deanna listens and, sitting behind her husband, presses in the natural wave in his hair. This would bother some men, but Mr. Jackson never loses contact with the discussion, remains unperturbed by Deanna's admiring attention.

Usually, it is the wardrobe of a bride that comes under the scrutiny of a new husband; he finds this dress too low-necked, that too snug. He makes some changes.

But in the Jackson household, it is Deanna who has imposed some alterations. Mr. Jackson was inclined to adhere, with masculine devotion, to his dark blue suits and his black sox and ties. One of the first gifts Deanna bought for him was a roaring crimson knitted tie. Shortly afterward, he was making arrangements to have his wedding suit tailored. "I want to go with you to select the material if you don't mind," said Deanna.

Mr. Jackson gave her a sly look. "And now what? First a red tie; then . . . ?"

"A gray suit," said Deanna. It is a handsome outfit and exceedingly becoming. While he was completing details of the purchase, Deanna wandered to another department and ordered six bow-ties for the gentleman who was rapidly becoming "solid" Jackson. She also selected an additional assortment of knitted cravats: A delft blue, a yellow, and a green.

In the matter of Junior's wardrobe, Deanna has done very little so far. She wanted to finish her picture first, then concentrate upon the thrill of being an expectant mother. But she did start knitting a series of soakers; and although she can't cast on her stitches, she has kept Helen Broderick and her sister busy with beginning the fluid-drive diapers, while she finishes them.

If Deanna's fans have anything to say about Junior, he will be a musical prodigy. Since the news of Deanna's expectations was announced, mail has been pouring into Universal; gist: Congratulations, and suggestions.

Although the majority of the writers admit that there is probably no scientific way in which to insure a youngster's inheriting its parents' prime abilities, still they hint that Deanna should keep up her music during this period, and hold "rhythmic thoughts."

Relax, people—and be comforted by a recent scene in the Jackson household. Few people know that Felix Jackson is a brilliant pianist. In the evenings he has long made it a custom to sit idly before a piano and play for an hour or so.

Until this particular night, Deanna had never sung with him. Oddly enough, she is self-conscious about performing before her relatives or close friends. Whenever it has been suggested that she sing before a group of intimates, she has begged out of it by saying that she wanted to relax, or she didn't want to be a ham, or some such excuse.

The truth was that she was afraid that she'd be overcome with shyness and sing badly.

However, on this particular night she was feeling uncomfortable, and had been lying on the lounge resting. "Isn't it about time for the symphony?" her husband asked. (The local gas company broadcasts the classics from eight until ten every evening except Sunday.)

"Not for about thirty minutes," Deanna answered. "Why don't you play?"

There was a book of Stephen Foster on the piano, and he began to perform the tender old tunes. Deanna forgot her discomfort;. she could feel song welling in her throat as gladness swells the heart. Arising, she strolled over to the piano and began to sing. "Old Folks At Home," "Carry Me Back To Old Virginny," and such melodies filled the room. They sang and piano-ed their way through the entire volume of familiar music.

Then they turned to Gershwin: "Summer Time," "It Ain't Necessarily So" from "Porgy & Bess"; they tried some Cole Porter and some Jimmy McHugh.

From that they went to Gilbert & Sullivan.

Finally, winded and parched, the Jacksons paused. "About time for the symphony, isn't it?" said Mr. Jackson for the second time.

Deanna laughed. "We'll have to catch it tomorrow night—look at the time!" She held up her watch to show a flat twelve o'clock.

They had been singing and playing for over four hours.

So, whether heredity or environment is the more important factor makes little difference; Junior Jackson is going to be hep harmoniously, one way or the other.

And speaking of "Winged Victory," remember the engaging "Pinkie" in the picture? That was Lieut. Don Taylor, henceforth to be known as DON DEXTER. Don has been in the Army since 1942, and has to his credit the Distinguished Flying Cross, an Air Medal with one cluster, the Soldier's Medal, an Asiatic Theatre ribbon with three battle stars, and a Presidential Unit Citation.

The courage and initiative that Don displayed in the service is a carry-over from civilian life. He was studying law and dabbling in dramatics at Penn State University, when he decided that acting was what he really wanted. Since he liked horses and rode exceptionally well, he left the University and hitch-hiked to Hollywood with one thought in mind—to become a star of Western films. But Hollywood had other ideas. MGM gave him small dramatic parts in "Girl Crazy" and "As Thousands Cheer." Don also appeared in "The Red Dragon," a Charlie Chan chiller for Monogram; but he got his big chance to show what he could do when Moss Hart cast him as Pinkie in "Winged Victory."

Three years in the service haven't dampened Don's dramatic ambitions. His present schedule calls for a play in New York this season.

Anne had located another member of the company who adores walking in the rain, so this hearty pair set out through the gloom. Accustomed as they were to the genteel and thoughtful storms of Southern California, they had no notion of the performance possible in the Rockies. Thunder crashed around like the explosion of granite boulders trees whirled in the wild dance; the rain flooded down like Niagara.

For several minutes the two nature lovers plodded doggedly down the trail; then the trail turned to soup. In the distance, lightning split a tree.

Both Anne and her escort were waiting for the other to admit consternation. Finally, from the tail of her eye, Anne studied her friend's saturated face.

"Yes!" said he. "Definitely."

They swung around and scorched for shelter with the rest of the troupe.

Clouds Roll By." This is the movie based on the life of Jerome Kern, and stars Judy Garland and Robert Walker. Speaking of Frank, I must go all out and do a rave over his short, "The House I Live In." It is one of the best things of its kind I have ever seen, and Frank does a sincere job of delivering the important message of tolerance and Americanism. Don't miss it.

Paramount's glamour movie, "Stork Club," will be shown any day now, and all you Andy Russell fans can have your first glimpse of your hero. Andy plays the part of a drummer in the picture, and sings one number alone and one with Betty Hutton.

Claude Thornhill was discharged from the Navy and went home to Indiana for a rest. His doctors have advised him not to take on the responsibility of a band for at least six months, so in the meantime he may take a radio conducting job or an arranging deal at one of the picture companies.

WHAT'S BRISK ON THE DISC:

DECCA:

In the yuletide spirit, here's a Bing Crosby album called "Merry Christmas." There are ten records in all, including such favorites as "Jingle Bells" and "Santa Claus is Comin' To Town," with the Andrews Sisters; "I'll Be Home For Christmas," "White Christmas," "Let's Start The New Year Right," "Silent Night," and "Adeste Fideles."

Bing also has a single record, on which he shares honors with his sidekick, Bob Hope. Together they romp through "Put It There, Pal," from the picture "Road To Utopia," and "The Road To Morocco," from the movie of the same name.

Ethel Smith, the electric organ lady, has waxed a new one, with her Bando Carioca. It's "The Parrot On The Fortune Teller's Hat," and "Paran Pan Pin." She played both selections in the film, "George White's Scandals."

"I'm Glad I waited For You" and "My Guy's Come Back" have been recorded by Helen Forrest, with Mannie Klein's orchestra. Incidentally, the latter tune was written by Ray McKinley and Mel Powell when they were overseas with the Glenn Miller band.

Jimmy Dorsey and his orchestra are in with "Come to Baby, Do," sung by Inez James, and "Autumn Serenade," lyricized by Dick Culver. Inez is the widow of Joe McMichael, one of the Merry Macs. She wrote "Come To Baby, Do," and sang the number for Jimmy, with the result that he asked her to do the vocal on his record.

COLUMBIA:

Woody Herman's new one is right up his alley. It's the novelty, "Put That Ring On My Finger," which was written by Sonny "Gotta Be This Or That" Skylar. On the reverse we find a rhumba a la jazz, "Bijou," which is strictly instrumental, with a fine trombone solo by Bill Harris.

Gene Krupa and his orchestra do "That Feeling In The Moonlight" and "I Don't Want To Be Loved." Buddy Stewart and Anita O'Day share vocal honors on the first side, and Buddy goes it alone on the second.

VICTOR:

Spike Jones, believe it or not, has made an album for the kiddies—"The Nutcracker Suite." The City Slickers and a chorus give musical assistance.

Freddy Martin and his orchestra have done "Symphony," with a Clyde Rogers vocal, and the new novelty hit, "In The Middle Of May," with the Martin Men.

It seems there's always a Gershwin album, and this time it's called "Gershwin Hits," with Artie Shaw and his band. There are eight sides and some of the tunes are "I Was Doing All Right," "Love Walked in," "But Not Me," and "Soon."

"It Might As Well Be Spring" and "Give Me The Simple Things In Life" are the selections on Sammy Kaye's latest platter. Billy Williams sings both sides. Billy has been signed as a solo artist by Victor, too, and his first offering couples "When I Marry, I'll Marry For Love" and "You're Nobody Till Somebody Loves You."

The mighty Duke Ellington has a "do" twosome in "Come To Baby, Do," and "Tell You What I'm Gonna do." Joya Sherrill sings both.

CAPITOL:

Andy Russell has two new ballads—"I Can't Begin to Tell You," from "The Dolly Sisters," and "Love Me," which he sings in "Stork Club."

Betty Hutton does two of the numbers from "Stork Club," "Doctor, Lawyer, Indian Chief," and "Square In The Social Circle."

"The Last Time I Saw You" and "What A Deal" are the tunes on Martha Tilton's newest. "The Last Time" side looks like a real hit.

MAJESTIC:

Here's a label I haven't mentioned before in the column, because so many of the readers haven't been able to purchase the records in their

"Stork Club" stars B. Hutton, with A. Russell.

CAPITOL HITS from HOLLYWOOD

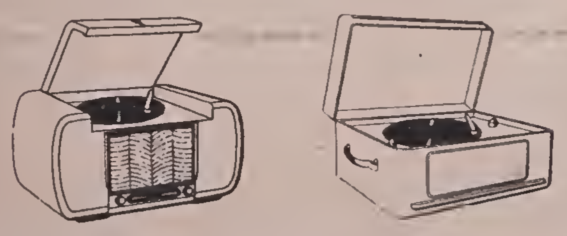
Smart tune-picking, plus Hollywood screen and radio talent, have combined to make Capitol Records top hit-producers of the U.S.

A Baritone-Brains-Beauty threesome: tall, dark and handsome ANDY RUSSELL, left; BUDDY DeSYLVA, Capitol's showman-executive with the knack of picking hit tunes; and BETTY HUTTON, Capitol's vivacious vocalist. (Andy and Betty currently star in DeSylva's film "Stork Club.") Capitol Records, in the heart of musical Hollywood, is unique in its wealth of screen and radio talent.

Three of the many reasons for Capitol's spectacular success, and team-mates on many a Capitol recording: brilliant arranger-leader PAUL WESTON, left; sweet-singing JO STAFFORD; and Capitol president JOHNNY MERCER, singer, song-writer of Ac-Cent-Tchu-Ate The Positive, Laura, G. I. Jive and On the Atchison, Topeka and Santa Fe.

Big, friendly TEX RITTER is a favorite western star of the youngsters of America. Famed for his songs and stories of the open range, Tex records exclusively for Capitol.



COMING SOON—CAPITOL PHONOGRAPHS!... a complete line of fully electronic table models, battery-electric and spring-wound portables—all designed by a record manufacturer to assure brilliant reproduction.

community. But Majestic's distribution is much better now, and improving all the time, so from now on I'll tell you about their releases each month.

The Five De Marco Sisters, who are heard regularly on the Fred Allen program, have made "It's Been A Long, Long Time" and "Chico, Chico" as their first record. Keep your eye on these kids—they're really headed for big things.

Bud Freeman and his orchestra, featuring Ray McKinley on drums, have waxed "Where Have You Been," and "I Got Rhythm." Bud and Ray get together on another disc for a special little thing called "The Atomic Era."

JAM NOTES:

Bobby Byrne, whose band was just beginning to click when he went into the service, has been discharged. He is in New York organizing a new outfit. . . . Dick Stabile is another leader who is back in civvies, but he is planning to do his baton work in radio. He is suing his ex-wife, Gracie Barrie, for disbanding his orchestra while he was in the Navy. . . . Billie Rogers is leaving Jerry Wald in a few weeks and will get together a small combination of her own. . . . Randy Brooks has been signed for the Pennsylvania Hotel in February—a swell break for a swell new band.

I saw Ray Eberle when he came up to New York a few weeks ago on a quick leave. He was in town when brother Bob was on the Chesterfield show, and they had a wonderful reunion. Ray looks wonderful, and says he doesn't mind the army at all. . . . Vaughn Monroe, who is a motorcycle fiend, is impatiently waiting delivery on a private plane which he ordered months ago. Vaughn already has his pilot's license. . . . Despite all the rumors, Gene Krupa and his ex-wife, Ethel have not remarried yet. . . . Sgt. Johnnie Desmond will make records for Victor as soon as he gets out of the army. . . . Jo Stafford has had a horse named after her at one of the eastern tracks. And the owner also has a horse named Betty Grable. Incidentally, Jo will make some extensive film tests on her vacation in California, and will probably wind up on the Twentieth Century payroll.

Dick English, the well-known writer, who has done excellent stories on musicians and bands, will write the screen play for the Dorsey Brothers' picture, "My Brother Leads A Band." Production has been held up because of the strike, but it looks like they'll get started after the first of the year. . . . Freddy Martin, who has been playing the Ambassador Hotel in Los Angeles for years, and Guy Lombardo, who has been doing the same thing at the Hotel Roosevelt in New York, have worked out a deal whereby they will trade for a few weeks out of the year. . . .

Well, kiddies, that does it for this time. I'll see you next month. In the meantime, if you are troubled over any little musical question, drop me a line, and I'll do my best to answer you. But remember, not too many questions, and be sure to enclose a self-addressed stamped envelope. Just write Jill Warren, Movieland Magazine, 535 Fifth Avenue, New York City, 17, New York.

fifth month of production, starring Gregory Peck, Jane Wyman, Claude Jarman, Jr., Jeff York, Henry Travers, and June Lockhart.

STAR FROM HEAVEN is being shot in the new Cinecolor, which is water color to Technicolor's oil painting. The players are Marshall Thompson, George Tobias, Jim Davis, Clem Bevans, and a handsome horse named "Silversnip." The story deals with the love of a Texas boy for his horse; the boy becomes a G.I. and is sent to the South Pacific, where he meets a horse that reminds him of his Texas pal. His problem is colossal: How to get the horse home when the G.I. is returned. This department's brother is currently involved in the tortuous problem of getting a pup and a monkey home from Okinawa, so we are in sympathy with a man so resourceful as to attempt to transport a horse.

AT MONOGRAM:

THE FACE OF MARBLE is a bootiful picture with plans to scare you to death through the courtesy of John Carradine, Claudia Drake, Maris Wrixon, Rosa Rey, and Willie Best, who is also scared.

AT PARAMOUNT:

TAKE THIS WOMAN is a romance set in Victorian England with Teresa Wright, Ray Milland, Virginia Field, Anthony Quinn, Reginald Owen, Sir Cedric Hardwicke, Joan Winfield, Melville Cooper, Michael Dyne and Rhys Williams. The plot has to do with Teresa Wright's knowledge of a murder; if she tells what she knows, she will clear Anthony Quinn—who is innocent; at the same time, if she talks, she will ruin Ray Milland's political career and destroy herself by scandal. Now are you curious?

MONSIEUR BEAUCAIRE is the new Bob Hope picture, also graced by the presence of Joan Caulfield, Marjorie Reynolds, Hillary Brook, Patric Knowles, Joseph Schildkraut, Reginald Owen, Cecil Kellaway, Mary Nash, Constance Collier, Howard Freeman, Leonid Kinsky, Fortunio Bonanova and Yoka D'Avril. There isn't much point in trying to outline the plot of a Hope picture for two reasons 1) if you are like this reviewer, you will see the picture no matter what it's about; 2) the plot and dialogue of a Hope picture change from day to day, especially if Mr. Crosby happens to be visiting the set.

LOVE LIES BLEEDING is the welcome-home picture of Van Heflin, who portrays a gambler double-crossed by Barbara Stanwyck. Lizabeth Scott is the love interest.

THIRD AVENUE is being shot in low-key, and it is a vignette of the lives of those who live on this street in New York. Barry Fitzgerald is the Irish father, and Diana Lynn is his daughter. Between scenes, Diana may be seen saying earnestly to Mr. Fitzgerald, "Now, how do you think I should play this next scene?" Barry tells her, or at least gives suggestions. Also working in the picture are that lovable lug Sonny Tufts, Dick Foran, John Litel, James Burke, Erno Verebes.

AT PRC:

ONCE AND FOR ALL marks the return of lovely Nancy Coleman to the screen after far too long an absence. The story takes place in New Orleans during the Mardi Gras, and cavorting in costume are Philip Reed, Felix Bressart, Margaret Lindsay and Regis Toomey.

SIX-GUN FOR HIRE is a giddyap with Bob Steele, Syd Saylor, Jean Carlin, Bud Osborne, Roy Brent and Dorothy Whitmore. Whoa!

AT RKO:

THE SILENCE OF HELEN McCORD is the new title for SOME MUST WATCH. Although this label still isn't tops, at least it will be more easily remembered than the former appellation. This is, as you probably remember, the story of a mute (Dorothy McGuire) whose life is saved by the mother (Ethel Barrymore) of a surgeon (George Brent) who believes that all imperfect things should be eliminated from life. You won't miss this one, frightening thesis, low-key lighting, suspense and all.

FROM THIS DAY FORWARD is the delightful poignant comedy of the adjustment of a service man and his wife, starring Joan Fontaine, Mark Stevens (who are called locally "The Ulcer Kids" because of a certain gastronomic difficulty), Arline Judge, Wally Ford, and gifted Rosemary De Camp.

BADMAN'S TERRITORY is a story of the days of the James' and Dalton gangs, with pulenty of bang-bang and action straining the muscles of Randolph Scott, Ann Richards, Lawrence Tierney, Isabel Jewell, Gabby Hayes, Morgan Conway, and James Warren.

THE STRANGER is another of those powerful "Woman In The Window" things involving the various talents of Edward G. Robinson (a particular pet of this department), Loretta Young, Orson Welles, Richard Long, Philip Merivale, and Martha Wentworth.

LADY LUCK is an ace of a picture, dealt off the top of the deck. In short, Robert Young is a gambler and so is Frank Morgan, who owns and operates as a pet, his niece, Barbara Hale. Naturally, the Morgan gambler gets into trouble, and only the romantic combination of Young and Hale fetch him out.

THE DREAM OF HOME is the story of a marine's adjustment to civil life, paralleling the emotional adjustment of a war widow. Guy Madison is the discharged devildog, and Dorothy McGuire is the widow.

THANKS, GOD, I'LL TAKE IT FROM HERE is the title that will soon, for purposes of good taste and escape from any suggestion of blasphemy, be changed. It is in its first week, with Claudette Colbert and John Wayne.

NOTORIOUS is a spy thriller laid in South America. Ingrid Bergman is suspected of being a German agent, and is hotly pursued by Cary Grant as a sub-rosa American agent. Very exciting.

Ava Gardner, George Raft in "Whistle Stop." Ava recently wed Artie Shaw, bandleader.

AT REPUBLIC:

CONCERTO is being shot in Technicolor. As you might suspect from the title, it deals with the lives of two hopeful-greats who hope to conquer the piano and the world simultaneously. The two are mother and daughter, the mother played by Catherine McLeod, the vivid newcomer so highly touted by Frank Borzage. The daughter is also little-known: Vanessa Brown. Included in the cast are beloved Madame Maria Ouspenskaya, Philip Dorn as the maestro, Bill Carter (hero of the North African Campaign), Felix Bressart, Fritz Feld, and Honey-pie Elizabeth Patterson.

THE FRENCH KEY is a mystery-thriller in its first week of production with Albert Dekker, Evelyn Ankers, Mike Mazurki, Frank Fenton, Marjorie Manners and John Eldredge.

CONQUEST OF CHEYENNE is clearly cowboy-Indian stuff with Bill Elliott, Alice Fleming, Bobby Blake, Peggy Stewart, Ton London, Kenne Duncan and Jay Kirby.

CRIME OF THE CENTURY is a business intrigue in which, corporation officials will be astonished to learn, the body of the president of a large organization is preserved in ice for an extended time in order to allow certain nefarious minions to gain control of the stock. The Wall Street Journal should hear of this one, with Stephanie Bachelor, Michael Browne, Paul Stanton, Martin Kisleck, Betty Shaw and Mary Currier.

MURDER IN THE MUSIC HALL is a whodunit on ice with Vera Hruba Ralston, William Marshall (just out of uniform), Nancy Kelly, Bill Gargan, beautiful Ann Rutherford, and Julie Bishop, who had to dodge Errol Flynn at Warner Brothers, but is now side-stepping flying skates.

AT 20TH CENTURY-FOX:

SENTIMENTAL JOURNEY is a story of show business that turns metaphysical. John Payne is married to Maureen O'Hara; they have an adopted daughter, little Connie Marshall. After the death of Maureen, she returns in Topper fashion and adjusts the life of her broken-hearted family. William Bendix, Trudy Marshall and Charles Russell also are working under the direction of Walter Lang.

CENTENNIAL SUMMER is being shot in Technicolor, and is a musical drama which takes place in Philadelphia in 1876, the year in which Colorado (lift your hat when you speak of the West) was admitted to The Union. Colorado does not figure in the picture, but your reporter was born in the Centennial State and never misses an opportunity to plug same. But, back to Centennial Summer. Into a charming family consisting of Dorothy Gish (mother), Walter Brennan (father), Jeanne Crain, Linda Darnell, and Barbara Whiting (the three daughters) there arrive for a visit a glamorous French aunt (Constance Bennett) and a mysterious French count (Cornel Wilde). That cast alone should make you start stuffing your piggy bank with admission pennies.

SHOCK is a thriller-diller in which a girl witnesses a murder, then confides the experience to a man she trusts . . . who turns out to be well, we won't spoil it for you, but latch onto this one. Cast includes Vincent Price, Lynn Bari, Marjorie Henshaw, Frank Latimore, Michael Dunne, Ruth Nelson, Rene Carson, Roy Roberts and John Davidson.

AT UNITED ARTISTS:

THE SIN OF HAROLD DIDDLEBOCK is a picture that you'll see simply because you'll have nightmares about that title if you don't delve into its secret. It is, of course, a Preston Sturges special, and marks the return to the screen of Harold Lloyd. Also coping with Sturges and Lloyd are Frances Ramsden, Raymond Walburn, Rudy Vallee, Edgar Kennedy, Jimmy Conlin, Arline Judge, Lionel Stander, and Franklin Pangborn.

A SCANDAL IN PARIS is keeping those able troupers George Sanders, Signe Hasso, Carole Landis, Akim Tamiroff, Gene Lockhart, Alan Napier, Alma Kruger, Pedro de Cordoba, Jo Ann Marlowe, and Fritz Leiber busy.

A NIGHT IN CASABLANCA is the Marx Brothers picture. Anyone who could unravel the plot of a Marx Brothers picture could unbend pretzels with one hand while crocheting Harpo's wig into a rug with the other.

AT UNIVERSAL:

CANYON PASSAGE is the Technicolor super-duper western being made by Walter Wanger. On location for weeks and weeks and weeks were Dana Andrews (who took his handsome wife, Mary, along), Brian Donlevy, Susan Hayward, Patricia Roc, Andy Devine, Hoagy Carmichael, Rose Hobart, Ray Collins, Ward Bond, Fay Holden, Dorothy Peterson and Ray Teal.

BECAUSE OF HIM is the story of an imaginative girl who pretends to be the beloved of a celebrity in order to get a theatrical break. Deanna Durbin, Charles Laughton, Franchot Tone, Helen Broderick, Donald Meek and Stanley Ridges are the factors adding up to hilarity.

TANGIER is another out-of-this-world epic with veils, caravans, and dire doings involving Maria Montez, Robert Paige, Sabu, Preston Foster, Louise Allbritton, Kent Taylor, J. Edward Bromberg, Billy Green, and Reginald Denny.

HOUSE OF DRACULA is the thriller in which John Carradine is made up in iridescent greenish-black paint. Scared stiff are Lon Chaney, Martha O'Driscoll, Onslow Stevens, Lionel Atwill, Ludwig Stossel, Glen Strange, Poni Adams and Charles Judels.

TERROR BY NIGHT will end well because of Sherlock Holmes and Dr. Watson with his needle, to wit: Basil Rathbone, Nigel Bruce, Alan Mowbray, Martin Kisleck, Dennis Hoey, Renee Godfrey, Geoffrey Steele, Billy Began and Mary Forbes.

AT WARNER'S:

THE VERDICT is the British-scene thriller with Sydney Greenstreet, Peter Lorre, Joan Lorring, George Coulouris, Paul Cavanagh, and Rosalind Ivan. The sets observed and dialogue heard during the production of the picture would indicate that it's to be something special in the melodramatic line.

THE END

result in the pursuit of the expensive garter, a gift to a one-time sweetheart—is still a guarantee for laughs. Dennis O'Keefe and Marie McDonald are the stars, but they get lots of help from Barry Sullivan, Binnie Barnes, Sheila Ryan and J. Carrol Naish.

SAN ANTONIO (W.B.)—Lavish Technicolor production and intense acting by Errol Flynn, Alexis Smith, Paul Kelly, S. Z. Sakall, Victor Francen and others, gives this nostalgic opus of the Wild West a sure-fire chance of delighting the neighborhood movie circuits. Story has to do with Texas cattle wars of 1870; see pages 28-29 for further details.

THE DALTONS RIDE AGAIN (Universal)—and once again, bite the dust. A series of flashbacks tell the story of the Dalton boys (Lon Chaney, Noah Beery Jr., Kent Taylor and Alan Curtis). Martha O'Driscoll and Alan supply the romance.

SHE WENT TO THE RACES (MGM)—A group of scientists devise a system based on mathematical calculation, to beat the horse races. Science gets off to a bad start when Professor Virginia Gifford meets race tracker James Craig, but love finds a way. Ava Gardner, Edmund Gwenn, Sig Ruman and Reginald Owen are on hand for the photo-finish.

TOO YOUNG TO KNOW (W.B.) involves two youngsters caught up in the web of hasty marriage. Misunderstandings lead to divorce; but in spite of Time marching on, the war, a Junior let out for adoption, and some double-crossing by siren Dolores Moran . . . Bob and Joan grow up in time to live happily ever after.

THE LAST CHANCE (Released through MGM)—is a Swiss production that reaches a new high in excitement and true-to-life story telling. Fear driven refugees scurry across Europe to escape the gas chambers and guns of Nazi-supermen and are led to safety by an English and American soldier—both escaped prisoners of war. The sacrifices of the two men offer the representative Europeans not just a "last chance" to escape annihilation, but a "last chance" to cure the ails of their world by emerging from the crisis as stronger and more worthy peoples. The idealism of the two soldiers and their efforts to help their fellow men, regardless of creed, race or color, ends on a note of hope for a unified group of foreign countries and a determination for everlasting peace.

SARATOGA TRUNK (Hal Wallis Prod.—released through Warner Bros.)—Completed about two years ago, this period piece (from a novel by Edna Ferber) will remind you of another opus known to all and sundry as G.W.T.W. Instead of the fiery Vivien Leigh, we have Ingrid Bergman—replete with black wig—as a tempestuous Creole of questionable birth who plays fast and loose with the staid citizenry of New Orleans, in the year 1875.

There is nothing ethereal about Bergman's performance, but she does prove her versatility as one of the most distinguished actresses extant by her earthy characterization of the beautiful and headstrong Clio Dulaine. Gary Cooper doesn't have a chance, when she is bent on ensnaring him. And ensnared he is—in short order!

Flora Robson, Jerry Austin, John Warburton, Florence Bates and a host of other competent actors are well cast in their parts. Sam Wood directed.

FRONTIER GIRL (Universal)—Yvonne DeCarlo and Rod Cameron in an action tale (vintage 1890) of the western village of Red Horse Gulch. Andy Devine, Fuzzy Knight, Andrew Tombes, Sheldon Leonard are adequate in their supporting roles.

HIT THE HAY (Columbia) presents Judy Canova as a swinging opera singer. When she finds she can't hit the high notes, she makes 'em low-down. Ross Hunter, Paul Stanton and Dorris Merrick are included—just for the hayride!

LIFE WITH BLONDIE (Columbia) is no bed of daisies—as Dagwood has found out! Dagwood's dog Daisy gets dognapped, and among those to the rescue are Penny Singleton, Arthur Lake, Larry Simms, Jonathan Hale, Ernest Truex and Veda Ann Borg.

DAKOTA (Republic) is a lusty Western starring John Wayne and Vera Hruba Ralston, who has substituted fancy dress for her skating costume. Mike Mazurki plays a half-breed and Walter Brennan, Ward Bond, and Ona Munson are competent, as always, in supporting roles.

YOLANDA AND THE THIEF (MGM) is a great big musical extravaganza in Technicolor that just doesn't come off. It has all the ingredients—Fred Astaire, Lucille Bremer and Frank Morgan heading the cast; directed by Vincente Minnelli, dances staged by Eugene Loring, and based on a story by Ludwig Bemelmans.

Miss Bremer is lovely to behold and provides a graceful dancing partner for Fred Astaire (who plans to retire from pictures). But, what should have been a charming light fantasy turns into a dull, plodding routine plot. The heaviness of the whole thing is relieved only by the deft performances of Mildred Natwick, as a slightly pixillated femme, and Leon Ames.

SWING PARADE OF 1946 (Monogram) is a musical valentine with large doses of song from Gale Storm, Phil Regan and Connie Boswell. The Three Stooges are in there slapping each other around, and Ed Brophy adds to their dead-pan doings with his sad eyes and pugnacious jaw. The Bands of Louis Jordan and Will Osborne take turns playing for the customers.

FRONTIER FEUD (Monogram) employs all the known devices of the Western and the services of those two old-timers, Johnny Mack Brown and Raymond Hatton. You have to have "love"—so Dennis Moore and Christine McIntyre get together after the required number of mishaps.

THE FLYING SERPENT (PRC) is feathered too, in this fantastic murder mystery taking place in New Mexico among the fabulous treasures of the Aztec emperor, Montezuma. George Zucco plays an archeologist who uses the flying serpent to do away with anyone who gets too close to his guarded treasures. You won't believe it—even after you see it!

PEOPLE ARE FUNNY (Pine-Thomas, Paramount release) is based on Art Linkletter's radio show of the same name. Radio sponsor Rudy Vallee (who is comic just by adding a pair of black rimmed glasses) is looking for a new radio show. Ozzie Nelson and Philip Reed are both after the account, and both are trying to sell Vallee Jack Haley's "People are Funny" program. Helen Walker is the girl in the middle, who succeeds in playing one end against the other to come out "the winnah!"

LIGHTNING RAIDERS (PRC) stars "King of the Wild West" Buster Crabbe. It's all about a mail robbery at Oak Flats. Al (Fuzzy) St. John and Mady Laurence wear their spurs as though they were born to the saddle. Well, why not?

HOW DO YOU DO (PRC), said The Mad Russian (Bert Gordon) to the corpse as it quietly disappeared. Practically everyone in this mad, mad film plays "himself" or "herself." There's Harry Von Zell, Cheryl Walker, Frank Albertson, Claire Windsor and Keye Luke—and they're all suspected of murder!

FOLLOW THAT WOMAN (Pine-Thomas)—Wife Nancy Kelly has sleuth-leanings and gleans crime info from the somniac-gurglings of her detective spouse, William Gargan. Thereby hangs the tale, and eventually the murderer. Hubby solves the crime in spite of help from Nancy, Ed Gargan, Regis Toomey and Don Costello.

Gale Storm is in "Swing Parade of 1946."

Reading in bed;
Forgetting to eat when absorbed in my work or my hobbies;
Preferring to drive my car myself;
Delegating responsibility for details;
Trying for perfection, whether or not I reach it.

I ENJOY
Biographies of musicians and artists, stories of travel and adventure;
Hot, spicy Spanish food, and
Those succulent Chinese dishes served in this country—I have no idea whether they serve them in China or not;
Attending art gallery shows, especially those of new artists;
Playing tennis.

I REMEMBER
The first time I drove the family car. I was too young to have a license and was never allowed at the wheel alone, but my mother and stepfather were away and there was the car in the driveway! . . . I had a wonderful time, rolling through town, stopping at my favorite drugstore to toss off a soda, then out on the road again. . . . I lost count of time, or else the family got home sooner than they were expected, for they were waiting for me when I drove happily up on the driveway again. . . . Let's forget what happened next!

MY FIRST CRUSH
Was a boy who went to grade school with me in Texas, and who danced like a whiz (I thought).

MY FIRST AMBITION
Was to be a teacher, because I adored my Texas school English teacher, Ruth Zant. I don't think I actually considered the rewards of teaching, or the labor involved; it was just that I wanted to be just like Miss Zant.

THE TURNING POINT IN MY LIFE
Came when I was fourteen and decided I wanted to go into show business. No one in the family had ever been connected with the theater, and I thought myself very daring when I entered a Charleston contest. I won it, and was on my way.

I'M EXTRAVAGANT ABOUT
Records for my phonograph: I have practically every classical Columbia and Victor record now;
Hats: I love the big-brimmed ones, the smart, saucy little ones; the crazy hats; those that are high-crowned, those with feathers, and those that are mere wisps of tulle or veil. . . . I love hats!
Buying things for Christmas: I like to find exactly the right gift for each person on my list.

I DO NOT BELIEVE
In Fate or Luck, because I consider such beliefs pagan.

I DON'T CARE FOR Shopping;
Brussels sprouts;
Small talk;
Stuffy rooms;
Card games.

I LOVE
To paint, to make charcoal drawings, to sculpture. I have never

If only this young wife
DIDN'T THINK SHE 'KNEW IT ALL'...

Ignorance of these Intimate Physical Facts has wrecked many a happy marriage!

What a different story if only this young wife knew the REAL TRUTH about intimate feminine hygiene. If only she realized how important douching two or three times a week often is to feminine cleanliness, health and marriage happiness. If only her knowledge of douching was modern, scientific and up-to-date!

And it WOULD BE if she'd use ZONITE in her douche because no other type liquid antiseptic-germicide of all those tested is SO POWERFUL yet SO SAFE to delicate tissues. Just ask your own Doctor.

Principle Discovered By Famous Surgeon and Renowned Chemist

In this day of enlightenment—it's ridiculous to even think any well-informed and careful woman would use weak, homemade mixtures of salt, soda or vinegar in the douche. She certainly should know by now that these 'kitchen makeshifts' DO NOT and CAN NOT give the great germicidal and deodorizing action of ZONITE.

Yet ZONITE is positively non-poisonous, non-burning, non-irritating. It contains no phenol, creosote or bichloride of mercury. You can use ZONITE as directed as often as necessary—it's HARMLESS!

All Drugstores—No Prescription Needed

ZONITE actually destroys and removes odor-causing waste substances. Helps guard against infection. It's SO POWERFUL no germs of any kind tested have ever been found that ZONITE will not kill on contact. You know it's not always possible to contact all the germs in the tract. BUT YOU CAN BE SURE that ZONITE immediately kills all reachable living germs and keeps them from multiplying. Buy ZONITE today!

taken lessons in any form of art, but I've always had fun sketching. I spend time between takes on the set making caricatures or pencil sketches of interesting faces.

I USED TO
Like to fix up ice-cream sodas and build fancy sundaes at my ice-cream bar in the playroom—and I still do!
Invent dance routines while I listened to dance music—I still do. It relaxes me to turn on the radio and try out new steps.

THE NICEST THING THAT WAS EVER DONE FOR ME
Wasn't one thing, it was two.
As a rule, at the end of a picture, the star of the film gives presents to the crew. It's a great honor when the gift-giving is reversed.
In "Tom, Dick and Harry," the crew surprised me with a .410 gun, knowing I like to shoot at targets.
In "The Major and the Minor," the crew had a bronze bell cast for my Oregon ranch. It wasn't the value of the gifts, it was the thought behind them. I still glow when I think of them.

I HATE
To write letters;
To get into arguments;
To decide what I want to eat when I'm working;
People who keep fussing about unimportant things.

I HAVE FUN
Discussing current questions with people who know what they are talking about;
Playing those quiz games that are supposed to improve your vocabulary;
Swimming;
Dancing;
Lying in the sun;
Riding in an open car.

I'M FOND OF
The color blue;
Walking in country roads;
Starlight;
Working with clay;
Fishing;
Boating;
Almost anything you can do in the open air.

THE GREATEST THRILL
Of my working life was winning the Academy Award for "Kitty Foyle."

SOME DAY I'D LIKE TO Write the words and music for a popular song;
Travel all over the world. England, France and Switzerland are first on my list of places to see, but I'd go on from there. I've never been abroad. I had a world trip planned before the outbreak of war, and now it looks as if that dream might come true.
Produce pictures. I plan to become a producer in association with my mother, Lela Rogers. Wouldn't it be wonderful to win an Academy Award with one of our own pictures?

THE MOST IMPORTANT PERSON IN MY LIFE
Is my husband, Jack.

THE FIRST THING I NOTICE ABOUT A MAN
Is his behavior toward his wife. Is he more interested in paying attention to the other women present, noticing their dropped handkerchiefs, the chilly wind, the heat, or whatever may affect their comfort—or does he think first of his wife? Does he show that he enjoys being with her? . . . The same thing goes for a single man and his attitude toward the girl he is escorting.

THE FIRST THING I NOTICE ABOUT A WOMAN
Is the reverse of what I notice about a man. Is she interested in attracting other men, or is she contented to please her husband? Does she try to give him a happy time, or is she taking his attention for granted and looking for other adventures? . . . The same thing goes, if a girl is single and is out with an escort.

MY FAVORITE
Songs are "People Will Say We're In Love" and "Dancing In The Dark"; Author is Somerset Maugham;
Composer is Rachmaninoff, for some moods; for others, I enjoy Tchaikowski;
Food—oh how can I choose? Fried chicken, mashed potatoes, gravy, steak, green salad, ice cream—and more ice cream.
Picture is the one I'm going to make tomorrow.

I WISH
Now that we have peace, we could find a medium of exchange other than the dollar. I could be wrong, but I think that would solve a good many tough problems.

"Van," grinned Mr. Johnson.

The skeptical kindergarten kid studied Van for several minutes. "You're teasing me," he diagnosed. "Van isn't a name. A van is what you move furniture in. When we moved, a van took my bicycle from our old house to our new house—so there!"

SHARP COOKIE:

Did you know that Charles Boyer's stand-in is named Fig Newton? He swears that it's his correct, legal, and born-with-it tag.

At least it's a change of fruit; Mr. Newton's most illustrious forebear was involved, you may remember, with apples.

UN-DECCA-RATED:

Friends who have heard him sing, and fans lucky enough to have tuned in on his guest appearance with Frank Sinatra, will be happy to scream that Alan Ladd has one of the ten best popular male singing voices in America. Decca has waxed three recordings, but they have not been released because Paramount objects. This is one of the chief causes, according to Hollywood rumor, of the difficulty between Alan and his studio. You might be able to help Alan by obliterating Paramount with a snowfall of mail begging for release of those recordings.

MORE DARNED PUN:

Robert Shayne's going-away present to his wife, when she left for a Georgian visit with relatives, was a diamond wristwatch bearing the inscription, "Love For All Time."

On the set of MGM's "Black Sheep," dapple-nosed young Butch Jenkins burst from the schoolroom, waving a slip of tablet paper.

To Jimmie Craig, Butch gloated, "I just did four pages of takeaways."

"Yeah? And what might 'takeaways' be?"

Butch's forehead creased. "Oh, gosh—you know that. Five takeaway four is one. Nine takeaway three is six. Takeaways—you know!"

FINALES:

Did you know that Ella Raines and Kenneth Trout have separated, and that a divorce is being arranged?

Michael St. Angel and Mary Holiday found marriage no heavenly holiday and will terminate their ties.

SOCK-O!

Mr. Bill Edwards recently opened a parcel—the gift of fans—and unfurled a pair of incandescent red socks. The girls (students in High School) had knitted the socks, and had embroidered on them in blue and white thread, the titles of six of Bill's pictures.

Hanging the socks on his dressing room mirror for luck, Bill admitted that he was touched to the sole.

Anne Baxter's sleek car recently was involved in a traffic accident. As a result, Anne is in possession of two new somethings added: (1) a cast on her left hand because of a broken finger; (2) an anecdote. Seems that

Before After

"What Happened

WHEN I LOST 38 POUNDS!"

—as told by Mrs. Ann Weir of East St. Louis, Ill.

"When I was married," says Ann Weir, "I weighed 127. But after I had my fourth child, my weight went up to 166. I had what men call a 'bay window.' I read reducing diets, tried reducing exercises. But all my efforts brought no results.

"For two years I kept reading about the DuBarry Success Course, which you follow right at home, but I feared it would be expensive. When I found how little it cost, my husband gave me the Course, and with my doctor's approval, I started. In six weeks I lost 22 pounds, kept on and lost 16 more—right where I needed to lose them—9 inches off my abdomen, 6 off my waist, 6½ off my hips.

"People had always told me I had a nice complexion, but it has improved 100%, and what I learned about make-up has been a revelation. So here's what happened when I lost those 38 pounds: I regained my slender waistline, I wear my clothes with assurance, I have more energy—and I look ten years younger. Far from being expensive, the Course has been an investment that has brought wonderful dividends in health and happiness."

HOW ABOUT YOU? Haven't you wished that you could be slender again, hear the compliments of friends, wear youthful styles, feel like a new person? The DuBarry Success Course can help you.

It shows you how to follow at home the methods taught by Ann Delafield at the famous Richard Hudnut Salon, New York. The plan is intensely practical. You get an analysis of your needs, a goal to work for and a plan for attaining it. You learn how to bring your weight and body proportions to normal, care for your skin, style your hair becomingly, use make-up for glamour—look better, feel better, be at your best.

Why not use the coupon to find out what this Course can do for you?

the other car involved in the minor smashup was a weary old jalopy with accessories fastened by hairpins. Several of its more fanciful gadgets were scattered by the impact, whereas Anne's heavier car suffered little scuffing.

The senior "teen" owner of this gow job emerged from his vehicle, glared at Anne, and observed bitterly, "I might have known I'd meet up with a Cadillac!"

GOOD EGG:

The news that Jim Flynn, husband of Dorothy Haver, was on his way home caught the Havers without their guestroom finished. Frantically, June, Dorothy, and Mrs. Haver drove to the station to meet the returned service man; Dorothy and her husband took a suite at a hotel, while June and Mrs. Haver rushed home.

First, they spent several hours stitching up drapes and hanging glass curtains; then (because of the linen shortage) they transferred the fresh sheets from June's bed to the guestroom. After that, they decided that they had inadequate supplies for a really rousing Welcome Home breakfast, and—at two in the morning—drove to an All-Night Drive-In and tried to cajole the proprietor out of half a dozen eggs.

Sitting at the counter was an officer who decided that two girls (Mrs. Haver looks like June's older sister) who were roaming around at that hour in search of eggs and milk must be over-stimulated. He drew them aside to say, "Look, kids, I don't want to have to run you in. Go on home and forget this silly notion of trying to buy groceries at a Drive-In. Have some black coffee and beat it."

Laughing, June explained the situation. The officer thought it over, reached a decision that the story was sober and lucid. "Tell you what: my mother owns a little chicken ranch. I'll get a dozen eggs from her and bring them to you, if you girls will go on home," he said.

The Havers, triumphant with two bottles of milk, went home. At five A.M. the officer arrived with a dozen eggs for the breakfast of a returned G.I.

No, they were not—as you may suspect—hard boiled, a fact that proves the local gendarme force to be a fine body of men.

GRAND GIFT:

Two days before Angela Lansbury was to celebrate her birthday, her husband, Dick Cromwell, said, "Darling, a piano will be delivered here this afternoon. Since we're to have a group of our most intimate friends as dinner guests to celebrate your birthday, I thought it would be nice to rent a piano for the occasion. Someone is sure to ask you to play."

Angela is an accomplished pianist; so, during the festive evening, she gratified the guests by doing several piano concerts.

The following morning, when she came downstairs, she found a card on the "rented" piano: "With all the love in the world—Your husband," said the birthday greeting.

WARNING TO A BASICALLY NICE PERSON:

Guy Madison was given his first break in "Since You Went Away." You remember him as the sailor who finally joined the happy combination of Jones & Walker. Recently, his career has been given another elevator treatment under the impetus of the starring role in "The Dream Of Home."

Rumor says Jane Withers and John Doll are a new twosome. Above, Lt. A. C. Lyle.

Guy has a great many friends about town who are puzzled by a certain new attitude. This is just a friendly warning to him: stay as sweet as you were.

REPORT ON PETER:

Peter Newton Ford is keeping his mother, Eleanor Powell, very busy. Eleanor rolls out each morning at six, prepares or heats Pete's formula, bathes the young gentleman, prepares his father's breakfast, waves a fond goodbye, then puts young Ford to bed for a morning nap. For some time, Eleanor's life has been devoted to her home and the welfare of her young son, but occasionally the movie star in her nature rears a lonely head.

When the telephone rang one afternoon lately, and Eleanor answered, an ingratiating voice asked, "Is this Eleanor Powell?"

Instantly a number of thoughts raced through her mind. No, she thought, she couldn't possibly do a benefit. No, she couldn't start a new picture. No, she couldn't go on a camp tour—after all, Peter Newton was cutting teeth. All her motion picture defenses marshalled themselves. "Yes, this is Eleanor Powell," she responded cautiously.

Said the dulcet voice on the other end of the wire, "When Mr. Ford comes home, will you please ask him to telephone his agent?"

"Surely," said Eleanor with alacrity.

After she had hung up, she realized that she was deflated. The call had not been for her. That unknown voice hadn't asked her to do a benefit, nor a camp tour, nor a personal appearance. She laughed at herself—but rather lightly.

OBJECT LESSON:

This is a delicate story.

As you probably know, Dorothy Lamour and her husband, Major Bill Howard, own a ranch near San Bernardino. On this ranch they had a porker, feminine gender, enceinte of condition. One afternoon recently, one of the ranch employees informed the maid that piglets were being ushered into the world. Mrs. Howard, unaccustomed to country life, hurried down to the barnyard. She was reverently interested, since she, herself, is a prospective mother.

Somewhat later she returned to the house, rather whitefaced. To the maid she said in a small, tired voice, "Twelve, Twelve new children. What a responsibility!"

WHERE LIES THE HEART?

Local columnists have made much of the fact that Bette Davis occasionally dates her ex-husband, Ham Nelson. However, those who know her well, realize that Bette is an urbane human being who believes that it is entirely possible for a divorced husband and wife to be good friends. The Davis twinkles of the romantic eye, however, are entirely reserved for Corporal Lewis Riley. Awaiting the showing of the brilliant Eisenhower film, "The True Glory," she said excitedly, "Wouldn't it be wonderful if I should see Lou? After all, he was nearby when this entire picture was made; he might be in some of the backgrounds!" And when a friend said, "I hear that you've been seeing Ham," she answered casually, "Yes, I've seen him a couple of times. He looks fine."

JUDGMENT:

Because Jeanne Crain is a minor, the law requires that her contract be reviewed by a judge of the municipal court. Recently she appeared before Judge Joseph Vickers and was quizzed about the terms of her contract with 20th Century-Fox; the ramifications of options, scaled wage increases, impounded bonds, guardianship allowances, and agency fees were gone into thoroughly. Jeanne never faltered; she answered each question fully and with assurance.

Afterward, Judge Vickers observed that she was the most intelligent and most accurately informed petitioner of her age, ever to appear in his court.

NEIGH, NEIGH!

Dick Haymes owns a Palomino horse named "Pappy," and it is no exaggeration to say that Dick's interest in the photogenicity of "Pappy" is greater by many many degrees than his concern for his own camera appearance. Recently a magazine made a number of studies of Dick riding "Pappy" and submitted the pictures to Dick for O.K. He tossed out several, causing a studio representative to protest, "But, Dick, why throw away that picture? It's one of the best candids I've ever seen of you."

Dick nodded. "It's all right of me, but look at "Pappy," it's bad for him. See the angle of the legs? I can't have "Pappy" looking like a plug, you know."

Ordinarily, when a picture is "killed," rejection is indicated by tearing off the corner of the print. Dick wasn't satisfied with this routine, however. He tore the refused shots into several pieces. "Somebody is likely to say, "Those are swell of Dick, let's shoot them through anyhow'," he grinned. "So I have to protect 'Pappy'."

Roy Rogers' fans flocked to the N. Y. Rodeo to see the King of the Cowboys and Trigger.

LA VIA GAI:

Very suave soireé was that cocktail party recently given by Carole Landis in her new home in Beverly Hills. Carole wore a short white brocade skirt into which was tucked a broad-shouldered, bracelet-sleeved, high-necked black silk jersey blouse. At the throat there was a triangle of gold embroidery. Her hair was combed into a soft pompadour in front, allowed to fall free in back, and encircling her head was a halo of baby purple orchids, flown from Honolulu by clipper at the order of one of the Landis admirers.

Sonja Henie was adorable in a short formal, form-moulding, and made of an emerald green fabric covered from neckline to hem with emerald bugle beads.

Other guests included Enric Madriguera, who had just opened at Ciro's; T. Netcher, Mr. and Mrs. Russell Birdwell, Otto Preminger, Eddie Sutherland, Edwin Schallert, and a number of Carole's writing friends: Jack Holland, Maude Cheatam, and Dora Albert.

FESTIVE FETE:

Strictly fugitive from an autograph-hunter's most iridescent dream was the party recently given by Louella Parsons. A tent had been set up in the patio, and a dance floor installed. Set up along the north side of the tent was a loaded table of drooly food catered by Romanoff's in the northwest corner was a rumba orchestra.

Enjoying champagne cocktails and dinner were nearly all of the great of Hollywood, to wit: Claudette Colbert and Dr. Joel Pressman; Mr. and Mrs. Alan Ladd; June Haver with Frank Latimore (who were sweethearts in "The Dolly Sisters"); Dana and Mary Andrews (Dana wearing sideburns and looking very west'run for his part in "Canyon Passage"); Glenn Ford chatting with Jerry Asher (Ellie couldn't come to the party because her young son, Peter Newton, was cutting teeth and was infuriated by the process); Sonny and Barbara Tufts, Hoagy Carmichael, who was persuaded to play three of his songs; Betty and Ted Briskin (Betty sang with Hoagy; Ted is so well liked around Hollywood that everyone is calling his new wife, Mrs. Ted Briskin, without reference to her career surname, Hutton); Mr. and Mrs. Robert Young (who are expecting their fourth child soon); Mr. and Mrs. John Payne (who are anticipating their first); John Hodiak and Anne Baxter (who gets lovelier by the minute—and wittier, too); Sonja Henie and Van Johnson; little Margaret O'Brien remained only long enough to say hello; Elsa Maxwell at a table with Mr. and Mrs. Darryl Zanuck; Mr. and Mrs. Allan Jones talking about their USO trip to Italy; Jimmie Stewart laughing with Henry Fonda—both in civvies; Ruth Waterbury chatting with Ann Sothern (in a handsome blue feather cartwheel hat) and Bob Sterling; Jack Benny and Mary Livingstone; vivid Mary Anita Loos talking to lovely Laraine Day; and dozens and dozens and dozens of other marquee names. Really a terrific party.

Dear Miss Wyman:

I am a girl of 15. My problem is that I am very funny looking, and when I walk down the street, all the boys make fun of me. I didn't mind at first, but when they all made fun of me, then it got me. Every time I see a boy, I always try to avoid him by crossing the street or looking in store windows. Do you know what I can do to overcome this thing?

Bettina

Dear Bettina:

I do not quite know what you mean by "funny looking," unless you feel that you are not pretty. But don't you realize that a great many people are plain looking? It isn't how you look, it is what you are inside that counts, and if you will go back into your history, you will find that many of the most charming and well-loved women were plain almost to the point of ugliness.

I suggest that you read "The Little Locksmith" by Katharine Hathway, the true story of the authoress. She had a deformed back, but was able to make people forget that handicap so entirely that she gained a host of friends and even a husband. Surely your problem is small in comparison to hers, don't you think?

And stop trying to run away from those teasing boys—you are brave enough to admit your failing, so I know you are brave enough to hold your chin high and face them with the determination that you are going to be charming and interesting enough to make them forget your looks. Remember, too, that the flavor goes out of teasing when the teased one ignores it.

JANE WYMAN

Dear Jane:

I don't imagine you'd call this a problem, but to me it surely is one.

You see, I am a regular movie fan and often I've wanted to ask stars for their autographed pictures for my collection. How would you go about getting these pictures?

Jacqueline

Dear Jacqueline:

I am printing your letter because I get many asking for the same information. If you will write the actors and actresses, in care of the studios for which they work, I am sure you will get the pictures requested. If you run into further problems, however, address your inquiries to Doris Cline, Editor of Movieland.

JANE WYMAN

Dear Jane:

I am now a High School student, but when I was a child, I used to suck my thumb, which left me with a very thick and square looking lower lip.

My sister says lipstick looks awful on me, and without makeup on, no one will pay attention to you or ask you to go out.

Nancy

Dear Nancy:

Wonders can be done to the shape of your mouth by knowing the proper way to apply lipstick.

I would suggest that you go to a good beauty parlor and let them show you how to put lipstick on to minimize the size of your lower lip.

You should also get a lipstick brush to apply it, for a much better job can be done with a brush.

ACTING ARTISTS

the important thing she creates. I nearly fell out of my car today when I passed Billie Dove. I used to adore her in pictures years ago and she still looks just as she did then. Linda Darnell has that same kind of beauty. You'll be able to recognize Linda at 50 or 60 because the personality she has created won't change."

Linda's excursions into painting and sculpture are being taken seriously by other experts, however, and she gets her relaxation with canvas and clay. Ida Lupino does pastoral sketches of California, Constance Bennett's lively pencil creates fashion designs, and little Margaret O'Brien is seldom without a crayon.

"I'll make you a picture," offers Margaret, if she likes you, and she commandeers paper. She sits, quiet but tense, fingers flying, gray eyes darting swift and shining glances at her model, tongue caught between her teeth.

That's what Jeanne Crain used to do when she was even younger than Hollywood's baby genius. As soon as Jeanne could hold a pencil, she made pictures. Other two and three year olds draw too, so that wasn't remarkable—but Jeanne never stopped. She used to sketch in watercolors on sidewalks, the pictures drying up and disappearing when the sun came out. When she was in the third grade at a Los Angeles school, she won an art scholarship in a contest open to children in all grades throughout the city, and received a year's training under professional artists.

"An actor must do something else," argues Jeanne, "we are alone among those in all the arts because we can never really see what we are doing. We play a scene, but we can't be sure if it's coming out as we planned. Months later when we see it on the screen, like as not the result isn't what we expected.

"A painter, a writer, a musician, all do their work for themselves, first of all; if it pleases them, they pass it on. But an actor must please someone else."

Richard Whorf, Hollywood's foremost artist, held two one-man shows at the Little Gallery. The first was a French Show for which Mr. Whorf did 66 paintings, including some sketches he had made years before in Paris. Every one of them was sold before the end of the third day. But his "Theater Show" was the most talked of show in Hollywood; for this, he did 50 paintings.

There was Charles Boyer's selection: "When're you comin' back?" a shabby old theater dressingroom, paint scaling off the ugly wall on which names have been written or scratched, a mirror, a make-up shelf holding a battered cigar box filled with stumps of grease paints, worn down brushes and stained rags, a cheap wooden chair with an ancient bathrobe thrown across it.

Even more widely acclaimed was "One Night Stand," a picture showing three dismal looking people standing with suitcases near a track somewhere south of Abilene, Texas. There's no light in the station and only a dim one down street at a gas station. They stand there, gazing up the dark and

ADDRESS Please

EDITOR'S NOTE: In answer to the many, many MOVIELAND reader requests for addresses of this or that fan favorite, it's necessary to explain: sorry, no can do. We can't hand out home addresses, or unlisted personal telephone numbers—don't you wish we could!—but, we can "put you in touch," through this star-studio directory.

The list given here, complete and accurate as it's possible to make it, has been prepared "as of the present." We ask you to keep this in mind, because some of the player contracts are shared by more than one studio, others are signed for a single picture, and still others specifically reserve the right to "free lance" from one studio to another. Named here, in each case, is the studio where mail should be addressed now.

NAUGHTY BUT NICE

This gentleman's companions found the question very funny, indeed. They laughed extravagantly, while the queried one denied holding public office.

Dick rushed away, too busy to ferret out the joke.

After twenty minutes and two dozen restaurants, he gave up and returned to Angela for a conference. "I suppose the next best thing to do would be to find the sheriff," he opined.

He sought directions from a cooperative passerby; however, a check revealed that the sheriff was not at home. His wife suggested that the Hollywood pair talk to the County Clerk, who lived four blocks south and three blocks west. Matter of a marriage license, you know.

"You have your blood test certificates, I presume?" asked the sheriff's wife.

"We have," answered Dick. But as he and his companion descended the stairs, he gave her a long, meaningful look. That morning, when they had started out, Dick had checked over their belongings. "I have my blood test certificate here in my wallet; wouldn't it be a good idea for me to stow yours here, too?" he had asked.

Angela emitted a squeak and looked crestfallen. She had forgotten, the previous day, to pick up the document. So they had been obliged to rush down to the issuing authority before they could leave town.

So Dick and Angela drove to the address given and interrupted the county clerk's culinary endeavors toward dinner. "Come back in an hour," they were told. "By that time dinner will be over. I'll go to the Court House and issue the license." The Mrs. Sheriff also agreed to locate the JP and the proper witnesses.

Driving to the nearest motel, the almost-bride and groom rented a cabin. Angela waited in the car while Dick donned his wedding finery first, on the theory that the bride is not to be seen in her wedding clothes until a scant few instants before the ceremony begins.

In keeping with custom, Angela wore something old, something new, something borrowed and something blue. Her "something old" was a pair of black slippers, which she afterward left in her hotel room in San Francisco. (These were forwarded to Hollywood by the thoughtful hotel employees.) The "something new" was her wedding suit, a softly-tailored dressmaker model of periwinkle tweed. Her "something borrowed" was a pair of black gloves, loaned for the occasion by Angela's mother, Moyna Macgill.

As for "something blue"—there lies a nice bit of whimsy. On the occasion of Moyna Macgill's first great theatrical triumph, she wore a delft blue chiffon gown with a spreading circular skirt. After the play closed, Miss Macgill cut the skirt into five inch squares and gave these mementoes as lucky harbingers to each member of her family and to her favored friends. Just before Dick and Angela left to be married, she gave Dick one of these squares. Angela had, for years, carried

Mother of 4 Earns $1,000 on Her Writing

"Without jeopardizing our home life a bit, I have been able to earn $1,000 since graduating from N.I.A. If I had not the responsibility of four small children, home duties and haphazard health, I am sure I could have made much more. After only two lessons, I sold a garden series to Baltimore American. The N.I.A. way makes writing child's play."—Gladys Carr, Annapolis, Md.

Why Can't You Write?

It's much simpler than you think!

So many people with the "germ" of writing in them simply can't get started. They suffer from inertia. Or they set up imaginary barriers to taking the first step.

Many are convinced the field is confined to persons gifted with a genius for writing.

Few realize that the great bulk of commercial writing is done by so-called "unknowns." Not only do these thousands of men and women produce most of the fiction published, but countless articles on business, hobbies, social matters, fashions, human interest stories, local and club activities, as well.

Such material is in constant demand. Every week thousands of checks for $25, $50 and $100 go out to writers whose latent ability was perhaps no greater than yours.

The Practical Method

Newspaper work demonstrates that the way to learn to write is by writing! Newspaper copy desk editors waste no time on theories or ancient classics. The story is the thing. Every copy "cub" goes through the course of practical criticism—a training that turns out more successful authors than any other experience.

That is why Newspaper Institute of America bases its writing instruction on the Copy Desk Method. It starts and keeps you writing in your own home, on your own time. And upon the very same kind of actual assignments given daily to metropolitan reporters. Thus you learn by doing, not by studying the individual styles of model authors.

Each week your work is analyzed constructively by practical writers. Gradually they help to clarify your own distinctive style. Writing soon becomes easy, absorbing. Profitable, too, as you gain the "professional" touch that gets your material accepted by editors. Above all you can see constant progress week by week as your faults are corrected and your writing ability grows.

Have You Natural Ability?

Our Writing Aptitude Test will reveal whether or not you have natural talent for writing. It will analyze your powers of observation, your imagination and dramatic instinct. You'll enjoy taking this test. There is no cost or obligation. Simply mail the coupon below, today. Newspaper Institute of America. One Park Avenue, New York 16, N.Y. (Founded 1925.)

WHISTLE GIRL (JANE RUSSELL)

But Jane's first acting of any importance was in a Gilbert and Sullivan operetta, in grammar school. Then her mother steered her into dramatics at Van Nuys High School. She appeared in a number of school plays . . . one she'll always remember. "It was a comedy called 'Shirt Sleeves.' I'll never forget it, because it was my first chance at a lead role; that really whetted my appetite for a dramatic career," she says.

After high school, Jane studied advanced dramatics at Max Reinhardt's school. She was getting along famously, too, until her father's death (in 1937) forced some readjustments in the Russell household. She went to work, then, as a receptionist in a doctor's office; was a photographer's model, on the side. That "on the side" work, by the way, is a mighty important chapter in Jane Russell's biography. Without it, there would be fewer pin-up pictures of a girl most any serviceman can tell you is five feet seven inches tall, weighs one hundred and thirty pounds, and stacks up like a composite of all Powers girls.

From her modeling assignments stemmed a string of commercial ads of striking, eye-catching appeal—one of which a talent scout took to Howard Hughes, millionaire film producer and airplane manufacturer. And, of course, happened the inevitable. Hughes took one long look at the photo, one hasty glance at the record of her dramatic background, and promptly signed her to an exclusive contract.

"So there I was in pictures!" Jane told me, her eyes dancing. "Or was I?" A dramatic pause, and then she added: "Mr. Hughes was making a Western film, 'The Outlaw,' and I was cast as a half-breed temptress. The Hays Office frowned upon certain aspects of the picture, and . . . well, you know the rest."

But contrary to popular belief, Howard Hughes did not let Jane Russell languish for four years, by design —or through indifference. "The Outlaw" had convinced him that she was too promising an actress to be cast haphazardly in mediocre roles.

Jane explains it this way: "The war cancelled Mr. Hughes' film plans; he immediately concentrated on airplane production. He was determined, though, not to lend me to other producers until a role turned up which he thought would really benefit me; and nothing like that did turn up, until Mr. Stromberg came along with 'Young Widow.'"

That Jane is enthusiastic over the "Young Widow" role—oh yes, quite frankly so. Her voice seemed to vibrate with excitement, as she skipped over the plot of this noted novel by Clarissa Fairchild Cushman.

"I play a comely young widow, faced with the necessity of adjusting myself to a new way of living," she told me. "It's not easy to do, but it's the only way to find happiness. In the process, I undergo some harrowing —and some amusing—experiences. It's a wonderful part!"

And Jane isn't exaggerating. It's the part which was originally announced for Ida Lupino; but Ida's commitments to her own studio (Warner Brothers) forced her to decline the offer. And that's when Hunt Stromberg asked Hughes for Jane Russell. Frankly skeptical at first, Hughes read the script and readily consented. His comment at the time was, "It's the best woman's role in 10 years!"

If for no other reason, Jane will remember "Young Widow" for this very special thrill: her first screen kiss.

"Louis Hayward was the one to kiss me," she explains. "It happened on my birthday, too! We felt a celebration was in order for the double occasion; so we had a little party, right on the set. What fun it was!"

But speaking of kisses, all of Jane's non-camera kisses are reserved for her big broad-shouldered husband, Bob Waterfield, former U.C.L.A. football star. Recently discharged from the Army, Bob is back now at U.C.L.A. preparing for a coaching career.

After their marriage, Jane went with Bob to Columbus, Georgia; he was stationed at nearby Fort Benning. With time on her hands, she did what many Army wives were doing: she went to work. But her first job— working behind a lunch counter— didn't last long. She was asked to leave, because the male customers couldn't keep their minds on their food!

Next, having a knowledge of beauty make-up, Jane went to work in a beauty shop. She instituted a new method of applying make-up, and it caught on like wildfire.

"The hardest part of the job," she recalls with a grin, "was talking customers out of those gruesome arched eyebrows, which they invariably favored, being under the delusion that they made them look sophisticated."

To the score of women who underwent Jane's treatments and accepted her counsel, she was plain Mrs. Waterfield. Not until now—if by chance they read this giving away of the secret—do they know that their make-up was applied by Jane Russell, movie star.

There is an artistic side to Jane—as well as all this that's practical—which never ceases to amaze her friends. She and Bob are planning a home on an acre of San Fernando Valley. It will be modern . . . "but definitely warm in its appeal," says Jane emphatically. And no interior decorators, thank you! Jane plans to upholster her own furniture and do all the interior decorating. She's had plenty of practice in her friend's homes, with completely charming results. (Temporarily, Jane and Bob are living with his mother.)

She likes to be outdoors; enjoys gardening, swimming, riding and tennis. She loves to watch Bob play football, and always accompanies him on hunting and fishing trips. "But confidentially," she says, "I don't care very much for either! I'm satisfied just to watch."

She likes to read poetry. She listens to popular music infrequently, but adores symphonies. Her taste in clothes runs to tailored suits, blue denim dungarees, and lumberjack shirts. Sweaters? This may surprise some writers of those 3,000 fan letters she averages per month—the largest still-photo fan club in the world—but I give it to you in Jane's very own words: "I don't own a sweater!"

her bit of chiffon, heavily perfumed, in a protecting envelope in her purse.

It was just after eight when the Justice read the service, with the sheriff acting as best man for Dick, and the secretary of the district attorney serving as Angela's witness.

Afterward, the newlyweds returned to their motel. Said Angela, "I know this sounds a bit odd—and not in the least romantic—but I'm hungry."

"Me too," agreed Dick, bursting into companionable laughter. He went out to a stand and bought hamburgers, while Angela set up a spirit lamp which they had brought along for the purpose, and made tea.

These ingredients, in addition to a bottle of Chilean wine, made up their bridal dinner. They had brought along an entire case of Chilean wine; because Dick and Angela have no taste for heavy alcoholic concoctions, but enjoy the brisk, light South American beverage.

Next day, the stubborn car went on to Lake Tahoe, breaking a fan belt on the way. That repaired, the Cromwells proceeded to Reno, some 30-odd miles from Tahoe. They had driven about half the way when something went wrong with the brakes, so they roared down the Truckee River valley with Angela's heart clanging against the roof of her mouth.

Just outside of Virginia City, they blew a tire. Even so, Angela and Dick were fascinated by Virginia City, and want to return when they have more time to spend riding through the Nevada sage, exploring ghost towns, and being properly haunted by the spirit of the Old West.

It was just outside Carson City that the distributor points had to be repaired with a hairpin. Said Angela dolefully, "I've seen dogs sulk when a new person entered a home, but I didn't dream that a car could act up. I'm afraid your automobile doesn't like me; or perhaps it's jealous."

As if to make up for previous bad behavior, the car stratolinered to Sacramento. Not until Dick paid a fountain check in a drug store, were the newlyweds recognized. The cashier handed Dick his change, saying, "Thank you, Mr. Cromwell." Angela was delighted. After all, it has been some time since Dick made a picture, so she was overjoyed to discover that at least one of his fans hadn't forgotten him. Again, in San Francisco, he was recognized repeatedly. No one seemed to recognize Angela. As far as most people were concerned, she was Mrs. Richard Cromwell, and very proud of the distinction.

Incidentally, Angela calls her husband "Roy" much of the time, because his legal name is Roy Radabaugh, and he is of Dutch extraction.

From Sacramento, the Radabaugh-Cromwells drove to San Francisco for an ecstatic four days. They had shrimp, lobster, and crabmeat cocktails on famed Fisherman's Wharf; they drove across both bridges, the Bay and the Golden Gate; they spent hours marveling at the panorama of the city offered by the windows at the Top of The Mark; they had dinner at one of the best restaurants in the world: The Blue Fox. Such steaks! Altogether, it was a halcyon honeymoon.

Once back in Los Angeles, Angela and Dick began to draw up plans for some essential remodeling of Dick's house. As a bachelor, he had found one bathroom adequate; as a benedict, he soon learned that a girl is always making up her face in the morning when a man is ready to shave, and vice versa.

Richard Cromwell and Angela drove to the town of Independence, Cal., to be married.

Observed Dick, "I don't understand why anybody as beautiful as you ever needs to look at a mirror except to put on lipstick."

"That's what I was doing," said Angela innocently.

Angela and Dick had known one another, before they married, for almost a year. They met, originally, at the home of Jerry Asher, a close friend of both. As is likely to happen at a Hollywood party, they exchanged a few words, then moved on to talk to other guests.

Several weeks later, Dick saw Moyna Macgill enact her brilliant scene (as a frumpy drunk) in "The Clock" and was so impressed by the talent that could turn an intellectual, beautifully-groomed gentlewoman into a harridan, that he telephoned to invite Moyna Macgill and Angela to be his dinner guests.

Moyna Macgill accepted, then told Angela about it. "He really only wants to get to know you better," Angela said. "Really, I think it would be better if I would send regrets, so that you and Mr. Cromwell could chat without having to be courteous to a third person."

"Nonsense," said her mother. "You come along."

So Angela, rife with doubts as they say in novels, went along. "It gives me the shudders when I think what I might have missed by staying away from that dinner party," she told friends when she was making plans to be married.

Dick is the sort of man who could settle in Middletown, or Peachville, or Piney Center—and find happiness. Within a week everyone would know him. Dick has never become fully the Hollywood man about town. He knows and appreciates good music; he understands and can be tersely amusing about good theatre. Having served overseas for 18 months, he knows that part of our current life, and having known very well many men who, for legitimate reasons, were not in uniform, he has a clear perspective on the civilian picture.

He and Angela have discussed books by the hour: Zuleika Dobson by Max Beerbohm (Angela: "It should be made into a Disney-esque fantasy by Preston Sturges"); The Fountainhead by Ayn Rand (Angela: "This book starts or revitalizes more conversation than any book I have ever read"); Forever Amber by Kathleen Winsor (Dick: "Merely a great job of research"); Night Unto Night by Philip Wylie, (Angela: "Totally different from but as fascinating as his 'Generation Of Vipers'").

A good deal of this literary conversation has taken place around Dick's pool. Angela likes to go in the shallow portion, but she hasn't been able to find a satisfactory bathing cap, and she doesn't dare get her hair wet because she never knows when she is going to be called to the studio for still pictures. She is expected to be presentable at all times.

Even when she is entirely free of studio responsibilities, she doesn't like to soak her mane because it is so heavy that it takes several hours to dry. Incidentally, Angela is normally a maple-sugar blonde, but for her two early pictures—"Gaslight" and "National Velvet"—as well as her latest, "The Hoodlum Saint", the studio preferred her to be champagne blonde, a condition for which she has taken plenty of ribbing from her twin brothers, aged fifteen. They are at that male state wherein glamour is not feverish, but funny.

Some six months ago, Angela was engaged in conversation with a girl friend during which she insisted that she wouldn't marry an actor. She had no one in mind when this statement was made; she was speaking academically. Two weeks before she was planning to be married, Angela met this same friend for luncheon, and a similar conversation developed. Angela said that she had become convinced that the only satisfactory marriage for an actress was that with a fellow Thespian, or with a man whose living was derived from the arts—a painter, sculptor, writer, director, musician, or producer. Or, best of all, an actor.

"How you've changed!" gasped the friend. "Anyone I know?"

Angela, who had wanted to keep her approaching marriage a secret until she and Dick had actually left town in quest of the JP, simply smiled.

In addition to listening to recordings, sitting around the pool in conversation, and putting together miscellaneous barbecue dinners, Angela and Dick frequently dine at an atmospheric, little-known French restaurant named The Madelon. The food is superb, the service delightfully friendly, and the music reminiscent of good, pre-war Montmartre vintage.

One of the first places Angela and Dick visited, after their honeymoon, was The Madelon, where everyone demanded to see Angela's wedding ring. Their friends knew that Dick had designed the ring, and that the jeweler had completed it and had made delivery at ten o'clock the night before Angela and Dick were to leave the following day.

It is utterly unique. A fairly wide white gold band, set at an angle, has been crossed by a yellow gold band in such a manner that the ring is narrow in front and back, very wide on each side. Set in the white gold band are a series of emerald-cut diamonds.

As the Greeks believed that the circle was the symbol of the universe and its continuity, the significance of this design is clear: our two worlds are now one forever.

LANA'S LIFE IS FUN

other actress a premiere is part of her job. Although she loves pretty clothes, and loves to get dressed up once in a while, she doesn't spend her nights dripping with sables and sequins as the publicity departments would have you imagine.

You know Lana has been going with Turhan Bey for over a year and their evenings together have been just like your evenings with your best beau.

"Before Turhan went into the army," Lana told me, "we used to love to drive down to the beach for a hamburger and some fried shrimps. Sometimes we'd sit in the car and listen to the waves beating in; or we'd go to a movie. We both adore movies, even though we make them. I am—like everyone else in Hollywood—a fiend for Bette Davis. I like comedies, too, and I'm mad for horror films; particularly those that have ghouls, mad doctors and weird creatures skulking about. I sit in the theatre and shake with terror—and have a fine time."

Then there is Lana's love of music. Oh, I know: You've heard that tossed out as part of the spiel on other stars, too. The studios sometimes put it in because they think it makes their contractees sound "cultured" or something.

But Lana not only loves music—she knows it!

There's a game she plays with her friends, for instance. She asks six or eight people in to dinner and afterwards when the company adjourns to the green-walled den in her house, they sit on the floor facing a big record-player; then each guest is allowed to go to the closet where Lana keeps her records on specially-built shelves, and choose a recording. The others are not permitted to see the label for their job is to guess just from listening, what the music is and who wrote it. Sometimes it gets even tougher than that: they not only have to tell those things correctly, but who is conducting or playing the work. Sounds easy, does it? Well, take another think. Lana has well over 2000 records, both popular and classical; and if you have any idea the game's a cinch, try it sometime!

In the summertime, Lana can be found each Tuesday, Thursday, and Saturday night at The Hollywood Bowl. She goes with her mother, or her manager; or, if he is in town from his army camp, Turhan Bey. The game continues there, but in a slightly different form. Lana, or the person she is with, is given ten seconds or twelve notes to pick out the theme of an orchestral selection the first time it is played. The loser pays a quarter; the winner collects, of course. Lest you think this is still a lot of publicity melarky, Lana has been able to buy War Bonds with the money she has raked in!

Lana, by choice, plays the theme of quietness throughout her life. If she has a party, it is never larger than twenty people; usually less. When she bought a home recently in Bel Air, it was a house of few but large rooms, and she has decorated it beautifully. The den I spoke of, is one of the most comfortable places

THE ELMO COMPANY, DEPT. 635, Davenport, Iowa

I've ever been in, with green-painted walls, a plaid ceiling, yellow and green drapes, and the deepest, most heavenly chairs I've ever fallen into. The living room is more formal (for that reason seldom used) and is an absolute symphony of grey walls, grey rug, lip-stick red and chartreuse chairs, silver, and dark, shining wood.

When not working, Lana indulges herself, just as you would. She gets up late, has a sort of brunch, and then gives all her time to her baby, Cheryl Christine Crane, yclept "Cherry." And I can't say I blame her. "Cherry" is one of the sweetest little widgets I have ever met, and at two already has beautiful manners, a warm, wide smile, and curly hair anyone might envy. The first time I saw her—she had come to bid her mother goodnight—she was wearing a tiny nightgown, a little flannel dressing gown, and her first pair of truly grown-up slippers. They were red leather lined in sheepskin and they were a touch too big for her. Very seriously, she came over to my chair to shake my hand, carefully minding the slippers on the rough rug; it was one of the most enchanting pictures I can remember.

"Cherry" is mad for anything mechanical, Lana says. Her favorite toys are things that move: wagons, tricycles, and such. And her greatest pleasure is "driving" her mother's car. Lana sits the baby in her lap, and while the automobile is moving, Cherry turns the wheel and honks the horn and beams with happiness. They put the top down before their expeditions and the sight of them, their blonde hair streaming, is really something to behold.

Sometimes these jaunts take them to get "ice-cones." And sometimes they drive to near-by stables and watch the horses. "Cherry" is wild about horses, and continually asks her mother to buy her one. She's not afraid of them in the slightest and Lana says that her moppet thinks the next best thing to owning a horse is to go to a children's play-ground in Hollywood and dash around the pony ring—her mother holding her, of course.

"I've walked around that place a million times!" Lana told me, laughing.

"Cherry" is already clothes conscious, and insists on trying on every new hat Lana brings home before her mother wears it. She puts it carefully on the top of her head, runs to a mirror, says, "Pretty baby!" with emphasis and then allows Lana to take it.

Lana is an excellent mother, as you may be gathering. She adores her baby, and only wishes that the necessity of supporting her, of making enough money so that "Cherry" will always be financially secure, prevents her from spending more time with her. And she adores doing things for her—silly things perhaps—but things which will cause "Cherry" later to remember that her childhood was wonderful.

There was the baby's second birthday, for instance. Lana went all out. She gave a party, and none of the guests was over two-and-a-half. There were eight of them, brought by their mothers and Nanas, and there were four ponies for them to ride, and a monkey, and a big grab bag with presents, and a slide and a sandbox and a swing for them to play on, and ice cream and cake. It was John Garfield's son's birthday, too, so there were gifts for him as well as "Cherry." Lana even had a special low table built and special small chairs, so that "Cherry's" guests might feel at home during the festivities.

As her present to her daughter, Lana did something typically and wonderfully Lana. She went to the woman who makes her own underclothes and nightgowns and robes, and had copies of the things she wears, made by hand for the baby. There were three miniature sets of pajamas, with tiny bunches of cherries on them, nightgowns with her name worked in colored silk, and two robes to match. All the things had huge hems in them so they could be let down; and in them "Cherry" was "pretty baby," and no foolin'.

When "Cherry" is having a nap and can't play, Lana either reads or indulges in sports. Since Turhan left for the service, Lana has not been going out in the evening very much. Instead, she has been reading a lot, (she shudders when she thinks of her monthly bill from a book-shop in Beverly Hills). Mostly, she attacks biographies and novels, and she particularly enjoyed A Lion In The Streets and The Folded Leaf. Her house has books all over it—something you might not imagine from the other stuff you have read about her—and, kiddies, the books have been read: they are not there to impress people!

Lana's a natural in sports, and like most people, she plays one game strenuously for six months or so and then drops it. She swims well, and is a darned good tennis player and bowler; but she is most proud of the fact that she is an excellent shot.

Lana's prowess at the latter began before she came to Hollywood, when she and her mother lived in San Francisco and belonged to a skeet club there. Lana learned then how to handle a gun, and can now bang away like crazy. Her average is twenty-three clay pigeons out of twenty-five. And that ain't tin!

She is also proud of her knife-throwing—a sport which Turhan taught her. He has practiced this art for years, she says, and is an expert. As a gift, Turhan had some perfectly-balanced knives made for Lana, and the two of them would go out in his back yard in Hollywood, make a target, and spend hours whipping their lethal weapons at it.

Lana adds that this trick might come in handy sometime for she has received kidnapping threats against "Cherry"; however, kidnappers might not be so interested in attempting an abduction if they knew that she not only was well-versed in how to use her revolver, but could fell them with a razor-like knife if she ran out of bullets!

Lana's enthusiasm for hard work is a tradition in film circles. Once a new Turner picture is started, all activities not pertaining to it cease to be important. Probably no one in Hollywood can top her on this, and I don't ask you to believe it on my authority alone. Lillian Burns, the MGM dramatic coach, says that Lana knocks herself out from the time she gets the script until the director yells the final, "Cut!" During the filming of "The Postman Always Rings Twice," for instance, they had a lot of night scenes. Without a squawk, Lana worked from eight in the evening until five in the morning for over a week. She also went on location over most of Southern California, lived in beat-up little motels, ate at greasy lunch counters. It was all part of the racket—it didn't bother her.

This results in two things: First, the people she works with sing her praises to high heaven (and that again is not the old balderdash); and, second, her stature as an actress is continually increasing. Watch her the next time you see a Lana Turner picture. Forget how beautiful she is and watch how she does a scene. The gal is good, very good!

Unfortunately, Lana's publicity was built up largely by the press, or that section of the press which doesn't care whether a statement is true or not, just so it's sensational. Look beyond that glitter, however, and you'll find a quiet, hard-working young woman who has been smart enough to combine business with fun.

Dear Miss Wyman:

I am engaged to a lieutenant in the Navy. He was wounded in the South Pacific 6 months ago, very seriously wounded. When he was returned to the States, I was notified by a shipmate of his, who later came to see me.

He says Michael has lost both of his legs and is blind. That is the reason I haven't heard from him. He says Michael speaks often of me, but does not want me to see him in his condition. I love him dearly and often wish I were dead because he doesn't want me to see him.

Do you think he would feel better if I went to see him, and if he knew that I still love him, in spite of the condition he is in. Please help me.

Victorine

My Dear Victorine:

Love such as yours is like a glorious Wagnerian theme rising above the chorus of selfishness, lack of courage and unfaithfulness voiced so often in these days.

I would suggest that you visit your lieutenant, if it is at all possible. It may not solve your problem, but it is the only way you will have peace of mind. Certainty, although it be bitter, is easier to face than uncertainty.

JANE WYMAN

Dear Jane:

I am 21 years old and have been married three years. My husband, whom I adore, came home on leave a month ago for two weeks. My work at a defense plant kept us apart a great deal of the time, yet I have to work to make ends meet.

While I worked, he enjoyed, at my expense, a fine time with other women.

Since returning to his ship, he has written me only one letter, in which he asked me not to write to his mother any longer, and also told me that he was stopping my allotment checks.

I do not care about his money, but I do care for him. What shall I do?

Ellen

Dear Ellen:

Many tragic situations are now arising between husbands in the service and their wives because of war nerves and overwrought emotions.

The wise wife, who really loves her husband and wants him back, will realize this and just sit tight; for in the majority of cases, when this tension is released and things come back to normal, her problem will work itself out.

Be patient with your husband and understanding, let him know that he means more to you than anything in this world, and that you are planning your whole future upon his return. His attitude may be the result of a feeling of neglect, since you were unable to be with him all the time on his furlough, a slightly unreasonable viewpoint perhaps under the circumstances from a practical standpoint, but who takes a practical standpoint where emotions are involved?

As for his stopping your allotment checks, he cannot legally do this while you are his wife. Since he is in the Navy, you can write to the Field Branch, Bureau of Supplies and Accounts, Navy Department, Cleveland, Ohio, to get this straightened out, in case he carries out his threat.

I doubt if he will do this, for I have a feeling that his letter to you was caused by hurt feelings, and was written to hurt you in return.

JANE WYMAN

mother. Cedar Rapids is no slouch, when it comes to cultural matters. Didn't you know? The late Grant Wood hailed from there; Don had known the great American painter of American scenes, 'way back when he played kick-the-can in the alley outside Wood's studio, and when he was in Wood's Junior High School art class. Grant Wood designed the sets for the first play Don did at the Cedar Rapids Community Theater. "Broadway" was the show.

It was through the Community Theater that Don met Albert McClary, director from the Pasadena Playhouse. And McClary encouraged him to make acting a career.

"But first, go to school and learn," McClary advised, and recommended him for a scholarship at Pasadena.

So Don went to California. Left the pre-law course he'd started at the University of Iowa, and competed at the Playhouse for a scholarship. There were 250 aspirants; Don was one of six who were chosen.

Three years followed; years filled with the hardest work Don DeFore ever hopes—or wants—to see. He had what is called a "working scholarship," which meant doing all kinds of odd jobs, primarily janitor work, in payment for his tuition. "Besides which," he adds, "I had to earn my board and keep, in odd times on the side!"

It was three years of food that was bad and never enough. It was three years of too little sleep. It was working in a restaurant for room and board; hash slinging, washing, cooking. It was house painting, carting, carpentering—anything to keep himself going.

It was looking for professional picture work, when he had time, and it was getting buffeted from all directions and playing small parts with beards—until finally, after three long years, things began to happen.

A group of young actors in Hollywood was starting a theater, opening with a play called "Where Do We Go From Here?" Don was given the lead.

"It was a wonderful group," says Don. "The kind of thing I like, and would like to be connected with again. A gang of serious young actors who love the theater in a good, honest, not at all 'arty' sort of way."

The night "Where Do We Go From Here?" opened in Hollywood, Oscar Hammerstein III was in the audience, liked the show, bought it, and signed the troop to go with the play to New York.

"Unlike many actors," says Don, "my lean years were in Hollywood. Once I hit New York with this show, things began to get easier." While "Where" was not a big success, it ran for four weeks, and gave Don DeFore a chance to be seen. After that, he was not just another neophyte trying to break into the theater, he had already broken.

The future looked good. Parts in the World's Fair Railroad Pageant, and in "Steel" done by the Labor Stage, followed in quick succession.

Then the three years of bad food and hours caught up with him, and catastrophe hit. A triple major abdominal operation, for which Don has only recently finished paying.

The convalescence was slow and long, but once he was back on his feet, Don was cast in an important role in "The Male Animal," which starred his good friend, Elliott Nugent. This was Don's first solid hit on the stage. He was in the play for two years, both in New York and on the road. He later played in the picture version of the play and was given a contract by Warner Bros.—which contract ended in Don's first packing up to do a stage play, a revival of "Sailor Beware." This, after listening for months to Warners' "no leading man" routine. The aforementioned Metro contract was the outcome of "Sailor Beware."

All of this Don looks back upon with both a grin and some serious reflection. For this DeFore guy is a man of many facets: husband and father, business man, gangster and haranguer.

Don can talk by the hour about politics, an interest that was stimulated at a very early age. The elder DeFore was by way of being an amateur politician. He was a popular and active figure in the railroad union, and took a great interest in both local and national affairs. He was always an active campaigner in his precinct during the election. So Don grew up in an atmosphere that taught interest in such matters, along with thinking soundly for himself and expressing what he thought.

Don is a family man of deep and reserved emotion, with his lovely wife, Marion, whom he married in February '42. She was Marion Holmes then; they met in Chicago. She was singing with Art Cassell's orchestra and Don was playing in "Male Animal." Marion has done no professional singing since she and Don were married.

"She hasn't had much time," grins

30th SUCCESSFUL YEAR

Don. Meaning that she's kept busy by their adorable Penny Lu, born Christmas '43, and the very new DeFore son and heir. David Allen, who arrived the twenty second of August, 1945.

The DeFores live in a charming house in a most "un-movie-star" part of Los Angeles. This is the house that got closed up, off and on, when Don made his escapes to the stage. Then, too, there was the other time, when Don put in a spell in the Army.

"Probably the briefest in history," says Don. "But I certainly tried."

They had rented their house, and Marion had moved to a smaller place. She had already gone to work as a salesgirl at Saks. But after a few weeks of army life Don went to the hospital, a flu case. The doctor who examined him found out about the serious operation Don had had. And bingo! Pvt. DeFore was out on a civilian ear.

At the moment, Don and Marion say with fingers crossed, "Life looks as though it might maybe perhaps sail smoothly—for a while, at least.' They can fish and hunt and play golf, and do all the simple things that suit their tastes. No night clubs for the DeFores, just quiet, good living with old and congenial friends. Friends they can sit with of an evening and scream with about the theater and movies and books, with a good large hunk of world affairs thrown in.

In money matters and business, Don does all right, too—though he wishes no one knew it. All because of some oil lands he leased with a group of men, and oil was actually there. He wishes no one knew it because, since that item was printed by a movie columnist, he's been driven mad by salesmen trying to sell him everything from lost gold mines to real estate somewhere under water.

The quality that strikes you most vividly, when you meet Don DeFore, is the fact he is the Complete Actor in the finest sense of the word. Serious, modest, and crazy about his work, whether on stage, screen or radio. Always learning, always humble, yet always sure of his talent.

He can never repeat often enough his belief in the hard work that has gone into every successful acting career. When people say to him: "Aren't you lucky to have made this overnight success!" it enrages him completely. "What's lucky about it?" he asks. Those years behind? Those years that were invested in making this success?

Don considers an actor is a commodity; and Hollywood, a highly organized business. No studio is going around doing "nice things" for actors. They are paying for a commodity worth so much on the open market. Don invested time, energy and sweat which has made him worth a certain amount. The fact that the time has come when this worth has been recognized, is to Don the only logical outcome of all those years.

"What's flattering? Where is the compliment in saying someone got something for nothing?" is Don's constant query to anyone who will listen.

But he's also inclined to add, with a definitely grinning note, "I sometimes think that in those years I learned more about battling the elements than I learned about acting! But maybe that's the best thing a guy can know, if he's dope enough to want to be an actor!"

THE END

This system forms a series of growths that natives call "knees." I strolled through one of these groves and was amazed at the different formations; a huge tree will put out a good many roots, and these arise a little distance from the trunk to a height of from one to three feet; they are gnarled and twisted, allowing an artistic imagination to run riot. Your mother found a tall "knee" that looked exactly like a carving of the Virgin and Child; not being as devout as your mother, the statue I found looked more like a grinning old reprobate.

Even so, the cypress groves reminded me of that verse of Rossetti's:

"When I am dead, my dearest,
Sing no sad songs for me;
Plant thou no roses at my head,
Nor shady cypress tree;
Be the green grass above me
With showers and dewdrops wet;
And if thou wilt, remember,
And if thou wilt, forget."

Another interesting sight, in my opinion, was the masses of slash pine, which are the turpentine trees. The name "slash pine" is one result of a peculiar system of cutting across the bark of the trees; the other result is turpentine which drips out of the slash into a bucket placed there for the purpose. Very interesting.

Well, son, so much for the flora of this part of Florida. Be a good boy, and I'll write to you again when I see something of interest.

Lovingly,
Your Dad."

"Dear Jonny:

'The Yearling,' the picture we are making down here, is going very well. On the days when I don't have to work, your mother and I are getting acquainted with the countryside. I took a long hike today, cross-country, and wound up at a village store. While I was mopping my forehead and taking in the aspect of the place, I noticed an American flag fluttering lazily from a rude pole in front of the store. I knew, at a glance, that the stars weren't quite so numerous as those in our standard banner, so I counted them: There were forty-four. Think of it—a 44-star American flag!

I hope that you turn out to be better in history than I am, because an occasion like finding a 44-star flag shouldn't present a man with the type of mental judo with which I spent the next few minutes. Finally, I rasseled forth the facts that, since the last four states admitted to the union were New Mexico and Arizona in 1912, Oklahoma in 1907, and Utah in 1896, the flag must have been manufactured between 1890, when Idaho and Wyoming were admitted as the 43rd and 44th states, and 1896, when Utah became the 45th.

Naturally, after this cerebral tussle, I dashed into the store and made friends with the storekeeper. He was friendly—as all of the people I have met so far are—and said that he wasn't exactly sure how old the flag was, because he had inherited it from his father. He offered to give me the flag, but of course I thanked him and refused. That refusal required real stamina, I can tell you. Boy, how I wanted that flag whether I had any real right to it or not!

While we were carrying on this conversation, I noticed that my friend was eying my hat. "That's a very fine hat," he said. Instantly, feeling that after his handsome offer, I could do no less, I said, "Please accept it as a token of admiration for you and your father as American pioneers."

Gravely he accepted the hat. Then giving me a quick, shy grin, he said, "I'll tell you, suh, I don't want the hat for myself. I want it for my horse."

Your mother is not going to let me live this down for a long time, Jonny.

With much love,
Dad."

"Hello, my fine son:

You'll never guess what I have! A baby alligator! No fooling. A friend who lives in these parts, took me fishing yesterday. He has a fine boat, so we were able to cover a good deal of lake space. We happened across a mother alligator, which my friend killed. Then we found this youngster; he is about eight inches long, and very playful.

In order to understand his antics, you should know that an alligator's manner of killing its prey is this: Getting a firm grip upon some portion of the object, the 'gator plops onto his back, then with speed incredible for one so ungainly—he flops onto his stomach, then onto his back, corkscrewing until he has twisted off that portion clamped in his jaws.

Because I wanted to bring this little 'gator back to California as a gift for a friend of mine, and also because I had my hands full of fishing gear, I slipped the little character into my shirt. After a bit I looked down, and there was Toughie with a tiny bit of my stomach gripped in his small jaws, doing his best to turn over and take me with him. It felt much like the bite of a week-old kitten.

Your mother has suggested that I let him grow somewhat larger, then convert him into a handsome purse. Women are resourceful human beings, you'll find, my boy.

Yours for bigger and better handbags, Pop."

"Jonny, dear:

Your mother and I have just finished a thoroughly fascinating twenty-four hours, so I want to tell you about it while it's all clear in my mind.

Saturday night we were invited to attend a community dance given at the High School. I wore my 'chicken-eatin' coat,' which is the wonderful term given a business suit as opposed to dungarees or other working garb, by people hereabouts. Your mother wore her 'meetin' gown', which is equivalent to Sunday best. The music was supplied by a pump organ and a fiddle, and the dances were those of the pioneer era: the Virginia reel, square dances and the waltz. I've never heard anyone call dances with the aplomb and ingenuity of our callers. He was really a winner. By the time you have reached dancing age, I don't dare predict what will have taken the place of jitterbug routines, but I'll promise you this: you'll never find a more rhythmic and graceful physical response to music than is represented by the good old-fashioned square dance.

Sunday I rolled out early and went over to the home of some friends that I have made here. Now this is important, son—these people stem from early, early English stock; they have remained aloof from the modern world largely through choice, maintaining, meanwhile, a magnificently simple sense of right, honor, and the intrinsic values of living.

Because the climate is mild the year around, they have no need for windows, so their houses have none. Because they believe in the value of leisure and proper time for meditation, they work only when tilling the soil and attending to their needs as survival requires. When things are going well, they sit for hours in the shade, meditating. They find time to fish and to hunt. They live as they wish to live without concern for the outside world.

Their houses are made of pine board and illumination at night is by kerosene lamp. They sleep under mosquito netting, and they bathe in nearby creeks.

Naturally, I do not look upon my status as a motion picture actor with much excitement, but when I have been on location with motion picture companies on other occasions, the well-meant attention of localities sometimes has been embarrassing, and has made it difficult for us to work. Nothing like that in Florida! These people are utterly without awe of the motion picture camera. They view us as honest workmen; frankly, they consider our job somewhat less exciting and glamorous than that of a good guide for tourist hunting parties, or an operator of a fishing boat; or the profession of making corn 'likker' and dodging 'feds.'

In the picture, 'The Yearling,' we are using the home that was originally occupied by the people who are represented in Marjorie Kinnan Rawlings' great book as The Baxters. This house is between 110 and 120 years old, and is true to type.

The home to which we were invited for Sunday dinner is furnished with the typical deerhide-covered chairs, pine settles, and deal tables as were used by their grandparents.

And now, pay heed to the menu: first we had a chilled potato soup very similar to bouillebâisse. Then we were served roasted venison, beef stew, and fried lake bass; already on the table were huge bowls of string beans, roasted sweet corn, black-eyed beans, green peas, and a huge platter of juicy, sliced tomatoes—all this from their own garden! The venison had been shot the previous fall and salted down; the beef had been home-raised and salted, and the bass had been caught that morning. We were served all the hot biscuit we could eat, as well as a crumbling, rich corn bread. With dinner we had huge glasses of iced tea, and for dessert there were home-canned pears that had been grown in their own orchards.

Let softened city dwellers scream about points: these self-sufficient natives live like kings.

Your generation of these native Americans will be educated; my contemporaries were not, and for an interesting reason. (After dinner we sat around and talked about our experiences.) The man of the house,

ACTING ARTISTS

empty tracks. The title: "Equity will Bring Us Back."

Unlike most Hollywood artists, Mr. Whorf grew up expecting to be one. He was born into an artist's family; his father, Henry Church Whorf, was a noted painter, and his elder brother John, now considered the finest watercolor artist in America, was the only protege of John Singer Sargent. John and Richard studied art in Massachusetts schools, then in France and Germany. From babyhood they knew important contemporary artists, and the world's noted paintings and works of art were as familiar to them as sports figures are to the average American boy.

It was not until young Richard met the late Max Reinhardt in Germany that he decided to turn what had been a hobby into a career and become an actor.

"You can't make comparisons in art," he avers. "Art suits the person who sees it. As Whistler used to say, art is only a personal opinion. I don't agree that artists express themselves, because art is creation which acting isn't. An actor merely interprets what someone else has created.

"There's this great difference, too: Nobody approaches painting without humility, but no actor can approach acting with humility—or he can't act!"

At the moment, Mr. Whorf's studio is in his Beverly Hills garage. Very few of his own pictures are hung in his house, whose walls give generous space to the work of his father and brother. He points out the excellence of their canvasses and passes by his few sketches with: "That's just trick stuff—" or "A mood—not very important."

In his library he has some miniature stage sets, complete with tiny costumed models of actors, correctly lighted, designed and built by himself. One especially interesting set is designed for the production of Richard III which Mr. Whorf hopes to do one of these days, playing the title role, of course. Half a dozen well-thumbed versions of the Shakespearean drama flank the small model.

Mr. Whorf writes plays, mystery stories and technical books for actors; he received critical acclaim for his set designs for the Lunts' production "There Shall Be No Night," and now has turned to directing pictures, between his screen portrayals. Metro's "A Sailor Takes a Wife" is his latest directorial effort.

"A director can compose interesting pictures with his scenes," he observed, "which is one reason I enjoy my new job."

His books, "Running The Show" and "Time To Make Up" still bring in royalties after ten years. More exciting, these volumes caused his summons by the U. S. War Department to fly overseas to start a theater in connection with the G. I. University project for our occupation forces in Europe. The Casino in Biarritz was taken over as the G. I. theater and Mr. Whorf got student servicemen launched on their own productions and helped them with their first two shows.

When Steffi Duna gave Dennis O'Keefe a brush and a paintbox, he surprised himself, as well as his wife, by turning out a creditable picture. Bill Edwards, of Paramount, was a commercial artist in New York City before a photographer persuaded him to act as a model, and the resulting pictures brought him a movie contract. He puts in odd time on sets sketching his fellow actors, as does Mona Freeman, who once shared a studio with her Virginia cousin and vowed herself to ART.

Paulette's personal preferences are the sole basis for selecting her objets d'art. She tends towards moderns like the Braque above.

From Edward G. Robinson and his famous collection of paintings to Rita Hayworth and her Indian masks, the town is filled with stars who get pleasure and sometimes profit from gathering together works of art.

Paulette Goddard had never thought of collecting until she bought her first house four years ago. Then someone gave her a picture; she decorated a room around it, and suddenly fell in love with art.

"I collect for feeling and color," she said, "and I never look at what a painting is said to be worth. I have some Thelma Street pictures that cost me $12 each, that give me as much pleasure as any I own—and some of my pictures are quite valuable. Waldo Pierce and Henry Varnum Poor are our neighbors in Connecticut and both have given me paintings. Waldo's 'Nude In The Barn' is one of my favorites. I have a roomful of George Gershwin's sketches of me, all very charming and colorful, and the wonderful mural Diego Rivera did of me, which is quite large and includes an Indian girl who is doing my hair."

Paulette's taste runs to the unusual in an artist's work. If people ask: "Is that a Rivera?" she is better pleased than if they announce confidently at sight: "That's a Rivera!"

Paulette never does anything by halves. Now that she's interested in collecting art, she carefully reads each artist's biography, sees whatever she can of his work, and when she buys anything, tries to give it its proper setting. The young Merediths redecorated their entire house because the people who built it had no pictures, and they felt their collection needed simple backgrounds. They ripped out fancy borders, yanked off flounces, tore down curlycues and medallions, and replaced groups of modern furniture with graceful antiques which, they believe, are more suited to the paintings on their walls.

You must have seen those superb caricatures of Sydney Greenstreet, Geraldine Fitzgerald and Peter Lorre used in the exploitation of "Three Strangers." They are the work of Director Jean Negulesco, internationally famous artist, once Roumania's "Court Painter."

Mr. Negulesco's portraits of Queen Marie of Roumania (which hung in San Francisco until spirited bidding resulted in a fellow-countryman carrying it off), Dolores Del Rio (in the Mexican Museum of Art), Lady Montbatten and other celebrities are widely known. His first big hit, however, was as a caricaturist, and he still has a tremendous feeling for this medium.

"I am a painter, that's all!" says the director, "I have no isms, I paint."

This opinion may stem from the fact that his first drawings were war sketches made in his early teens during the first World War. Incidentally, Jean can draw in the dark. When he first came to Hollywood in 1930, his chief ambition was to do a portrait of Greta Garbo. Garbo wouldn't pose, so he went to see her current picture three or four times, armed with drawing board and crayon, and came out of the theater with dozens of amazing sketches of the moody Swede.

Shortly after this, Negulesco began to write, progressing from writing to directing; the latter he approached through the usual medium of shorts, his most notable being those he did of the Ballet Russe. While directing, he often sketches the action of a scene as he would like to have it, and directs from his sketch rather than from the script.

"Humoresque" is his next directorial assignment. The result should be like attending a one-man show by Jean Negulesco.

Vincent Price has uncovered many a talented artist in his gallery. Next pic, "Dragonwyck."

whom I count as a treasured friend, told us about education in his time. It seems that during that period, school was kept by a brutal schoolteacher: a man who made a rule that anyone in the fourth grade who made THREE mistakes in reciting the entire multiplication table forward and back, should be beaten.

My friend, terrorized by the threat of punishment, made his three mistakes and was ordered to the whipping room on the third floor. Instead of awaiting his unjust punishment, he jumped out of the window—breaking both ankles—and stumbled, pulled and dragged himself home. He never went back to school. Nor would have I. He has a son, however, who is in school in Jacksonville. Wistfully he said of this lad, "I want him to do good—not be like me." I tried to say that I thought this man's way of life was one to be admired, and that the world was filled with dyspeptic men who would change places with him on the instant.

For you, my boy, I would want the simple dignity, the proud self-sufficiency of these people.

Your devoted,
Dad."

"Hi, Jonny-boy:

I've just been fishing, and I've had a remarkable experience. Not principally because I caught my share of the forty fine finny friends we brought back, but because I've seen something I never expected to observe.

When we started out this morning, the man who has become my friend down here, said, "I don't think we'll have much luck on this part of the river, because I don't smell any fish."

I kept still. My experience with fish has led me to believe that the already-caught, and not the catchable fish, is the one with reverse perfume, but I have been so impressed with the native lore of these people that I'm slow to question.

Despite my guide's insistence that he couldn't smell fish where we were trolling, we continued to try. After two hours of no bites, this got to be a bore, so we moved on to another spot. Again, our Floridian assured us that he smelled no fish. Again we tried without luck.

Finally we oared our way around a point and my friend became as excited as is possible for a naturally quiet man. "Fish," he muttered, his eyes bright. "I can smell hundreds of 'em, right out there!"

We got busy, as I have already intimated, and reeled in 40 beauties.

I wish I could develop this trick, but I'm afraid that when you and I go fishing in California waters, we'll just have to rely on luck.

Just call me your Waltonian
Dad."

"My dear son:

The philosophic humor of these people is superb. I think I can best outline what I mean by telling you of two incidents from 'The Yearling' that, according to my local friend, typify the Florida viewpoint. One of the incidents will be used in the motion picture.

The recordable anecdote is this: while hunting, the character that I portray in the picture, finds that one of his dogs is a coward. When his son suggests killing the dog, Baxter says, "No, son, some dogs is meant to be good dogs, and some dogs is meant to be worthless dogs, and there isn't much a man can do about it."

My local friends have one good hound "dawg" which is kept chained. He is a valuable possession; he is pampered, he eats well, and he gets every care. My friends also own two mutts who run wild, doing as they please. This indicates another local viewpoint: the worthless animal has no responsibility; but the valuable animal is supplied with the best of the land and loving care as exchange for his dependability.

The incident which won't be filmed is this: in the book, Baxter found a pair of roly-poly cub bears. Quickly he slipped out of his trousers and out of his underwear, knotted the underwear legs, and slipped a cub into each leg. Then he hopped back into his dungarees, slung the cubs over his shoulder, and started for home. Along the way, he was caught by the outraged mother bear, who took a bite of Baxter's dungarees. Baxter quickly dropped his cub-enclosed underwear, slid out of his dungarees, and streaked for home.

When a friend asked him if his wife was surprised to see him avalanching upon the house in a pantless condition, he replied, "I reckon she were; but I reckon she weren't so surprised to see me without pants, as that ole mother bear were surprised to find her cubs wearing underclothes."

Well, goodnight, my cub
Your Dad."

"Hi, Skipper:

Well, honey, by the time you receive this note, your mother will be home. Yes, she left here yesterday in a tizzy—very becoming to her, though, I must say.

You'll get a kick out of this: for two months we have been living in the very coils of one of the most fertile of reptile districts. One day my friend and I killed a six foot water moccasin as it lay beside our fishing boat on the bank. It was nothing at all to see a deadly snake darting through the water a few feet away from us as we paddled along.

Near our location we killed several coral snakes, and I had warned your mother repeatedly to watch her step.

In the mail this morning we received a letter from your nurse saying that the milkman had just killed a four foot rattler on our back walk—a snake which presumably had been living in our garden. Greta nearly lost her mind. She would hear of no solution except her immediate departure for California, in order to be on hand to defend you from further reptiles.

I offer this testimony in support of my theory that, to a woman, there is no danger near or far unless it threatens her child; then the only evil on earth is that which menaces her offspring. Confidentially, I've never placed much credence in the old story about Eve and the serpent; if Eve were anything like your mother, she would have screamed and run rapidly in the opposite direction. No, I think the tempter must have been a charming little chinchilla rabbit; in such an animal, offering an apple, the average woman would see (1), a fine meal; and (2), the down payment on a handsome coat.

Your ever-lovin'
Dad."

a tinkling quality. "I'd love it," she agreed.

So Mark picked her up in his creaking old Ford sedan, and they went to dawn mass. Afterward, through the crisp, sunlit air, they drove down Sunset Boulevard toward the beach. Whenever they had gasoline enough, they liked to explore the winding weed grown trails through the hills near the Bernheimer estate, and they had found a spot that they called "our lot."

"Someday," they promised one another, "we'll buy this site and we'll build a dream house." The north windows, they pointed out, would serve as a proscenium arch to the spectacle of the mountains, and the south windows would be audience for the drama of the changing sea.

So, this Christmas morning they drove to "their lot" and parked. Mark had bought hamburgers from an all-night stand, and had ordered a thermos of coffee. The day before he had stored a sack of apples and oranges in the back of the car.

And he had bought, and trimmed with dime store tinsel, a Christmas tree about two feet high. This he had installed in the back seat. Around the mechanized Yuletide fir were placed the gifts Mark and his girl had bought for one another. They had agreed on one, only, gift. Then each had invested in some dime store extras.

Mark gave his girl friend a gold heart locket on a fine gold chain, and she had given him a cigarette case on which was engraved his name and hers. In the other packages were tooth paste, hair oil, envelopes and airmail stationery, and a tiny plant of ivy.

So Mark Stevens' most memorable Christmas consisted of a dinner of hamburgers and a gift-opening ceremony on a vacant lot.

On Christmas Eve, 1934, Danny Kaye was in Shanghai, doing five shows a day at the Palace Theatre. There were 40 persons in the cast of La Vie Paree, the A. B. Marcus revue, and when they gathered around a decorated camphor tree backstage, after the last show at 10 o'clock, there were 40 cases of galloping homesickness.

The stage manager did his best. He broke out a series of Tom 'n' Jerries, and announced that the presents at the foot of the tree would be opened at the stroke of midnight. But nobody was very gay; people began to wonder out loud, in disconsolate tones, what was doing at that moment in Des Moines, in McKeesport, in Seattle, and in South Chicago. "We're a long way from home," some geographical expert opined, and lower lips began to trip unwary walkers.

At which time Leon Miller, Danny's dancing partner, had an attack of smart brains. "The trouble with us is that there aren't any kids around. Whoever heard of a Christmas tree party without children?" he demanded. He and Danny started an investigation, and discovered from the Chinese hosts that there was a nearby mission conducted by medical missionaries of the Church of Latter Day Saints.

"That's for us," said Leon. He and Danny ran the entire distance to the mission. A solitary night watchman, a grizzled old English-speaking Chinese, was the only person awake. The boys tried to explain what they wanted while he scrutinized them with an eloquent glance that labeled them squirrel fruit. However, he agreed to arouse the superintendent, who turned out to be an understanding, great-hearted man from Pomona, California.

Something about the situation appealed to his sense of Christmas. In a few minutes he returned to the waiting room, leading twelve Chinese children, between the ages of 6 and 12.

When this strange cavalcade returned to the theatre, the remaining 38 actors broke out into cheers and the button-eyed Chinese orphans instantly annexed approximately 3 parents each. Everyone opened Christmas parcels, and handed the gifts to the kids who were bewildered, bedazzled, but overwhelmed with happiness. They chattered, exclaimed, shouted.

Then the superintendent lined up the children, gave them a keynote, waved his hand, and they sang, in Chinese, "Silent Night, Holy Night."

The homesick actors, all 40 of them, bowed their heads and wept.

When Ethel Barrymore was on tour one year, her train became snowbound in the twilight-blue, spreading wastes of the Montana Rockies. Trainmen explained that no rescue could be attempted for 24 hours, which meant that a Grand Hotel assortment of strangers was fated to spend Christmas together. In the same car with Miss Barrymore was a seven-year-old girl, who burst into tears when she realized that she wasn't going to reach Chicago for the holidays. "Santa Claus will never find me 'way out here," she sobbed. "I won't have any Christmas at all."

"That's nonsense," said the forthright Miss Barrymore. "Santa Claus has your name on his list, undoubtedly, and I'm positive he will locate you. Just don't cry until you're positive that you've been forgotten."

During the night, while the child slept, two of the men ventured into the nearby hills and cut a small Christmas tree; passengers ransacked their bags for items that might appeal to a small girl. Luckily, friends of Miss Barrymore had given her a lavish basket of fruit just before she boarded the train, so that was placed beside the tree. Other passengers contributed a new toothbrush in red cellophane, a deck of miniature playing cards, a folding traveling mirror, a scarf, and a chocolate bar. Someone also had presence of mind enough to leave a note saying that the little girl's heavy presents had been left in Chicago, but this small contribution was intended to tell her that Santa Claus hadn't forgotten.

Then the conductor was decked out as Santa Claus—not very convincing to a critical mind—but wonderful for a little girl of seven.

Virginia Mayo's most memorable Christmas has instilled in her a permanent ambition: during the late fall of the year, she goes around buttonholing people in an attempt to raise a choral group to sing Christmas carols on Christmas Eve, the proceeds of this venture to be turned over to charity.

Her first choral experience happened when she was 14, living in St. Louis. The choral group to which she belonged had practiced for six weeks when Christmas Eve arrived, a cold, overcast, snow-crackling night, sharp with the threat of more snow to fall.

Virginia and her best friend, Marguerite Gay who is now a WAC, bundled up for the carol singing. They wore long underwear, heavy wool stockings, shoes, and galoshes; woolen petticoats, pleated skirts, sweaters, mufflers, overcoats, and caps with earflaps.

Proceeding to the exclusive West Side neighborhood, the choristers stopped at their first house around six o'clock. Virginia, trembling with excitement, blew a sweet note on her harmonica for pitch, then the voices melted into "Hark, The Herald Angels Sing." After that they sang, "O, Little Town of Bethlehem," "Silent Night," "Come All Ye Faithful" and "Joy To The World."

It was Virginia's duty, after the songs were sung, to carry the collection box to the door. Her hopeful ring was answered by a big, booming man who yelled "Merry Christmas" to the charolers and dropped a ten dollar bill into the till. Virginia almost fainted with gratitude.

A few minutes later the snow, big heavy wet lazy flaky feathers, began to fall, but the carolers went on singing as the dewy down clung to their clothing and froze, giving them the glistening look of snowmen.

When frostbite, fatigue, exposure and hoarseness overcame them, they discovered that, in five hours, they had taken in $200.00 for charity. Virginia and Marguerite went home, oozing Christmas spirit, to have hot chocolate and cookies before a roaring fire. "From now on, I'm ALWAYS going to belong to a carol group at Christmas," both girls announced. But neither has . . . and both are wistful about it.

Sharyn Moffett, the 8-year-old moppet-queen of RKO, is as glib as her elders in recounting the particulars of her favorite Christmas to date. She was four at the time, and an eager beaver who rolled out of bed while the earth was still dark. She tiptoed downstairs to case the Christmas tree situation; she had registered a strong request with Santa Claus for a tricycle, and she was anxious to know whether he had come across. As nearly as she could tell in the gloom, there was no tricycle.

"Hmm," she thought. "Perhaps there has been some slip-up." To fortify herself, she tiptoed to the ice box and took a pre-breakfast snack of cold chicken and milk. Then she went back to sleep for a few hours in the hope that S. Claus would have discovered a delivery error and returned.

When she was called by a bewildered mother, who couldn't imagine why Sharyn hadn't arisen at six, as was her Christmas custom, the little lady docilely agreed to have breakfast before investigating her gifts. The breakfast was waffles and ham, the traditional Moffett Christmas breakfast, but for some reason, Sharyn was not especially hungry.

Eventually, she lagged into the living room. She was astounded at the lift in her spirits despite the absence of her prime desire: Mr. Claus had left a red rocking horse, a blackboard with both white and colored chalk, a baby washing machine, a clothes line, and a box of miniature clothespins; there was also a book, some games, candy, popcorn balls, oranges and bananas. But no tricycle.

Her mother and father exchanged glances when she said, "People who don't read their mail, when a girl writes especially, make me sick!"

For Christmas dinner, the entire family gathered at the home of Sharyn's grandmother, a romantic woman who did not hold with some of these new-fangled inventions. To quote Sharyn, "She didn't have lights on her tree; she had birthday candles!"

The sight illuminated by the birthday candles was a princess doll with sleepy eyes, AND a tricycle with gold handlebars, red wheels, and a blue bell. Darling Santa Claus! Wonderful Christmas! Toot-toot-ring-ring! Wow!

Because Christmas is the season of hope; because it is the holiday when the invisible ties of heart tighten across the barriers of space and time, the experience of Bill Williams holds a heart-warming importance for everyone.

As a youngster, Bill was always accorded a special privilege at Christmastime; for as many years as he could remember, he had been allowed to help his mother trim the tree. There was one particular ornament that she cherished: a large, fragile, rosy-pink ball that had been placed on her own Christmas tree when she was a child. She would place the bauble in Bill's hand saying "Be careful with it, Sonny. There isn't another one like it in all the world."

Eventually, the placing of this ornament became traditional. Even though, as Bill grew older, his mother might trim the rest of the tree, the sunrise-colored bauble was always saved for him to hang.

On the first Christmas Day after his mother had died, Bill played 7 shows on Broadway. That night, he brought the troupe home to share Christmas with himself and his stepfather. It was a bitter night, still and frosty, with a wind like a stiletto; every window was closed against it, and the drapes were drawn so that there was no movement of air in the room, only the soft fragrance of pine.

While Bill and his guests were munching fruit cake, they began to talk about Mrs. Williams. They mentioned how bright-eyed she had been about Christmas, how alive she had seemed always, how much she had got out of life, and how much she invested of herself in every human encounter.

To everyone in the room, she had been a warm-hearted, merry, laughing presence; a woman to love and by whom to be beloved.

From the tail of his eye, Bill thought he detected a movement. Turning his head slowly so as not to break the spell, he watched the shining pink ball. In that motionless room, it was turning slowly, half a turn, then reverse; half a turn, then reverse, as if it were held in a playful hand, an invisible hand that needed to make its presence known, calmly, happily, without causing fright.

Bill said nothing as his heart flooded with the first comfort he had known.

"Here," he thought, "complete and unassailable is the spirit of Christmas: the conviction that love does not change nor depart."

THE END

CLIFTON WEBB SAYS YES

Lili Palmer, wife of Rex Harrison. He is set for "Anna and the King of Siam." Kate Hepburn might be his leading lady?

"You come, too," urged the little girl.

Clifton went. He didn't belong to the class, but was much too lively to sit on the sidelines. As he gyrated about the gleaming floor, making up his own steps since he'd never had a dancing lesson, Malcolm Douglas, then connected with the Children's Theater at Carnegie Hall, wandered in. Mr. Douglas was in the throes of casting "The Brownies," and was all but desperate for a child to play "Cholly." He fairly pounced on Clifton, who quickly agreed to take the part.

"Don't you do anything—don't you tell my mother—I'm going to be an actor!" Clifton informed his grandmother, firmly. He could always dominate her and she objected only feebly, but once her grandson was in rehearsal and it became evident that he had embarked on a career, she wired her daughter: "Come at once. Clifton has gone on the stage!"

Mrs. Webb returned in time to sit in a box and faint with excitement when her son made his first appearance. Not that she objected: all her life she herself had wanted to be an actress, but she was from the South growing up in a day when a stage door was looked on as a gateway to destruction. "I'd sooner see you lying in your grave!" was among the milder statements made by Clifton's grandfather in denying his daughter's ambition.

"She had made up her mind that if I showed a yen for acting, she'd foster it," recalled Mr. Webb. "She never was a stage mother, never one of those objectionable creatures who shove their offspring under producers' noses, show them off or clamor for attention. What she gave me was confidence, encouragement and help."

"Cholly" was followed by starring roles in "Oliver Twist" and "The Master of Carlton Hall." When the Children's Theater closed, Clifton went back to school. By the time he was 13 and ready for graduation, he thought he was through with acting forever. "Pooh with the stage!" he cried, and enrolled in art classes. He studied under excellent teachers and has never lost his love for painting. Today he has a studio at his Greenwich, Connecticut, home.

During this period he also studied singing, and at 16, when his voice had developed to a remarkably beautiful high baritone, he appeared in concerts. Milton Aborn, head of the Aborn Opera Company, heard him, called him in for an interview and asked if he could sing operatic roles.

He used his favorite affirmative.

Nothing happened for a space. Then one Friday came an agitated telephone call from Boston, asking if Clifton could sing the role of "Laertes" in "Mignon" the following Monday. It was a long and unfamiliar role, but he said "Yes!" as usual. He got a script of the opera at the station, sight-read it on the train, met his accompanist in Boston and together they went over the score. Interrupted by costume-fittings, make-up tests and rehearsals, they worked at it for three days like two maniacs, and Monday night the young singer justified his confident "Yes" by making a hit.

At the end of the week and the engagement, he went back to New York, returning to Boston on the same last-minute terms for "Madame Butterfly" and "La Boheme." During the Christmas holidays, Clifton was asked to sing the role of the Witch in "Hansel and Gretel" (always sung by a man) a part so long and difficult that two singers had been engaged for it. One for matinees and one for evenings. After the first day, the management decided they preferred Clifton and asked him to sing both performances. This time the boy varied his "Yes" by adding that he wanted more money. He was getting $40 a week. Aborn made it $50.

It was nice to earn money for doing something as delightful as singing, but unfortunately Clifton wasn't earning as much as he spent. It cost him $20 for half-hour voice lessons from Victor Potel, and he also had to pay his accompanist. Mr. Potel had expected to launch his own opera company with parts for all his students, but the money promised for the venture failed to arrive. Consulted by the worried Clifton, Mr. Potel mentioned that there might be an opening for him in an operetta about Napoleon and Josephine, as the role of the dancing master hadn't been filled.

"You dance, don't you?" the boy was asked, and he gave his usual answer, although he'd never had a dancing lesson in his life. He got the part, learning a routine from the girl who was to dance with him. After the show, someone observed: "You dance well. Why not take up modern dancing?"

"I was a very serious person in those days," Mr. Webb remembered, putting on an expression to match, "I didn't smoke, I didn't touch alcohol, I never went out at night except to the theater. My voice, you know." He became, for a twinkling, a solemn young man pampering a precious pair of vocal chords. "I said: 'What's modern dancing?' It was the first time I'd ever heard of it."

Duly directed, he and his partner went to a celebrated roof, and did the one-step and foxtrot between courses. Presently a waiter came to Clifton with a message asking him to stop at a young lady's table. Agreeably agitated, Clifton followed the waiter to where a pretty girl sat with an older man.

"My name is Bonnie Glass. I dance at Arthur Murray's," she said, smiling up at the tall youth. "It's this way; my partner has been fired, but they'd like to keep me if I can get someone to dance with me. I've been watching you, and I wonder if you'd like to try it? It pays rather well."

That sounded promising. Clifton said yes, he could do the tango, and yes, he could do the maxixe, although that was the first time he had ever heard of either one, and arranged to report at Arthur Murray's next day. "What salary would you expect?" asked Bonnie, as an after-thought.

Now while he had played the dancing master in "The Purple Road," Clifton had heard the leading man say he got $150 a week. This seemed the height of affluence to the boy, so he tossed a nonchalant "Hundred and fifty a week!" at Bonnie, expecting her to laugh, too. Instead, she stunned him by agreeing.

They arrived at Arthur Murray's, after having to ask the way to a spot just then a Mecca for the dance-crazed, rehearsed the intricate waltz Bonnie had been doing, and went on that night. The crowd loved them. "This is the rhythm of poetry!" read one of their fan letters.

A little later, when they knew each other better, Bonnie asked her new partner to show her how to do his tango. "How do you do yours?" he countered. "I've no idea!" laughed Bonnie. "And I've no maxixe, either," he grinned, "Have you?" The two went out blithely and learned the numbers.

During this engagement at Murray's, customers beseiged Clifton to teach them to dance. At first he waved them away, but later he decided he might as well have the money. He opened a studio with a victrola for music, his mother operating as secretary-manager under the name of "Miss Parmalee" (her maiden name was Maybelle Parmalee), and gave lessons. The first pupils enrolled paid $5 a lesson, but before the season was many weeks old, others were paying $25 for half an hour, and it was getting complicated to remember who was paying what.

In the afternoons, while Clifton held his classes, Bonnie joined Mae Murray in giving "Brinkley Teas" at Murray's. Later, when Bonnie accepted an engagement in Chicago, Clifton and Mae became dance partners. They broke all records by dancing at the Palace for a straight ten weeks, then toured the country in vaudeville.

Fabulous offers poured in on them. In 1917, Clifton starred in the musical comedy "Love O'Mike" with Peggy Wood, following this with "Listen, Lester" and "As You Were" with Irene Bordoni. In 1921, Charles Cochrane took him to London.

That first night in London remains a brilliant memory. Clifton's opening number was "Whose Baby Are You?" He had arranged two encores with his leading lady, thinking that might be more than enough, but the house kept roaring " 'Core!"

"At first I was terrified," confided Mr. Webb. "I thought they were giving us the bird. They shouted ' 'Core!' but it sounded like 'Caw' to me. The manager said: 'Go out—they like you!' and gave us a shove. They wouldn't let us go. We did our two encores twice, we bowed, we made up silly routines, we did old gags, and they clapped as if we were wonderful. It was amazing—and glorious!"

Two seasons in London were followed by one in Paris. While he was there, young Mr. Webb signed a contract for a musical with John Murray Anderson and returned to New York to do "Jack and Jill." Rave reviews referred to him as a "hoofer," which horrified him.

"I'll not be a dancer all my life," he vowed, seeing ahead a mirage of musicals stretching to the sixties, himself a stiff-legged veteran still hopping up and down. Refusing other offers, he stepped into a comedy role opposite Mary Boland in "Meet The Wife." George S. Kauffman, then a critic, wrote: "Mr. Webb will never have to put on his dancing shoes once again."

But in 1925 Mr. Webb unpacked the shoes to play opposite Marilyn Miller in "Sunny" for 92 weeks, and kept them on with Beatrice Lillie and Gertrude Lawrence for other shows. Then he made a smash hit in the first "Little Show," pairing with Libby Holman and dancing in "Moanin' Low."

Other musicals followed. Then came "As Thousands Cheer," a unique clever affair made up of sketches based on newspaper headlines. Mr. Webb impersonated Rockefeller, Sr., Mahatma Gandhi, Doug Fairbanks, Jr., and Noel Coward, among others.

One of the few times he had failed to say "Yes" had been to the increasingly flattering offers of picture contracts made by Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer, because before he had finished one play, he always had a contract for another. Now MGM reached him before he could close with an eager producer and dangled such tempting bait that Clifton could not refuse it. He came to Hollywood to do the life of Maurice, the famous dancer, at a dazzling salary. It seemed to him, as he sat there signing that contract, that a gremlin perched on his shoulder and whispered: "You'll never do it!" He never did. For 18 months he sat around, he painted, he went to Palm Springs, he visited the studios, he went to Santa Barbara, and he waited. Other studios begged for him, but MGM refused to lend him. The picture about the dancer got deeper and deeper into a fog, and finally disappeared.

Mr. Webb went back to New York and a Theater Guild play, feeling very bitter about it all. Hollywood, so far as he was concerned, was a bad word. He progressed from play to play, as usual, and landed in a wheelchair playing the cantankerous "Sheridan Whiteside" in "The Man Who Came To Dinner" for a year and a half. He followed this characterization with three seasons in a successful tour of "Blithe Spirit," which brought him again to California.

The day of the opening in Los Angeles, the actor stopped in at Danny Kaye's house where he met producer-director Otto Preminger. "Bet you any money," cried Danny, "after you open tonight you'll get so many offers for pictures you'll have to accept one."

Mr. Webb waved him away. "Keep your coin," he replied, in the deep accents of Edwin Booth's heyday. "If they gave me the whole place, I wouldn't take it!"

Danny Kaye was right. Offers poured in and he ignored them until Mr. Preminger, of 20th Century-Fox, asked him to call and gave him the script of "Laura" to read. "Can you do Waldo Lydecker?" he asked.

That old habit of saying "Yes" reasserted itself, and Mr. Webb said it, adding that of course he must finish the run of his play first. But when the play producer read the script, gentleman that he is, hats off to him, he cried: "It's too good for you to miss, Clifton. I'll close the show."

By that time they were in Minneapolis. Mr. Webb rushed back to Greenwich to pack six trunks and caught a train for Hollywood. Spring floods in the mid-west separated him from his six trunks, and he arrived in Hollywood with one suitcase, his mother and a French poodle.

Hollywood wasn't daunted. The director shifted the shooting schedule of the picture so that for two days the world's best-dressed man reclined naked in a bathtub with cameras focussed upon him. The trunks got here just in time.

He settled down in Connie Bennett's 20-room house in Brentwood, complete with tennis courts and swimming pool. "A bit lavish," he used to say, "but I call it home." That first night was broken by three visits from the Beverly Hills police. It seemed that the house was intricately wired against burglars and every time the actor moved he apparently touched off an alarm. Cops on motorcycles kept sirening through the gates like cops in the Keystone comedies.

After all, Hollywood wasn't so bad, Mr. Webb admitted once he became engrossed in "Laura." He had a five-year contract for a picture a year between plays. He even had it in his heart to forgive MGM. They could have put him in "B" pictures, or loaned him for some ghastly flop, instead of paying him a salary to wait.

"Laura" was a great success. Clifton added a new interest to many by writing articles for a magazine. He painted too. Then came the role of "Elliott" in "The Razor's Edge". He couldn't be happier.

"Each character is interesting, each one has layers, so to speak," he commented, eagerly. "You peel off one and there's another below just as absorbing. I shall be sorry to finish the picture—except that I want to do a play in London this year."

He's been asked to do his memoirs. In his years on the stage, he's met or known hundreds of celebrities; his closest friends in New York include Mrs. Harrison Williams, Grace Moore, Lily Pons, the Dwight Deere Wimans, Captain Edward Molyneux, Geraldine Farrar, the William Rhinelander Stewarts, the Herbert Bayard Swopes and Elsa Maxwell; out here he's familiar with most of the movie colony great; what he might have to say could be absorbing reading. But relax—he's not going to write them.

Clifton Webb has never married and doesn't expect to go to the altar now . . . but his eyes laugh when he says this. Why can't some lucky lassie do something about it? Remember, he says "Yes!" so-o-o easily!

Tired Kidneys Often Bring Sleepless Nights

Doctors say your kidneys contain 15 miles of tiny tubes or filters which help to purify the blood and keep you healthy. When they get tired and don't work right in the daytime, many people have to get up nights. Frequent or scanty passages with smarting and burning sometimes shows there is something wrong witn your kidneys or bladder. Don't neglect this condition and lose valuable, restful sleep.

When disorder of kidney function permits poisonous matter to remain in your blood, it may also cause nagging backache, rheumatic pains, leg pains, loss of pep and energy, swelling, puffiness under the eyes, headaches and dizziness.

Don't wait! Ask your druggist for Doan's Pills, a stimulant diuretic, used successfully by millions for over 40 years. Doan's give happy relief and will help the 15 miles of kidney tubes flush out poisonous waste from your blood. Get Doan's Pills.

MY SCREEN SON TOM (DRAKE)

all he's tremendously serious about his work.

He kids all the time, with young and old, men and women. It is his complete companionship that makes me so sold on him. Who wouldn't be flattered with that kind of attention?

We're alike, too, in that we both enjoy sketching. I used to draw, not too badly, and before the war I designed needlepoint in modernistic patterns so that it could be used with truly moderne furniture. I had to stop for the duration because I couldn't get the wool, but now I can begin again. Tom likes to sketch people; the picture he drew on my dressingroom door is sort of flatheaded and Garboish, but it's definitely me in what Tom calls my "I-want-to-go-home" mood.

I hear that Tom used to adore Garbo, though he's said nothing to me about her. That young man certainly speaks less of pictures, picture personalities and Hollywood than most people in this business. Instead, his mind is occupied, so far as I have observed, with what's going on in the world, the current book he's reading, music and fun.

Swimming and horseback riding are two of Tom's great yens. I remember when we were on location in the San Fernando Valley, there were some marvelous horses around and Tom tried them all. Whenever he was wanted for a scene, you could be sure he was out riding a horse. "Drake!" the assistant director would yell, and Tom would come galloping.

I don't think he ever talks about himself, except indirectly. He's not one of those whom the late Irvin Cobb used to call the "I-I-Me-Boys" Almost the only thing I've learned about Tom that I haven't observed for myself or heard through others, was a brief glimpse he gave me into his New York experiences.

We were on location for the Wallace Beery film, and everyone was waiting around for the next scene, and talking—as it happened—of the low points in life. I remember Tom lounging there at my feet on the long grass, saying:

"I know what you mean—the days when you are kinda broke and you can't get a chance at a job anywhere. You go around with a scrubby-looking script under your arm, and you pretend to study it as you sit in the drugstore with a cup of coffee, so people will think you are working. If somebody you know comes up and looks over your shoulder and asks about the script, you shrug your shoulders and murmur: 'Radio!' because you know they can't possibly check up on you there. Radio can mean almost anything.

"If they sorta catch on that it's a gag—they may have pulled that gag themselves—they're likely to tell you about Hollywood, and how you ought to go out there, you really oughta. Only, by Gosh, when you do, you'll have to remember that you always underplay on the screen, see? . . . Then you finally get out to Hollywood, some studio is mad enough to sign you up, and what happens? You play in a picture with Wally Beery!"

Tom wasn't poking fun at a successful actor, whose methods have outlasted dozens of those of men who have differed with him—but that little chuckle is essentially Tom Drake.

The boy is like quicksilver. He must be a trial to the set technicians sometimes, because he can't keep still. This very morning, he spoiled three shots for the still cameraman—not on purpose, but because he's so "full of beans," as our English cousins say, that he forgot to hold the pose. The cameraman could have hit him on the head, but forgave him the next minute—you can't stay mad at Tom!

There's a saying around the set that when you want to find Tom, you look in the commissary. That doesn't mean he's greedy or overfond of food. He goes there for a cup of coffee and to kid with his friends. It's all a part of Tom's little-boy quality, which I find so attractive.

His clothes are never terribly loud, and they are never sloppy. I think they indicate the kind of person he is—a nice, independent, completely mature young man who doesn't have to put on an act. Tom always had enough money so that good clothes are no novelty; and they don't interest him intensely, for long ago he learned what to wear and how to wear it.

Tom doesn't fly off the handle and become temperamental, ever. He gets upset at times, of course, but he tries to hide it. You'd never know unless you were a little like that yourself.

My screen son thinks very clearly. He isn't one to take direction unthinkingly. Today we had a very difficult scene: the one where the boy's father turns down our pleas that he be allowed to take the scholarship he has won—the boy's big chance to lift himself above poverty and despair. In the scene, I break down and Tom takes me in his arms. Tom was directed to leave the room then, but he said: "If she's going to cry that much, I can't leave her. It would be brutal." He was right. We worked with the scene until we saw that on one of the father's speeches I could draw away, naturally, and be out of Tom's arms so he could reasonably leave. That's the way the scene was finally shot. That's what I mean by his taking his work seriously—he can't do a scene unless he feels comfortable about it.

The "Green Years" is Tom's next picture. He got this role himself. I hear that he had already been cast in another picture and had orders to leave town with that company in exactly two days, when word came that they were casting "The Green Years." He told a friend: "I mean to play the boy's part," and he went to the front office and proceeded to get it.

I wasn't there, and he didn't tell me about it, but I can't picture Tom parading in and making a scene, storming around, demanding the role, crying: "It's mine! I won't do the other part! You can have your old contract unless I get what I want!" and so on, as I understand—but again by hearsay—has been done. I believe Tom put his case before the front office in his courteous and charming fashion, asking only for a test for this important picture, so that he could show them what he could do. They couldn't refuse. I can understand that, for I am sure

I couldn't. Once he was tested, the role was Tom's.

I have a theory that variety in roles makes for the best job insurance, for it gives you a reputation for versatility. I think Tom knows he mustn't specialize in any one kind of part, but in any case "The Green Years" is a story that comes once in a lifetime.

Tom and I are alike in trying to get our way by so-called "charm," rather than by storm. My mother used to say: "You're using your 'con' smile again, Selena. But you'll go places with it, I suppose. At any rate, I can't say 'no'." But Tom never consciously "turns on the charm." It's natural to him to be charming, and he is as nice to a messenger as he would be to a producer. He simply doesn't think that he or anyone else is especially important.

He seems very well educated, although I know he finished school at Mercersberg Academy at eighteen and didn't go to college. He knew what he wanted out of life, and he persuaded his guardian to let him go to dramatic school; from there, he went on the stage.

Most young boys seem to want to look older than they are, but Tom isn't like most young boys. I'm certain he will never try to look younger than he really is. At present, he has that nice, puppydog look that slays me. Sometimes it's the look of a puppy who has been in mischief, and you feel you should scold him, but you don't have an idea what he's been up to, and you couldn't possibly scold him, anyway!

But while Tom has that little-boy quality that can be so devastating in men, he also has the capacity to stand on his own feet. I just die when I think of the man who grows up to be a "little boy" at forty! Tom would never be like that. At forty, he may still have the Peter Pan spirit inside, but it will be just right for his age.

Someone told me that I should write about how much Tom needs mothering, because he is such a little-boy person. I said: "Certainly not!" Mother love can be a pretty frightening affair, if it means trying to take possession of another person, making their decisions or clinging in a limpetlike fashion. My idea of mothering means that you go along with a child, teaching it self-reliance and independence, and then letting it go free.

My screen son has a completely rounded viewpoint on life, and it doesn't center on Tom Drake. Talking to him, you'd never guess that he's in pictures, for he leaves them out of his conversation. He is, as I am, interested in people. He expects to like everyone he meets, and I think he usually does. I know instantly when I'm not going to like anyone, and I believe Tom is like me in that, too. But we even like the "dirty dogs" if they are charming, I'm afraid.

Tom has a love of living that's rather rare. So many young people who have had some success are bored, or pretend to be, unless they are doing something exciting all the time. Tom is never bored. He can have a wonderful time, just kidding around, when there's nothing to do.

He married his first sweetheart, Chris, who has a three-year-old daughter, and he has a niece and nephew whom he adores. (As we go to press, the report is that Mrs. Drake is Reno-bound). He's terrific with children, perhaps because he's so completely relaxed with them.

Little Dean Stockwell, who plays Tom as a child in "The Green Years," is a very serious little boy. In one scene, I had to wash a streak of black off Dean's face, and I washed it so often that I was afraid the poor child would lose his skin. Tom came over and suggested that it would be much easier if we took Dean's head off and carried it away to wash it so we needn't disturb Dean every time. There was a good deal of foolishness about how we'd get the head off—was it hooked on, or did it have a lock? Tom went to great trouble to find a key to the lock, all very seriously, to the little boy's tremendous delight. I can imagine that Tom knows all there is to know about handling children.

About finances, I don't know but I presume that Tom is mildly extravagant. I notice that he orders coffee for everyone on the set when he wants some himself. He doesn't spend a lot of money on clothes or luxuries for himself, but he seems to get a great kick out of buying something for someone else. He'll be walking down the boulevard when some item in a window will stop him.

"That would look gorgeous on Chris!" he'll say, or "Doesn't that look like Clair?" He'll go in and buy whatever it is, not asking the price, and his wife or sister will have a surprise. He might forget their birthdays, or anniversaries, but he makes up for it by an abundance of surprises.

Tom is crazy about animals—dogs and horses, in particular. He has nearly always owned a Great Dane, and I know how he loves them, for I love big dogs, too. His first Great Dane was called "Wrinkle," and wherever Tom went, Wrinkle had to go. If Wrinkle wasn't welcome, Tom refused to go. That included New York apartments. I know this feeling for my Dalmatian lived in mine, and I used to take him walking every day. We'd cover Central Park together, and I'm sure so did Tom and Wrinkle. We're slaves to our dogs.

Let's see, have I mentioned any faults? Surely Tom has some!

Oh yes, he's always late! I have a theory that everyone must cure his own faults, if they are to be cured, and I never interfere. Tom isn't late just for an effect; he doesn't come panting to an interview crying that he had so-o much to do he couldn't manage to be on time; he doesn't disturb a whole row of theater-goers by making a hectic entrance after the curtain is up. He's on time then, for it would be putting on an act to be late. But on the set, he's likely to be a few minutes late.

He says he's lazy, and that he'd rather play than work. Actually, Tom is serious about work and won't rest until it's right.

He won't take advice unless he approves of it. He's always made his own decisions. He never considered that they might not work out right, but when he was wrong, he learned from his mistakes. If you insist on giving Tom advice, he will listen to you courteously, thank you, and go out and do exactly what he intended to do all along. He may appear to be a little boy, but he can't be deflected as children so often are. He's stubborn. I'm stubborn, too. Like mother, like son.

I think Tom has tenacity and I know he has great patience. Even when he's completely wrong, you can't make him stop what he's doing until he's proved his error to himself. But the world we are living in calls for that kind of drive. You can't put on a better show than the world has been giving for years; you'll never get a bigger story or have greater adventure or finer heroes than we have known in our day; so the people now must turn to simplicity—and Tom is equipped to step out, modestly, and answer their call.

THE END.

SO PROUDLY WE HAIL
